Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

May 28 and 30.

HEMING v. ARCHER, re THE ACT OF WM. 4, c. 47.

Conveyance after decree for sale to pay debts—Disclaimer—Trustee—First executory devisee.

Where the devisee in trust pour autre vie disclaims, whereby the trust estate devised descends to the testator's heir-at-law, the Court has no power, under the 12th section of 1 Wm. 4, c. 47, to direct the heir-at-law to convey the estate to a purchaser under a decree of sale for payment of debts: neither is an equitable tenant for life a person having such a limited interest within the Act as would authorize the Court to direct him to convey.

The children of J. A. take under an executory devise, but the four children of J. A. he being alive, cannot convey under the Act as first executory devisee, inasmuch, as there may be other children born, and they therefore have not the whole interest in them.

Thomas Archer, by his will, gave and devised "all those three messuages, &c. at Barleston, Leicestershire, unto and to the use of Thomas Moore and his heirs, during the life of the testator's wife, or until she should marry again, and during the life of his son Joseph and after the decease or bankruptcy of his said son, or any attempt by him to dispose of, by way of anticipation, the rents and profits of the said premises, or any part thereof, upon certain trusts for the benefit of the testator's wife; and, after the decease or second marriage of his said wife, upon certain trusts for the benefit" of his said son Joseph Archer; and after the decease, bankruptcy, or insolvency of his said son, or any attempt by him to dispose of, by way of anticipation, the said rents and profits, or any part thereof, whichever should first happen, the said testator gave, devised, and appointed the said messuages, &c. unto and to the use of all and every the child and children of his said son, if more than one, in equal shares and proportions, and the heirs of the body and respective bodies of all and every of such child and children respectively issuing, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants," with remainders over.

There was another estate devised in precisely the same terms in favour of Thomas Archer, another son of the testator, and his children; and another estate was devised, in like manner, for the benefit of a third son, Samuel Archer, and his children, which, after limitations precisely similar to the above, thus proceeded:—"And in case there should be no child or descendant of a child of his said son, Samuel Archer, to inherit under the said last-mentioned devise, the said testator devised the said last-mentioned hereditaments unto and to the use of the said Thomas Moore and his heirs during the lives of his, the said testator's, children, the said Joseph Archer and Thomas Archer, Mary the wife of Thomas Thornelve, and Eliza Archer, and the life of the surviver of them, upon trust, to receive the rents and profits, and divide the same between his said last-named children and the survivors and surviver of them, equally or wholly, as the case might be; and, after the decease of the survivor of them, his said last-named children, the said testator devised the said hereditaments unto and to the use of all and every his grandchild and grandchildren, if more than one, in equal shares and proportions, and his, her, and their respective heirs and assigns, for ever, as tenants in common." After the testator's death, Thomas Moore, the devisee in trust, disclaimed, and the legal estates, during the lives of the testator's sons, thereupon descended to Francis Charles Archer, his eldest son and heir-at-law. A decree having been made in a creditor's suit, by which the real estates of the testator were directed to be sold, all those estates had been sold, and, by leave of the Court, to two of the defendants in the cause. A petition had been presented in the cause, and under Sir Edward Sugden's Act (1 Wm. 4, c. 47), for the purpose of obtaining a conveyance, under that Act, of the estates which had been devised in settlement. The question raised before the Master of the Rolls was, whether there was any person within the terms of the Act whom the Court could direct to convey, and Lord Langdale held, that as to the estates devised to Joseph, Thomas, and Samuel Archer, and their respective children, there was no such person. The petition now came on by way of appeal. Both the testator's sons, Joseph and Thomas, were living, and each of of them had several children. Samuel Archer had survived the testator, and died leaving an infant and only son, who died also soon after Samuel, at the age of a few months. The petition prayed that the testator's heir-at-law and the testator's sons, the equitable tenants for life, and their children, "or such of them as might be necessary and proper parties for that purpose," might be ordered to convey the respective estates to the purchasers. The Master of the Rolls held that this case was not within the 12th section of the Act, which provides "that where any lands, &c. hath been or shall be devised in settlement by any person or persons, whose estate under this Act, or by law, or his or their will or wills, shall be liable to the payment of his or their debts, and by such devise shall be vested in any person or persons for life, or other limited interest, with any remainder, limitation, or gift over, which may not be vested, or may be vested, in some person or persons from whom a conveyance or other assurance of the same cannot be obtained, or by way of executory devise, and a decree shall be made for the sale thereof for the payment of such debts or any of them, it shall be lawful for the Court by whom such decree shall be made to direct any such tenant for life, or other person having a limited interest, or the first executory devisee thereof, to convey, release, assign, surrender, or otherwise assure the fee-simple, or other the whole interest so to be sold, to the purchaser or purchasers, or in such manner as the said Court shall think proper; and every such conveyance, release, surrender, assignment, or other assurance shall be as effectual as if the person who made and executed the same were seized or possessed of the fee-simple or other whole estate to be sold."

By the 11th section of the Act infants were compellable to convey under the Act estates which were vested in them, notwithstanding their infancy, and such conveyances were declared to have the same effect upon their interest as if such infants were at the time of executing the same of the full age of twenty-one years.

Daniel and Malins contended that the heir at-law of the testator, upon whom the legal estate had descended on the disclaimer of Thomas Moore, the devisee in trust, pour autre vie, was the proper person to convey, and that the order prayed was within the spirit and policy of the Act, though not strictly within its words. That if the Court should be of opinion that the heir-at-law could not be directed to convey under the Act, then that the equitable tenant for life was a person having "a limited interest" within the 12th section, and as such might be directed to convey; that there was nothing in the Act to shew that such person must have the legal estate; or otherwise the Court might, by the conjoint operation of the 11th and 12th sections, direct the present infant children of Jos. Archer and Thos. Archer respectively to convey as "first executory devisee." In regard to the devise to Samuel Archer and his children, they contended that the heir-at-law was the proper person to convey, he being bound by the trusts of the will. They cited Hopkins v. Hopkins (Cas. tem. Talbot, 44); Hopkins v. Hopkins (1 Atkyns, 581); Brook v. Smith (2 Russ. & Myl. 73); Gore v. Gore (2 Pr. Wm. 28).

Faber, for two purchasers, supported the petition.

Bloxam, for another, objected that the Court had no power to make the order.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, during the argument, and at the conclusion, said, with reference to the argument that the children already born might convey as first "executory devisees,"—That is rather a nice question. Supposing the four present children of Joseph Archer were to execute a conveyance, and then another child was to come into existence, the conveyance would not have been made by the first executory devisee under the will. The Act means that the first complete executory devisee shall convey where there are successive executory devises. If the whole executory devisee were ordered to convey, the estate would pass under the statute; but can the present four children convey the whole interest of the first executory devisee? All who are in existence can convey; but in order to render the conveyance effectual, all who have the first executory devise, that is, all the children of Joseph, must concur. If more children are born, what becomes of the executory devisee?

Daniel.—The purchaser takes the fee by force of the statute; the persons ordered to convey constitute the mere machinery.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—On other children being born, I think those children must afterwards convey, so that it may be necessary to come for successive orders during the whole of the life of the equitable tenant for life. The conveyance must be made by all who may be entitled to the executory devise, not by those who are now the existing persons at present so entitled. The present children do not answer the description of persons who take the first executory devise. They do not take the whole executory devise; you must wait until the event is decided. Suppose the fee to be in all the children of A, those children who happened to be in existence during A's life could not convey the fee, for there might be more children. I put it as if there were a fee, and all the children had the fee; two who were born could not convey the fee. The statute says the person who has the first executory devise; that means the persons who have all the executory devise, not those who have a part of it. It is the mere substitution of the executory devise for the fee.

As to the testator's heir being a person who might be ordered to convey under the 12th section, his lordship said,—Certain persons having limited interests are directed to convey, and such persons are described in the Act of Parliament. The heir-at-law in Brook v. Smith (supra) was comprised in such description. I cannot depart from the words of the Act. As to the equitable tenant for life, his lordship said,—Persons who have the power of conveying to the purchaser a good limited title to the legal estate under the will by virtue of a devise, may, under the Act, be directed to convey. But the heir-at-law does not take by devise; and the equitable tenant for life has not a complete limited estate. It is a case omitted from the Act, and ought to be remedied by the legislature.

CLIFFORD v. TURRELL.

Specific performance—Parol agreement—Evidence—Deed—Proof of consideration not appearing upon the instrument.

Specific performance of an agreement to grant a personal annuity will be decreed in equity.

A parol agreement, which is not liable to the objection of the Statute of Frauds, or to which that objection has not been taken, if distinctly proved by unimpeached testimony, will be specifically performed, notwithstanding some correspondence had taken place between the parties which it might be difficult to reconcile with the existence of an agreement.

Other consideration than that stated in a deed may be proved, provided such further consideration be consistent with that stated in the deed.

This was an appeal from a decree made by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, for specific performance of an agreement to grant to the plaintiff an annuity of 40*l.* during his life, and to provide him with a house of the value of 10*l.* a year. The circumstances were shortly these:—The plaintiff, Clifford, occupied a farm in Buckinghamshire as tenant to Mr. Du Pre, the defendant, his brother in-law, being surety for the payment of the rent. The plaintiff was also indebted to the defendant in the sum of about 1,000*l.* For that sum the defendant obtained a judgment against the plaintiff on a warrant of attorney, upon which an execution issued, and the goods and farming stock of the plaintiff, as well as the lease of the farm, were levied by the sheriff. The value of the goods and stock amounted to about 1,500*l.* the lease itself being worth nothing. The sheriff assigned to the defendant Turrell all the goods and stock as well as the lease, the landlord having waived the forfeiture. An arrear of more than a year's rent was due to the landlord, which the defendant paid. The plaintiff was pressed to join in this assignment to the defendant, which he did after some hesitation, and, as was proved by three witnesses, in consequence of an express promise made on the defendant's behalf that he would pay to the plaintiff an annuity of 40*l.* and provide him with a dwelling-house of the yearly value of 10*l.* One of the witnesses also said that the defendant further promised to employ the plaintiff's son as his bailiff, but that was not insisted upon by the bill, and was expressly waived at the bar. The defendant had not, by his answer, insisted upon the Statute of Frauds, or that the annuity had not been enrolled. There was no written memorandum of this agreement. The assignment made by the plaintiff of the stock and lease to the defendant recited the debt, levy, &c. and was stated to be in consideration of the premises, and of 10*s*. Several payments had been made on account of the annuity. Some letters written by the plaintiff to his daughter, and by her, at his desire, to the defendant, in which the allowance was impliedly treated as a gift.

Cooper and Tripp, for the plaintiff, contended that the decree was right, and in support of it cited Rex v. Scammonden (3 Term Reports); that since the time of Lord Coke, it had been the rule to receive evidence of a consideration not expressed in the deed, provided such consideration was not inconsistent with that expressed. (Filmer v. Gott, 4 Bro. Par. Cas. 230.) They also cited and mentioned, 1 Phillips on Evidence, 549, 9th ed. where the authorities are collected; Peacock v. Monk (1 Ves. sen. 127); Sadler v. Sadler (before the Vice-Chancellor, 1819, cited 1 Madd. Simpkinson and Chandless, for the defendant, contended that the plaintiff could not give evidence of any other consideration than that stated in the deed; and referred to the letters written by plaintiff and his daughter, which were quite inconsistent with the claim of right asserted by the bill. (Peacock v. Monk, 1 Ves. sen. 127; Kimberley v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 340.)

JUDGMENT.

June 11.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this case the plaintiff was tenant of a farm in Buckinghamshire, at the rent of 240*l*. a year, for which the defendant, who was his brother-in-law, was surety. The defendant had also lent the plaintiff two sums of money, amounting together to upwards of 1,000*l*. for which the plaintiff had given a warrant of attorney, upon which judgment had been entered up; and default having been made in payment, execution had issued, under which the sheriff levied the amount by seizing the plaintiff's furniture, farming stock, and the lease of the farm. The property thus seized was valued, and the valuation amounted to 1,540*l*. The execution was issued for 1,080*l*. After the valuation, the defendant agreed with the sheriff to purchase the furniture, the stock, and the lease at the valuation, namely, 1,540*l*. If that agreement had been carried into effect, the defendant would have had to pay the sheriff the difference between 1,540*l*., the amount of the valuation, and 1,080*l*. The sheriff must have paid the landlord a year's rent, 240*l*., and the poundage and incidental expenses of the levy, which would have left a surplus coming to the plaintiff of about 100*l*. In this state of things the defendant would have been left in this situation; he would have remained liable to the landlord for the arrear of rent which was due beyond one year's rent, and for all future rent so long as the lease continued; and the plaintiff's goods and stock having been seized, he would have had no means of carrying on the farm, so that it was not immaterial or unreasonable to suppose that what had been stated to have taken place between the parties as to the agreement did take place. The plaintiff stated in his bill that the defendant was desirous that the stock and the lease should be assigned by the plaintiff; that the plaintiff was unwilling to make that assignment; that he had been pressed over and over again by the defendant to do so, and that he at last reluctantly agreed to join in the assignment, upon the terms of the defendant agreeing to grant him an annuity of 40*l*. for life, and to find a house of the value of 10*l*. a year. That was the case alleged on the part of the plaintiff. The first question in the case was whether an agreement had been made, and whether the terms of it were satisfactorily made out by evidence. Three witnesses had been examined in the cause upon this point—the two Rolfes (father and son) and Everett—the two first being respectable farmers, and the third a respectable auctioneer. These witnesses had been examined in chief by both parties, and the defendant had cross-examined them; they had, therefore, been examined three times as to the particulars of the agreement. They all represented that the defendant was very desirous to obtain an assignment of the stock and lease, and the plaintiff was very reluctant to make it; the defendant pressed him over and over again, and employed these different individuals as agents of him, the defendant. They made various proposals and at different times to the plaintiff, and having pressed him again and again to make the assignment, he at last consented to do so. There was no room for mistake as to the nature of the transaction, and that the agreement was deliberately entered into by the plaintiff is distinctly proved by three respectable witnesses. The Court can act upon their evidence, which must be admitted. They were authorized to make the proposition to the plaintiff, and it was accepted by him. Thus stands the case upon the testimony of the witnesses.

During the argument I was much struck by the correspondence which had taken place between the parties. It was said that it was impossible to reconcile the contents of that correspondence with the existence of such an agreement as that deposed to by the witnesses. I still feel great difficulty in reconciling them; and it appears that the Vice-Chancellor felt the same difficulty in the case. It is to be observed, however, that the plaintiff was an ignorant and illiterate man, in great distress and poverty; and that the defendant was a substantial farmer, and connected with the plaintiff by marriage. It was possible that, although such an agreement had been made between the parties, the plaintiff may have considered that such a parol agreement could not be enforced in a court of justice, or that by reason of his poverty he had no means of enforcing the agreement. This may explain the circumstance; for it appeared that he made application to the defendant, a man of substance, for money, and those applications were made more to the bounty of the defendant than upon the ground of any claim of right the plaintiff had. However strong the inferences to be drawn from the correspondence were, they could not be put in competition with the direct, consistent evidence of three witnesses. I therefore come to the conclusion upon the evidence, that the agreement has been proved. If so, the remaining points are questions of law. The first is, as to the consideration of the deed. It was said by the defendant's counsel that you cannot go out of the consideration stated on the deed. The deed recited the debt, the levy, and the valuation; and that in consideration of the premises and the payment of 10*s*. the plaintiff assigned, &c. to the defendant; and it was said the plaintiff cannot go out of the deed to prove that there was any other consideration for the assignment than that stated upon the deed. The settled rule of law is, that you may go out of the deed to prove a further consideration consistent with that stated in the deed, but you cannot be allowed to prove a consideration inconsistent with it. Another consideration which stands well with the consideration mentioned in the deed may be proved. The authorities cited to establish a contrary doctrine were all cases of strangers to the deed. There are several old cases which prove that a further consideration consistent with that in the deed may be given in evidence. That was established by the case of Villers v. Beaumont (2 Dyer, 145 a), where the subject was very much discussed, and was decided by three judges against one. That was confirmed by other cases mentioned by Lord Coke. The first was Mildmay's case; but there Lord Coke does not refer to the case in Dyer, but states the proposition in the terms it is there stated. In a subsequent case he refers to the case in Dyer; that is, the Court refers to that case according to the report by Lord Coke. In Vernon's case (4 Coke's Reports), and Bedell's case (7 Co. Rep.), the doctrine is stated in the terms of the report in Dyer, and it has ever since been consistently acted upon by the courts of law and equity; and it has been confirmed by the modern case of Milner v. Salkeld, decided by Chief Justice Willes. I should not have thought it necessary to have gone so minutely into the details of these cases, but for the case before Lord Hardwicke, in which he is said to have expressed a contrary opinion. But it was not necessary to question that opinion, for that case was quite consistent with the present decision: no consideration was stated in the deed, and Lord Hardwicke thought that such consideration might be proved; and he went to say, "for to be sure, where any consideration is mentioned, as of love and affection only, if it is not said, and for other considerations, you cannot enter into proof of any other; the reason is, because it would be contrary to the deed; for when the deed says it is in consideration of a particular thing, that imports the whole consideration, and is negative to any other. But this is a middle case, there being no consideration at all in the deed." I do not know whether the report in Vesey is correct; but if the case is accurately reported, it was an obiter, not necessary for the decision of the case, and it may have been incorrectly reported. At all events, it is at variance with the current of decision; and I think in this case the evidence was properly received, of a consideration not mentioned, in addition to the consideration stated in the deed and consistent with it.

The only remaining question is, whether the Court can decree the specific performance of an agreement for the grant of an annuity not charged upon land, but a mere personal annuity. It was said the party may go to a court of law, and recover damages for the breach of such an agreement, and therefore it was not a case for the interference of a court of equity. The answer to that was this, that there were several cases in which the contrary had been decided, and the principle had been confirmed by the House of Lords. Damages at law would be estimated by a jury according to the average duration of human life; but that might or might not be a sufficient compensation, as the party might live beyond the average period of life. I am therefore of opinion upon all these grounds, that the specific performance of an agreement for a personal annuity can be had in this court, and that this is a case for such a specific performance. The agreement to provide a house of 10*l*. a year falls within the same principle. I think the decision of the Vice-Chancellor was right, both on the facts and in law, and that it ought to be affirmed with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Monday, June 2.

STURGES v. PALEY.

Practice—Right of precedence.

Upon the hearing of a petition to confirm the Master's report, and a counter-petition that the Master might review his report, the right to begin belongs to the counsel for the counter-petition.

This was a case which came before the Court upon a petition that the Master's report, approving a receiver might be confirmed; also a counter-petition praying that the Master might review his report.

C. P. Cooper and Rogers, who appeared for the counter-petition, contended they had a right to begin, as their petition was in the nature of exceptions to the Master's report, and that therefore the practice ought to be by analogy precisely the same as in the case of exceptions.

James Parker and Daniel, who appeared to support the first petition, submitted that, as the whole case was opened by them through means of the petition, they therefore had the right to begin; that the case of the Princess Bariatinsky, as reported in 1 Phil. 442, was one precisely similar, for there a question arose as to the right to begin between two sets of counsel, one appearing upon a petition to confirm the report, and the other to support a counter-petition. The Lord Chancellor in that case, however, did not consider the counter-petition in the light of a particular exception to certain parts of the report, but in substance a general objection to the whole; and his lordship therefore allowed the first petitioners to open.

C. P. Cooper observed that the case just cited was one of lunacy, and the petition was there to confirm the commissioner's report, and it did not follow that the practice in Chancery should be the same.

Koe, Bethell, Fleming, Walford, and Amphlett appeared for the other parties.

His HONOUR the VICE-CHANCELLOR thought there was a difference between the two cases in the question before him, and therefore decided that the counter-petitioners had the right to begin.

SMITH v. GROVES.

Practice—Service of copy of the bill under the 23rd order of August 26, 1841.

The 23rd order of 26th of August, 1841, provides that "where no account, payment, conveyance, or other direct relief is sought against a party to a suit, it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to require such party to appear to and answer the bill; but the plaintiff shall be at liberty to serve such party with a copy of the bill, omitting the interrogatory part thereof: and such bill as against such party shall not pray a subpœna to appear and answer, but shall pray that such party, upon being served with a copy of the bill, may be bound by all the proceedings in the cause," &c. These latter words need not be inserted in the prayer of process.

This question arose out of an objection which had been raised in the office of the Clerk of Records and Writs, upon the above order of August 1841. It appears that in the commencement of the prayer of the bill the words "that the defendant, upon being served, might be bound by all the proceedings in the cause," were inserted, but were omitted at the end with the prayer of process.

The question was now put to the Court by Tennant.—The Lord Chancellor, in Gibson v. Haines (1 Hare, 317), having, upon an appeal from V. C. Wigram, stated that the convenient course would be to require this particular prayer in future bills to be inserted in the prayer of process, although on that occasion he directed the memorandum of service to be entered with the Six Clerks.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—My Lord Chancellor, I see, in the case alluded to, did not say in express terms that it should be so, but that it would be convenient. Now although the course suggested might be very convenient, yet as I do not wish to sanction a new form of the order by determining in what part the prayer is to be inserted, nor to lay an unnecessary burden on the suitor, I must consider the order sufficiently complied with. If his lordship had really declared that the particular prayer should be so inserted for the future, there is an end of the question; but it seems to me to have been nothing more than an extra-judicial opinion of his, and I do not see how I can take an intimation of opinion as an authority for varying the order. I must confess I am unable to see that it is any more inconvenient for the Clerk of the Record and Writs to look at the beginning than at the end of the prayer; on the contrary, I should rather have thought it best to have the most material thing first. Objection overruled.

LLOYD v. LAVER.

Will—Power of appointment, invalidity of.

Power was given to A. to appoint a certain fund among such of her children as might be living at her decease, in such manner as she should by will direct. A. had three daughters, H., F. and M., and by her will gave the whole fund to M. and in default of any appointment by her to her next of kin; M. died without having made any appointment: Held, that, under the circumstances, A.'s appointment was invalid.

This was a question which arose as to the validity of an appointment under the will of a Mrs. Partridge. It appears that a lady by the name of Pace by her will bequeathed a sum of 1,000*l.* Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities to Mrs. Partridge for her life, with a power of appointment to such of her children as might be living at her decease, in such manner and subject to such contingencies as she should by will direct.

Mrs. Partridge, assuming to act in conformity with the will of the testatrix, by her will appointed the 1,000*l.* Consols to her daughter Henrietta for life, with remainder to her second daughter Frances for her life, with remainder to another daughter Mary, and in default of any appointment by her, the said Mary, to her next of kin. The second daughter Frances died in the lifetime of her sister Henrietta, who died intestate, and Mary having also died without executing the power of appointment so given to her by her mother, a doubt arose as to whether the will of Mrs. Partridge was a due exercise of her power of appointment.

Stuart, Anderton, Whitmarsh, Koe, Smyth, Campbell, and Freeling appeared for the several parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR was of opinion, that where a party gave a power of appointment to be exercised in favour of a number of children who should be living at a certain event, there existed no authority which declared that the appointment of the whole fund to one child for life, with remainder to the other children, was good, and therefore decreed in favour of the plaintiff, who claimed in default of the appointment.

BATTERSHELL v. BISHOP OF WINCHESTER.

Renewal of lease for lives—Obligation to renew—Question of law.

The Bishop of Winchester being lord of the manor of A. in 1695 granted, under an Act for that purpose, a lease for three lives at a certain rent. Since then a renewal had taken place at three different times, the last in 1807. In 1830 one life only remained to continue this last lease. Application was then made to the present bishop to renew, and upon a question as to whether the Act was obligatory to renew upon every bishop in perpetuum, Held, that such a question was a purely legal one, and cognizable only in a court of law.

This was a suit which had for its object the fixing an obligation on the Bishop of Winchester to renew a lease for lives of certain portions of land situate at Alverstoke, near Gosport, whereon the Gosport Water-works had been erected.

It appears that, by a private Act of Parliament passed in the year 1695, a provision was made whereby the Bishop of Winchester, who was also lord of the manor of Alverstoke, granted the first lease to a person by the name of Lewis for three lives, at the rent of 20*s.* per annum. There had been three renewals of this lease since it was first granted; namely, one in 1786, another in 1793, and the third in 1807. It was discovered in the year 1830 that two of the lives for which the last-mentioned lease had been granted had dropped, and an application was made to the present bishop to renew. And the question now raised was, whether the obligation created by the Act of Parliament in 1695 was binding upon and transferable to every successor in the see of Winchester.

Bethell and Shebbeare, for the plaintiff.

Stuart and Stinton, for the defendants, were not heard, for

His Honour the VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that the question as to whether there was a legal obligation on the present Bishop of Winchester to grant a renewal of the lease was purely a case for a court of law, and that, if all the parties agreed to be bound by his judgment, he could only pronounce an opinion.

It was then agreed to by both sides that a case should be directed for the opinion of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas.

ROLLS COURT.

BARLOW v. GAINS.

A mortgagee has a right to pursue his remedies at law, though there is also a suit instituted in Chancery, which would give him the same or equal relief.

Kindersley, in this case (reported in 5 Law T. 190), again applied to the Court to restrain the defendant from renewing proceedings at law. The defendant insists he has a right to go on, and we contend the Court has the right to restrain him.

Craig, on the same side.—If we proceed with all convenient speed, he ought not to renew his action; if we do not, he may be permitted to do so. The mortgagee may have foreclosure in this suit, and that will answer his purpose as well as bringing an ejectment or proceeding on the covenants; and he may now hurry on as fast as he likes, for he has a decree.

Moore asked for his costs.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It is inconvenient that so many proceedings should be taken; but the mortgagee may at the same time enforce all his remedies, both at law and in equity, or such of them as he thinks fit. I cannot grant the motion.

June 2 and 5.

MADEN v. VEEVERS.

Though the rule is that a defendant has a right to urge on the plaintiff to prosecute the suit against his co-defendants, yet he will not be permitted to do so in extreme cases, and where the case is one of great complication.

In this case, which was one of great complication, and has been the subject of a long litigation, Mrs. Veevers, one of the defendants, having agreed to compromise the suit upon payment to her of 1,500*l.* her terms were agreed to, and the money paid in April last; but a few days after she died, and the suit abated. It was intended and arranged that proceedings should stop, and deeds for carrying the compromise into effect were prepared, but not executed. Under these circumstances,

Mylne now moved, on the part of one Hoyle, a co-defendant, to dismiss the bill, with costs, for want of prosecution, he having never agreed to the compromise, and his answer having been put in long since.

Kindersley, contrà.—It was a pity that the motion was made, for it was distinctly stated to Mr. Hoyle that as soon as the deeds which were prepared could be executed, the plaintiff would move to dismiss the bill against him with his costs; the delay in doing so was solely owing to the non-completion of the arrangement, which was being proceeded with as fast as possible. The motion ought to have been to revive in a given time, or to dismiss after that time had expired.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I cannot grant the motion. All I can do is, to let it stand over for a month or six weeks or to the last seal before the long vacation. This gentleman has given a great deal of trouble, and though he knows the complication of the case, he still persists in doing so. He must not, however, in this court urge his extreme rights in such a case as this. He is promised to be dismissed with his costs as soon as conveniently may be; but though the rule is that a defendant may use the means provided for urging on the plaintiff to prosecute the suit against his co-defendant, yet he cannot be permitted to do so in an extreme case like this.

Thursday, June 5.

LANGLEY v. FISHER.

Practice—Enlarging publication—Delay—Insufficient affidavits.

Publication having been enlarged till a month after the decision, upon an appeal as to the admissibility of evidence, and during the month the rule being also enlarged for an additional number of days, further enlargement will not be granted on the day before the expiration of the last day fixed, unless upon very special affidavits, accounting satisfactorily for the delay.

The bill in this case was filed so long ago as the year 1836; and the subject-matter of the suit was certain property, to a seventh of which Mrs. Prideaux was entitled to her separate use. She put in a separate answer, and her husband answered and disclaimed. There were charges of fraud, &c. and the plaintiff, in taking evidence, sought to have Mr. Prideaux as a witness. Mr. Prideaux demurred to the admissibility of his evidence, which demurrer was allowed in Nov. 1843 (vide 5 Beav. 443) at the Rolls, and, on appeal, was also allowed on the 10th April last. Publication had been enlarged several times, and lastly till after the expiration of one month from the Chancellor's decision being given. After the 10th of April publication was again enlarged till the 29th of May, and on the 28th application was made to have a day fixed for examination of witnesses; but no day could be given for a month, because of the press of other business. Under these circumstances, application was now made by the plaintiff to enlarge publication till a day could be obtained for such examination, he undertaking to proceed forthwith.

Mahns, for the motion.—The number of enlargements is no objection, for that frequently happens. We did not know what course to take till the 28th of May, because we had hope of a decision in our favour, the Chancellor having taken one year and eight months to come to a decision, shewing, we thought, that the case was doubtful, so that between the 10th and 26th of April we were obliged to consult counsel, &c. and as soon as we could we applied for a day. Being deprived of our material witness, we did not know what to do. We swear that the evidence of the two witnesses we seek to examine is material and necessary in support of our case.—He cited Barnes v. Abram (3 Madd. 103).

Kindersley (with him Turner), contrà.—The application to the examiner was made pro formâ to enable the plaintiff to come into this court to make the present motion. The delay is not accounted for; and moreover there has been great delay throughout the cause.

Cooper, for other parties.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I will give the plaintiff leave to make a better affidavit, if he can, in explanation of the delay, as well pending the appeal as after the decision of the Chancellor; otherwise I shall dismiss the motion. Publication to be enlarged in the meanwhile.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

EATON v. BARKER.

Construction of will—"Surviving."

After a bequest to daughters of the testator, the testator directed that proper articles should be drawn up on their marriage, "to the intent that, should any of them die without issue, then, on decease of their respective husbands and themselves, their fortunes to revert to their surviving brothers, share and share alike." One of the testator's daughters died during the life of her brothers, who all died in the lifetime of her husband.

Held, that the husband, as administrator of the wife, was entitled to the fund absolutely.

Thomas Boydell, by his will, dated the 17th of March, 1795, gave and devised all his messuages, lands, and tenements, and also all his leasehold premises, with their and every of their appurtenances, unto Edward Griffiths and Richard Barker, and to their heirs, executors, and administrators, upon trust, so soon as conveniently might be after his decease, to convey, settle, and assure the same estates unto and to the use of his sons Thomas, Josiah, William, John, and James, in such parts and shares, and under and subject to such charges in favour of his daughters, and for payment of his debts (if any), as his personal estate would not extend to pay, as were set down or mentioned in the memorandum or paper writing thereunto annexed and subscribed by him; and he thereby expressly directed that the annuities and legacies intended for his said daughters should be secured to them respectively upon and for the estates mentioned and intended to be charged therewith. The testator then devised a portion of his estates to his son William, subject to a rent-charge of 100*l.* per annum, payable to his sister, Ann Boydell, till her marriage, and subject to 2,000*l.* after marriage; and in the memorandum referred to by the will was the following clause: "And that my sons may not be laid under any unnecessary restraint, I give them the several estates hereinbefore specifically mentioned to their own proper use and disposal, as circumstances may require, for ever, trusting, from the brotherly affection that has always appeared to subsist between them, that they will not dispose of the same to the prejudice of each other, should any of them die without issue; and as to my daughters, I also trust that they will not dispose of themselves in marriage without consulting my executors and getting their assistance in drawing up proper articles, to the intent that, should any of them die without issue, then on the decease of their respective husbands and themselves, then their fortune to revert to their surviving brothers, share and share alike."

The will, with the memorandum, was proved by E. Griffiths and R. Barker, the executors named in the will. Ann Boydell, on the 16th Sept. 1799, married the plaintiff, Joseph Eaton, and no settlement was ever made of any of her property. The sum of 2,515*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.* representing the sum of 2,000*l.* bequeathed by the will, and received from Wm. Boydell, was in the hands of Harriette Barker, the representative of the surviving executor of the testator's will. Ann Eaton died on the 24th Feb. 1837. Previous to that time, Thos. Boydell and Wm. Boydell had died; the other three brothers were living, but died before the institution of the suit. The plaintiff, as administrator of his wife's estate, filed the present bill against Harriette Barker and the representatives of the three brothers who survived the plaintiff's wife, claiming the absolute interest in the sum of 2,515*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.*

Wigram and Jolliffe, for the plaintiff, were proceeding to argue the case on behalf of the plaintiff, on the ground that no trust was created by the will, and that the words used by the testator were merely precatory; when argue the case by assuming that a trust was created; but that, nevertheless, as in the case of Harrison v. Foreman (5 Ves. 207), the gift to the daughter being a clear vested interest, was not divested; the express contingency upon which it was to be divested, viz. the event of the brothers surviving the daughter and her husband, not having happened.

Russell, Stinton, Swanston, and Burdon, for the representatives of the brothers.

Micklethwaite, for Harriette Barker.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—My present impression is, that the words "surviving brothers" mean brothers then living; if they do, the sentence would run thus—"to the intent that, should any of them die without issue, the on the decease of their respective husbands and themselves, their fortune to revert to their brothers then living." If that be the true interpretation, the gift over is ineffectual, because there is no brother now living, and the husband is alive; so that the gift to the daughters would not be divested. And with this view it will not be necessary to consider the question of trust or no trust. I will consider this case, and mention it again.

His HONOUR, on a subsequent day, stated that his opinion was unaltered.

Decree—Declare the legacy absolute in the administrator of Mrs. Eaton; tax all parties' costs, as between solicitor and client, pay them out of the fund, and pay the residue to the administrator.

Friday, May 30.

SWALLOW v. DAY.

Practice—Mistake in answer.

Supplemental answer allowed to be filed under special circumstances to contradict a statement made by mistake in the original answer.

The order for leave to file a supplemental answer not having been passed and entered, and the time being on the point of expiring, the Court refused to allow the answer to be sworn in court, but directed the registrar at once to pass and enter the order, and that the officer should receive the answer upon production of the minute of the fact made by the registrar.

This was a motion by the defendant that he might be at liberty to file a supplemental answer for the purpose of correcting so much of his answer, sworn and filed, as contained an allegation interlined in the last skin in these words, "and paid part thereof to the bankers," such allegation having been inserted in the answer by mistake, and having been since discovered by the defendant to be erroneous. It appeared that the bill was filed for the purpose of taking accounts of a partnership, and by the answer it was sworn that the debts due to the partnership had, up to a certain time, been received by the defendant, and then were inserted the words upon which the question arose. The origin of the mistake was shewn by the affidavits filed in support of the motion.

Prendergast, in support of the motion.

Rolt, contrà, cited Wells v. Wood (10 Ves. 402); Curling v. Marquis Townshend (19 Ves. 628), and Greenwood v. Atkinson (4 Sim.).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that the defendant had sworn that the fact sworn to in the answer was so sworn under the impression that it was true. He had sworn that the passage was written by him in the draft, and was immediately afterwards interlined in the last skin of the engrossment of the answer; and the answer so altered was sworn; that he verily believed that such interlineation was true, but that on returning to his club and referring to his books, he discovered that he had been led into some mistake or confusion of dates, and that he had made an erroneous statement; that this was made without any design of fraudulently or improperly delaying, prejudicing, or injuring the plaintiff, or in anywise misstating or misrepresenting any matter. In such a state of circumstances, and as there was no affidavit in opposition, it was impossible not to believe the statements in the affidavit; and as the defendant was in time in asking for leave to file a supplemental answer, his Honour thought that he ought to be at liberty to do as asked by the notice of motion. He should be most reluctant to do or say any thing having the appearance even of being in opposition to any thing that had been done or said by such a judge as Lord Eldon. His lordship, in Edwards v. M'Leay (2 Ves. & Beames, 256), had said, "There are many cases in which Lord Thurlow refused leave to amend an answer, and that is obviously right, upon this reason, that the Court, permitting the destruction of the answer upon the record and the substitution of another, has no security as to the propriety with which the final answer was sworn. The course has therefore been to permit an additional answer to be filed, which has been done in many instances, always with great difficulty, where an addition is to be put upon the record prejudicial to the plaintiff, though the Court would be inclined to yield to the application, if the object was to remove out of the plaintiff's way the effect of a denial, or to give him the benefit of an admission, material, perhaps conclusive, to enable him to obtain a decree. Where, therefore, the opposition to such application is not on the ground that it is against the plaintiff's interest that such supplemental answer should be put in; that with reference to his interest in that cause or property any mischief can arise to the plaintiff, the only ground for hesitation is the public interest, upon the circumstance that the defendant might have been guilty of perjury, and a prosecution for that offence may be required for the public interest." To that his Honour said that he wholly acceded, and he did not consider the permission he had given in any way conflicted with the rule so laid down. The defendant must have leave to do as he asked; the answer to be filed within a week, and the defendant to pay the costs of the same, and all costs to be occasioned thereby.

Thursday, June 5.

Prendergast now applied that the defendant might be at liberty to swear his answer personally before the Court, as the time allowed by the Court would expire within half an hour, and the defendant was compelled to leave London that day, and therefore he could not ask for further time. The answer had been prepared and engrossed, but the officer at the Clerk of Records and Writs Office had refused to allow it to be sworn to, because the order permitting the supplemental answer to be put in had not been entered and passed. The delay in entering and passing the order had been occasioned by the minutes of the order having been received only the day before. It was submitted that the Court had full jurisdiction to do all that it could delegate to its officers.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he should have no objection to do this, if it were consistent with the practice of the court. The registrar agreed with him in thinking that no such practice existed; the application had better be made to the Lord Chancellor. He did not, however, see any difficulty on principle, but had rather not do any thing not sanctioned by practice.

Prendergast accordingly made an application to the Lord Chancellor, but his lordship seemed to feel the same difficulty as the Vice Chancellor, and considered that the regular way would be to ask for an extension of time. As no notice, however, had been given of such an application, and as even if notice had been given, the extension would of itself be most inconvenient to the defendant, his lordship directed the registrar at once to pass and enter the order, and the officer to receive the answer upon the production of the minute of that fact made by the registrar. His lordship did not like to make a precedent by allowing the order to be sworn in court, a precedent the whole consequences of which he could not foresee.

Practice—Amendment of bill after replication.

A motion for leave to withdraw a replication and to amend the bill should be made in the first instance to the Master; but, upon the objection to the Court's hearing the motion before any application to the Master, being waived by the defendant, the Court heard the motion.

This was a motion on behalf of the plaintiff for leave to withdraw replication and to amend the bill. It was objected, on behalf of the defendant, that the notion should in the first instance have been made to the Master, according to the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 94, s. 13, and the 13th of the Orders of December 1833.

Lee, for the plaintiff.

Rolt, for the defendant.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The objection, if insisted on, is fatal. Very likely the motion will ultimately come before the Court, and if the objection is not insisted on, it had better be heard at once.

Rolt said, that if the plaintiff would pay the costs of the day, he would not press his objection.

This proposition being assented to by the plaintiff, the motion was heard.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—As the plaintiff desires an opportunity to amend, confining that amendment to the prayer of the bill, I am of opinion that that opportunity ought not to be refused him. One course will be better for the defendant himself than at least one other that might be taken. The defendant the waiving any question of jurisdiction, and the plaintiff submitting to pay the costs of and rendered necessary by the amendment, let him be at liberty within a time to be fixed to amend his bill by extending the prayer, and not further or otherwise, he not requiring any further answer, and let the defendant be at liberty to plead, answer, or demur to the bill as so amended within a time to be named.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

SOTHEBY v. WILLIAMSON.

Costs.

Solicitor has no claim for his costs out of the estate of an infant where his retainer ceases by death of next friend of the infant (who employed him) before suit instituted.

This was a petition heard by order when this cause came on upon further directions. The object of the petition was to have certain costs which himself incurred in respect to part of the property included in this suit, before the bill was filed, paid out of the funds included in the suit. This suit was filed on behalf of infants by their next friend, to have the estate of their father administered under the order of the Court. Previous to the suit being instituted, petitioner had been employed by the grandfather of the infants to recover assets of the infants which had been improperly invested by the executrix of their father; in doing so, certain costs had been incurred, and petitioner had got into his possession securities for money, and other papers relating to the property included in the suit; but before the business was finally settled, the grandfather died intestate and insolvent, and another person filed this bill for the general administration of the property as next friend of the infants, and employed another solicitor to carry on the suit; during the progress of the suit, petitioner, by order of the Court, delivered up possession of all deeds, papers, and securities for money in his hands, without prejudice to any lien which the petitioner might have thereon for his costs, and furnished evidence in the suit, and was examined as a witness; under these circumstances, the petitioner now prayed to have his costs, incurred before suit for the grandfather, and since suit for the next friend of the infants, arising from the aid rendered by him from his knowledge of all the circumstances relating to the matters, included in the suit.

Wood appeared for the petitioner; he cited Ex parte Cant (10 Ves. 554); Cranstown v. Johnston (5 Ves. 227); Thompson v. Shepherd (2 Cox, 161); and Beames on Costs.

Romilly, for the defendant.

WIGRAM, V. C.—I must decide this case against the petitioner. If the executrix had been obliged to pay him, he might have had a lien, as she might charge the general estate. The facts of the case are these: the executrix enters into an agreement with the grandfather, and breaks it; petitioner is engaged by the grandfather, and afterwards a bill is filed; if the estate should prove deficient, could this claim be paid out of the general estate? This charge, arising in consequence of a breach of a private agreement between the grandfather and the executrix, the executrix should have got in the money. The claim for these costs should be against the estate of the grandfather. Admitting it was a breach of trust, I should be diminishing the fund which belongs either to the infants or creditors, which I feel this case does not admit. The petitioner must go against the estate of the grandfather.

BOLTON v. WARD.

Copyholds—Specific performance—Agreement—Partition.

Equity will decree specific performance of an agreement (made previous to the stat. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35) for a partition of copyholds, where there has been a valuable consideration, a part performance, and the partition is sufficiently clear from the agreement and acts of the parties.

Stephen Ward being seised in fee of hereditaments, according to the custom of the manor of Knaresborough, where the rules of descent regarding lands are the same as at common law, had children by two wives, viz. James, William, and Wilks by his first wife, and Stephen, and Ann Bolton, the plaintiff, by his second wife; made his will and gave 10*l.* per annum to his second wife, Ann, a defendant, charged upon his copyhold lands; and then gave all his lands, copyhold and freehold, to his sons, William Ward and Stephen Ward, as joint tenants in fee, charged with the payment of legacies to his other children, and died without revoking his will in November 1831. William and Stephen, the devisees, were admitted, and continued in possession of the copyholds as joint tenants, and in February 1833 William and Stephen agreed to divide the real and personal estate derived from their father, Stephen Ward, and reduced it into writing, wherein were specially set out by name the several closes and hereditaments which each was to hold in severalty, and, by the words of the agreement, "road themselves in," and receive and pay all debts charged upon the lands equally; and a penalty of 100*l.* was laid on either party who attempted to annul the agreement, which was executed by both William and Stephen Ward. The several closes as mentioned in the agreement were allotted to each, and they severally entered and held possession in severalty, and all debts were paid and received according to the terms of the agreement; and the division so made continued during their respective lives, but no surrender and admission was made to give full effect to the agreement. In 1843, Stephen Ward, the younger, died intestate, without having married, leaving plaintiff, his sister, surviving, and heiress at law according to the custom of the manor. After Stephen Ward the younger died, plaintiff entered and held possession of the lands he took under the agreement, without any interference in the beginning from William Ward; but after some time he brought an action of ejectment against plaintiff to recover the lands, whereupon plaintiff filed this bill to have William Ward declared a trustee of the copyholds for the plaintiff, and a decree directing him to surrender them to the use of the plaintiff, and for an injunction to restrain the ejectment.

Kenyon Parker and Shee, for the plaintiff.

Rigott, for the defendant, argued that the Court had not jurisdiction to decree a specific performance of an agreement in a partition of copyholds, as the agreement being made before stat. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, that statute could not be taken advantage of, and before that statute a court of equity could not make a decree for a partition of copyhold lands, and cited Townsend v. Stangroom (6 Ves. 328); Beaumont v. Bramley (1 Turner & Russell, 41); Horncastle v. Charlesworth (11 Sim. 315); Jake v. Morshed (6 Bea. 213).

WIGRAM, V. C.—In this case a bill was filed praying specific performance of an agreement for a partition of copyhold lands devised by a testator named Stephen Ward many years since to his two sons, William and Stephen Ward, as joint tenants in fee; those sons, after his death, were duly admitted, and their names appear to all except a small part of the copyhold lands, which appears to have been omitted by mistake. The agreement mentioned in the pleadings is afterwards entered into and acted upon by allotting the several parts to each, although the description of the lands is not sufficiently accurate to enable the Court to execute a partition. In the absence of other evidence, I must assume there was such a division of the estate that the Court may find sufficient to execute it. One objection was that the Court had no jurisdiction under stat. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, and the cases of Horncastle v. Charlesworth and Joke v. Morshed were cited in support of it. Whether I am to assume that the Court has no jurisdiction for the reason urged, is another question; if this was merely a bill for partition, I should be bound by those authorities. Suppose A and B joint tenants of copyholds, there can be no doubt whatever that they can join in selling to C; then C can compel them, as joint-tenants, to perform that contract, and they may likewise compel the lord to accept C as tenant. If they can sell the whole, surely they can contract to sell a part; and if so, I have no doubt that the Court in this case has jurisdiction to compel a specific performance against those who entered into such a contract, that they may perform the agreement for this division. The agreement was followed by a separate occupation. This is precisely the same as any other agreement which the Court might be called upon to enforce; I can see no difference whatever in this from the ordinary case of a bill for partition, in which the Court would order a specific performance to divide lands, and hold them in severalty. In this case it was not merely as to copyhold, but also to the rest of the property under the will. There is no ground whatever for supposing otherwise but that they should divide the entirety of the lands devised. One point was that, assuming there to be partition, whether there was a good consideration. It is quite clear there was a good consideration ex post facto, and possession taken by each: I must decide that against the defendant. If, as said upon argument, it was not the intention of the parties that the partition should extend beyond their lives, I cannot account for the case when an agreement is actually executed by both parties, and acquiesced in; it is only a man executing a deed, and saying that what appears to be his intention by such deed was not his intention. I cannot give effect to an intention which does not appear upon this agreement, and is, in fact, quite the contrary.

Decree a specific performance, and each party shall execute such surrender as may be requisite, with a reference to the Master, in case parties differ, to settle the terms. With regard to the part not surrendered, as it does not appear whether Stephen or William has it, plaintiff must take such proceedings as she may be advised to procure a surrender. Costs reserved.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

NOTE.—In the case of Jones v. Roberts (5 Law T. 263), the head note, which was written in the absence of the Reporter, states the demurrer to be directly the reverse of what in fact it was. It was decided that custom could not be pleaded in such a case, and the plea to that effect was held to be a bad, and not a good plea, as there stated. This mistake will be obvious on perusal of the judgment, but we deem it right to mention it here, lest it should mislead those who look no further than the head note.

DEFRIES v. LITTLEWOOD.

Proof of goods bargained and sold.

This was an action for non-delivery of goods pursuant to an agreement. The declaration was framed upon an agreement by which goods were bargained and sold, with a distinct averment that the defendant sold to the plaintiff divers goods, and after an allegation as to the mode of payment, proceeded, "In consideration thereof," the defendant promised to deliver, &c.

Pleas—1. Non assumpsit. 2. Traverse of sale of goods or any part. 3. Plaintiff was not ready to deliver. 4. That defendants had not notice to deliver. 5. That plaintiff exonerated defendant from obligation to deliver.

At the trial, a document was put in by the plaintiff, and a verdict was found for the defendant, with leave to the plaintiff to move for nonsuit on objection to this document. It was in the form of a bill of parcels, stating numerous items and prices. To one was added these words "with rims to fit No. 3;" and in several, the words "to pattern" were added. At the bottom was—"The above order to be executed upon the terms specified." It was objected at the trial, that this required a stamp; and further, that, supposing it admissible, it did not prove the declaration, for that it did not constitute a bargain and sale. A rule nisi had been obtained for a nonsuit; against which Heaton shewed cause.—Numerous cases shew that Buxton v. Bedall (3 East, 303), which was relied upon to support this objection, has been overruled. It is not necessary that the goods, the subject of the contract, should be in existence at the time. (Wilkes v. Atkinson, 6 Taunt. 11; Primer v. Arnold, 2 C. M. & R. 613; Watkins v. Vincr, 2 Stark. 368; Venning v. Leckie, 13 East, 7.) The words of the statute are, "agreements for or relating to the sale of goods." At any rate, it must be clearly shewn that a stamp is necessary, and here it is quite consistent that the goods were already made.

Greenwood, contra.—The second point is not answered. It was clearly no bargain and sale. By an order for goods generally, even when the size, description, and character are specified, no property is gained in the goods until they are in some manner appropriated. This is an order which would be satisfied by the delivery of any goods of that description. (Carruthers v. Payne, 5 Bing. 270; Mucklow v. Mangles, 1 Taunt. 318; Atkinson v. Bell, 8 B. & C. 277; Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 313; Clark v. Spence, 4 Ad. & E. 448.) The declaration should not have been framed as upon a bargain and sale. He also contended that a stamp was necessary; but the judgment of the Court was only given upon the other point.

Heaton was allowed to address the Court again, not having been aware that the second point had been made at the trial, and suggested that the world sold might be struck out.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—This objection cannot be got over. The declaration is framed for the nondelivery of goods bargained and sold. It is clear that, to pass possession of goods without delivery, there must be a specification of them, which was not done in this case.

PATTESON, J.—It is not merely in contract of bargain and sale, but there are express averments, that the defendant sold, and in consideration thereof, &c. &c. The agreement put in does not support the declaration; apart from the question of the stamp, the plaintiff must be nonsuited.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF HICKLING.

An order of justices apportioning certain parts of a highway upon particular parishes, pursuant to 34 Geo. 3, c. 64, is conclusive proof that the highway was in the respective parishes as required by the Act.

An application for costs by a prosecutor of an indictment for the non-repair of a highway directed by justices, after he has obtained a rule to stay the judgment, is not a step so as to waive the rule.

This was an indictment against the parish of Hickling, in the county of Nottingham, for the non-repair of a road, being a portion of the ancient foss-way leading from Newark-upon-Trent to Leicester, which intersects the parishes of Hickling and Widmerpool for the distance of 858 yards. The respective boundaries of the two parishes were, it was said, in the middle of the road. In 1816 proceedings had been taken under 34 Geo. 3, c. 64 (now repealed), which gave power to two justices of the county, upon complaint of one of the surveyors of the highways of any parish stating that there is situated in the parish adjoining thereto a highway to be repaired on one side by one parish, and on the other by another, to summon the surveyors of the highways of such other parish, and after examination, and hearing the parties and their witnesses, to determine and allot a portion in length of the highway to each parish to repair in future. The Act directed that the order of the justices, with the plan of the highway, and the allotment thereof, should be filed with the clerk of the peace, and also that such stones and boundary-marks should be put up as the justices might think fit. The 2nd section provided that, from and after the filing, such parishes should be respectively bound as of common right to repair the respective parts allotted to them, and those parts only. The 7th section gave a right of appeal to the sessions. An application was made under this Act, and on the 14th of October, 1816, an order was made adopting the form in the Act, and allotting 470 yards to the parish of Hickling. This order and the plan were duly filed: there was no appeal. The portion allotted to Hickling parish being out of repair, an application was made to the justices under 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50; but as the surveyor denied the liability of the parish of Hickling, this indictment was directed to be preferred.

The first count(a) stated the nature of the road, the order of the justices, that it was duly filed, whereby, and by force of the statute, the said parish of Hickling became and was, thence continually has been, and now is, bound as of common right to maintain an, &c. It then stated the 478 yards (which was the portion allotted) was out of repair. The 2nd and 3rd counts were for the non-repair of the portions of the road, considering them as repairable by the parish of Hickling as at common law. These two counts were inserted upon the words of the statute, that after the allotment the parishes should be respectively bound to repair as of common right. The indictment was removed by certiorari into the Queen's Bench, and tried at Nottingham Summer Assizes, 1844. Admissions were made as to all formal proof of the highway and the order, but it was contended by the parish of Hickling that at the time the order was made the surveyor of that parish did not admit that any part of the road was within their parish, and that therefore the justices were without jurisdiction to make the order, and that it was open to the defendants to prove now that no portion of the road was within the parish. Contradictory evidence was given as to this, and Coltman, J. left it to the jury to determine whether it was proved that, before the order, half of the road was in the parish of Hickling. The jury found for the defendants, with which verdict the learned judge was dissatisfied.

A rule nisi had been obtained to stay the judgment or for a new trial, on account of the verdict being against evidence, and for misdirection, because the learned judge had not directed the jury that the order was conclusive.

Whitehurst, Q.C. and Mellor now shewed cause.—There is a preliminary objection to this rule. Since it was obtained, in Michaelmas Term, the prosecutor has obtained, a judge's order for the taxation of his costs, and a rule is now pending to set aside that order. That was another step, and therefore a waiver of the rule, which is a stay of proceedings. This also is a criminal case, and a verdict having been found for defendants, the Court will not interfere. Then this order in 1816 was made without jurisdiction. The only case within the statute was where the highway was in two parishes. The justices had no power to determine the disputed boundaries. This is shewn by all the forms given in the Act. The first count alleges that it was a highway from time immemorial, and this ought to have been proved. The facts alleged in an order like this may be questioned. The jurisdiction must be proved if traversed, as it is here by not guilty. He cited Herbert v. Cooke (3 Dougl. 101); Carratt v. Morley (1 Q. B. 18); Buller's N.P. 247); Allen v. Dundas (3 T. R. 130); Morrell v. Martin, 3 M. & G. 581); Welch v. Nash (8 E. 394). It is a special authority, to be exercised only in a special mode, and it must be strictly followed, as being the creature of the statute. There is no adjudication that this was in the parish of Hickling.

Willmore and Wildman, in support of the rule.—This is not a criminal proceeding in fact, and there is no objection to a new trial being granted, for this reason. [Lord DENMAN, C.J. intimated that this point need not be argued.] The evidence was clearly the other way, as the learned judge thought also. But the order is conclusive. The title of the Act is, "An Act for the more effectually repairing such parts of the highways as are to be repaired by two parishes." It is said to be no adjudication; but if the order is examined, it is shewn that it was in effect. It was according to the statute, and incorporates the previous statements. If justices could only act when it was admitted that the highway was in the parish, the statute would be virtually repealed. For what purpose can witnesses be called if the justices are not to determine whether it is in the parish or not? Welch v. Nash (8 East 394) is very distinguishable; there what was omitted was a condition precedent. Here it is shewn that the parties were litigant, that they both appeared, and that witnesses were examined. Brittain v. Kinnaird (1 B. & B. 432), Aldridge v. Haines (2 B. & Ad. 395) establish that this order is conclusive. (Cave v. Mountain, 1 M. & Gr. 257; Reg. v. Bolton, 1 Q. B. 66; Basten v. Carew, 3 B. & C. 649, were also cited.) The order is in the form given by the statute, and states that witnesses were called. A certain tribunal has been appointed, and has been applied to, and determined certain facts directly within its scope, and this decision cannot be questioned.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—This was within the jurisdiction of the justices, and they have exercised the jurisdiction they possessed. They had full power to decide it. The verdict therefore is wrong. Judgment must be suspended, to give the prosecutor an opportunity of taking the case again to trial.

PATTESON, J.—This is quite within the authority of Brittain v. Kinnaird. If no form had been given by the statute, then I should have required the adjudication of the fact to have been more specific; but as the form given is pursued, and it involves the existence of the facts, it is sufficient.

WOOD v. DIXIE, Bart.

The mere intention to defeat an execution is not sufficient of itself to render fraudulent and void an assignment in other respects valid.

Trespass, de bonis asportatis.

Pleas.—1. Not guilty. 2. That the dwelling-house in the declaration mentioned was not the dwelling-house of the plaintiff. 3. That the goods and chattels in the declaration mentioned were not the goods and chattels of the plaintiff. 4. Justification by the defendant, as sheriff of Leicestershire, under a fi. fa. issued in an action in which Oliver Beckitt was the plaintiff, and George Phillips the defendant.

Replication to the 4th plea, admitting the judgment in the action, the issuing of the writ, and the delivery of it to the defendant, de injuriâ absque residuo causæ.

At the trial, which took place before Coltman, J. at the last Summer Assizes for the county of Leicester, it appeared that, in November 1843, George Phillips, the party against whom the writ of fi. fa. issued, was a publican, keeping the Angel Inn, at Leicester; that about the 6th of that month, he disposed of the inn, stock in trade, &c. to the plaintiff; and actually received from him 157*l.* in cash, the remainder of the purchase-money being made up by a debt due from Phillips to the plaintiff. In a few hours after that transaction, the sheriff's officers came in and seized under the writ, against Phillips, who was, in the following December, made a bankrupt. The question was, whether that transaction was not void, as a fraudulent preference; and Mr. Justice Coltman, in summing up, told the jury that if there were no bonâ fide payment by the plaintiff to the bankrupt, then there was a clear case of fraud, and that even if there were a bonâ fide payment, but a payment made with intent to defeat the execution, still that would be a fraudulent transaction within the statute, and he therefore left to them the two questions:—1st, whether there was in fact a bonâ fide payment; and 2nd, whether if there was such payment, it was a fraudulent contrivance to defeat the execution; because, in either of these cases, their verdict must be for the defendant. The jury found a verdict for the defendant; and on the part of the plaintiff, Humfrey, Q. C. had since obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.

Whitehurst, Q.C., Miller, and Mellor shewed cause.—The direction of the learned judge was perfectly correct. The statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, s. 6 certainly protects conveyances made upon good consideration and bonâ fide; but it also invalidates every act done to defraud a creditor; and it has been repeatedly held that even where persons have given a full price for goods, and the possession has been actually transferred, still the object having been to defeat creditors, the transaction has been held fraudulent, and therefore void under the statute of Elizabeth. (Cadogan v. Kennett, Cowp. 432; Twyne's case, 3 Rep. 81, 82 a; Doe d. v. Baynton, 6 East, 257; Warmoll v. Young, 5 B. & C. 660; Eastwood v. Browne, R. & M. 322; Holland v. Atkinson, 5 T. R. 235.) The learned judge, therefore, was perfectly right in telling the jury that if the sale was effected for the purpose of defeating the execution, it was fraudulent and void, even though it were an actual sale for a good consideration.

Humfrey, Q. C. and K. Macaulay contrà.—The view taken by the other side is in opposition to the uniform course of modern practice and authority. The question now always is, whether the transaction was an actual sale transferring the property, or a mere pretence for the purpose of defrauding creditors. The operation of the Bankrupt Acts is to protect all real transactions of this sort; and though there may have been some intention to defeat creditors, that is not per se enough to render the whole void. It is true, the transactions must be bonâ fide, but that means bonâ fide as between the parties—the parties to the particular transaction only—and not as between one of those parties and his creditors. (Martin v. Lamb, 5 Q. B. 119.)

By the COURT.—The direction of the learned judge was certainly incorrect in point of law; the mere intention to defeat an execution is not alone sufficient to make an assignment, otherwise good, fraudulent and void; that position is sanctioned by an almost unvarying practice in these cases for many years, and although the jury upon a second trial may come to the same conclusion, we cannot enter into that. The ruling was certainly wrong in the respect now pointed out, and there must therefore be a new trial.

DOE dem. CLARKE v. SMARRIDGE.

Cockburn and Barstow shewed cause against a rule obtained by Crowder to enter a nonsuit in this case. The question was, whether, where there had been a lease for three years, a holding over by the tenant, and payment by him of a year's rent, the law presumed a tenancy for that single year, or an ordinary tenancy from year to year, necessarily involving a tenancy for two years. The point was raised upon the sufficiency of the notice to quit under which the tenant was to leave at the expiration of the first year after the holding over.

Crowder and Smith supported the rule.

Surprise.

Crowder and Smith shewed cause against a rule obtained by Cockburn for a new trial in this case on the ground of surprise. It was an action of assumpsit for money had and received, against the defendant as executrix, and, amongst other pleas, the defendant had pleaded a delivery to the plaintiff of certain deeds (for the value of which the action had been brought) in satisfaction and discharge of the promise. The alleged ground of surprise was that the counsel for the defendant, during the course of the summing up, had referred to an item in an account drawn up by the plaintiff, by which he had admitted the receipt of these deeds, and, in the balance struck between the parties, had reckoned their value in money. Affidavits had been produced in support of the rule to shew that the deeds had casually come into the hands of the plaintiff's attorney, who had sought to dispossess himself of them, and that they had not been received as an equivalent for the money due; but they submitted that the parties who had made these depositions might have been called on the trial, and that in reality the attention of the plaintiff must have been directed to the item in the account long before it was pointed out by the defendant's counsel.

Cockburn and Greenwood supported the rule. The parties making the affidavits could not have been called upon the trial, for the point had not been taken until the summing up. The depositions were sufficient to shew that there had been a miscarriage of justice, and a new trial should be granted.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—The Court are unanimously of opinion that the rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

SHANK v. KEITH.

New trial.

Trespass quare clausum fregit.

The main question raised at the trial was, whether the particular spot of ground upon which the trespass was alleged to have been committed was the property of the plaintiff or the defendant. They both attempted to establish their claim by deeds which were put in, and by acts of ownership for twenty years. In summing up, Mr. Justice Patteson told the jury that "the descriptions of the land contained in the different deeds were not specific, and that they must be explained by the acts of ownership." The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff; and Crowder subsequently obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground that the learned judge had not sufficiently pointed out to the jury the effect of the acts of ownership performed by the defendant, and also that the verdict was against evidence. Against that rule, Cockburn and Bull now shewed cause.—The evidence was very conflicting, and the jury had formed their opinion upon it. It was impossible to say that there was any misdirection. The learned judge had only stated what was obviously true, and what was as fair to the defendant's case as to that of the plaintiff. The question was purely one of conflicting evidence, and with the province of jury the Court would not be disposed to interfere.

Crowder and Smith supported the rule.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is impossible to say that the evidence is not very conflicting, but we think on the whole that the case had better go down to a new trial.

Rule absolute accordingly.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Wednesday June 25.

(Sittings in Banco after Term)

RUSSELL v. POWELL.

A paper given to a party under the direction of the Court of Chancery, authorizing the payment of a sum of money to him, and which required the signature of two persons, does not require a stamp. Quære, whether it would have been an order for the payment of money within the provisions of the Stamp Act?

This was an action on a special agreement, verdict for the plaintiff. Rule nisi for a new trial was obtained, on the ground that a certain paper which was given in evidence at the trial required a stamp.

It appeared that the Court of Chancery had made an order in a cause depending there, that certain moneys should be paid to the defendant, on a paper signed by one Minn, and the defendant having given it to the parties by whom the money was to be paid. The only issue in the cause was, whether the plaintiff had procured this paper (called an "order" in the plea), signed by Minn, and handed it over to the defendant. At the trial the plaintiff gave in evidence a paper signed Minn, when it was objected for the defendant that it could not be read, as it was an order for the payment of money and required a stamp. The learned judge admitted it in evidence, and the plaintiff had a verdict. A rule nisi for a new trial having been obtained,

Jervis, Q. C. and Bovill now shewed cause, and contended that they had complied with the terms of the issue in procuring the paper in question, which was merely a direction to the parties required by the Court of Chancery, and was not an order for the payment of money; the order under which the money was paid, in fact being the order of the Court of Chancery. Then, if it could be contended that the document in question could not be a negotiable instrument requiring a stamp, yet this instrument was imperfect, as only signed by one party. [PARKE, B.—Suppose this document to be forged, would an indictment lie?] I should say not, as it is an incomplete instrument, and when complete, is not an order for the payment of money. It is merely a carrying out of the directions of the Court of Chancery; indeed the document is entitled in the cause, and its being called an "order" in the pleadings will not render it so. Then it had been objected that a proper document had not been obtained by the plaintiff. Now, it was clear that the plaintiff had obtained a proper document and given it to the defendant, as it was shewn at the trial that the defendant had received the money, and the issue was, whether the plaintiff had delivered such a document as, when signed by the other party, who was the defendant, would enable him to obtain the money. Then an objection had been raised, that the plaintiff ought to have tendered this instrument stamped. That objection had not been taken at the trial; if it had, as the cause was a long one, the plaintiff could have got it stamped, being an incomplete instrument.

Baddeley (Knowles, Q. C. with him), contrà, contended that if the document in question was not an order, it was not within the terms of the issue; if it was, it required a stamp. Then as to the objection that the instrument was incomplete, it was contended that it was complete quoad one of the parties, and therefore required the stamp. Then it is contended that this is an order for the payment of money, and a negotiable instrument within the provisions of the Stamp Act, and that the direction that the money was to be paid out of a particular fund made no difference, as the fund was certain, and did not prevent it from being a bill or note. Then, it was submitted, that if it was necessary for the document to be stamped at the time it was to be given by the plaintiff to the defendant, the Stamp-office would not have stamped it.

ALDERSON, B.—Why not? The Stamp-office can only refuse to stamp a bill or note when the bill or note is engrossed on the paper. Now it is not a bill or note until it is signed, and, as this was a joint instrument, beginning "We," it was incomplete until signed by both parties.

By the COURT (a) (ROLFE dissentiente).—This rule must be discharged. The document in question seems to us not to be a bill or note; but we do not say that it might not have been so if it had been signed by both parties, or had been indorsed over to some party with the knowledge of Minn for value, and then it would have required a stamp; but here it seems to us that, upon these pleadings, the plaintiff has complied with the terms of the issue in tendering this incomplete paper, and that it is not such a paper as requires a stamp, being incomplete. Rule discharged.

MOON v. ROBINSON.

The four days within which a new trial is to be moved for, are to be calculated from the day of the trial, and not from the day on which the distringas is returnable.

Humphrey, Q.C. appeared to shew cause in this case against the rule for a new trial, and took an objection to the rule as being moved for too late.

It appeared that the cause was tried on Friday, the 18th of April, and that the rule nisi was not moved for until Saturday, the 26th of that month. It further appeared that the distringas was returnable on the 23rd.

Jervis, Q. C. appeared to support his rule, and contended that a party moving for a new trial had until four days after the return of the distringas in which to move for a new trial, and therefore he was in time.

Humphrey, Q. C. contrà.

By the COURT.—The rule is quite clear; a motion for a new trial must be made within four days of the trial, and not of the return of distringas.

Rule discharged.

BRADBURN v. FRANCIS.

Demurrer.

Unthank was heard for the plaintiff, but it appearing that the contents of a deed of which oyer had been [illegible]

[illegible] Pinnock v. Harrison. [illegible]

[illegible] a rate imposed upon a district by commissioners [illegible] Act of Parliament is not a parochial or a parliamentary tax.

This was an action of trespass, in which the plaintiff had a verdict, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a special case. The defendant had seized the plaintiff's goods as a distress for rent, and the validity of the distress depended upon the question, whether a sewers' rate for the district of Holborn and Finsbury was or was not included within the terms of an agreement, whereby it was provided, "that all taxes, parochial or parliamentary, should be paid by the tenant."

Peacock, for the plaintiff, submitted that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment. The rate in question was neither a parochial rate nor a parliamentary rate. It was not a parochial rate, for it was imposed upon a district, and not upon a parish, or for parochial purposes. It was not a parliamentary tax, because imposed by certain commissioners, and not by the direct and immediate operation of an Act of Parliament. The mere fact of its being imposed under the authority of an Act of Parliament was not sufficient to make a parliamentary tax. The assessment itself must be directly imposed by the statute, as was the case with the income tax.

Cases cited: Brewster v. Kitchell (2 Salk. 615); Garth v. Andrewes (3 M. & W. 312); Baker v. Greenhill (3 Q. B. 148).

Barstow, contrà, submitted that this was a parochial tax, for it was imposed under the direct authority of an Act of Parliament by parishioners appointed under the Act. He cited Amfield v. White (R. & M. 246; 7 B. & C.); Governors of Christ's Hospital v. Hamell (3 Scott N. R. 135).

By the COURT.—Mr. Barstow does not pretend that this is a parochial tax; and it is equally clear that it is not a parliamentary tax, for it is not directly imposed by any statute. If we were to hold that this is a parliamentary tax, because imposed immediately by authority of an Act of Parliament, we must hold that the poor-rate is a parliamentary tax. The difficulty would have been obviated if the parties had been content to provide for the payment of all taxes generally, without specifying what, or if they had added the words "or otherwise" after the words "parochial and parliamentary."

To a declaration for breaking and entering, vi et armis, into plaintiff's dwelling-house, and evicting him, liberum tenementum is a good plea.

Declaration for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house (specifying the house), with force and arms, and with force and arms turning out and evicting the plaintiff.

Plea—"Liberum tenementum." Demurrer.

Lush, in support of the demurrer.—The plea is bad. Liberum tenementum was always considered an anomalous plea, and was only allowed as a means of compelling the plaintiff to describe his close by abuttals, &c. It is no answer where the close is so described, and there is no authority expressly deciding that it is so, although, no doubt, it has been usual to plead it ever since the new rules, which render it necessary to describe the close in the first instance. (Lambert v. Smithers, Willes, 218; Cook v. Jackson, 9 D. & R.) At any rate, if it be an answer for breaking and entering a close, it is none for breaking and entering a dwelling-house vi et armis, and evicting a party from his possession. (R. v. Bathurst, 3 Burr.; R. v. Storr, ibid. 1699; Seaward and Wife v. ——, 1 Salk. 406; R. v. Wilson.)

By the COURT.—It is no doubt an anomalous plea, but its validity is too well established to question it now.

TURNER and OTHERS v. LAMB.

Demurrer—Action of covenant.

The declaration stated—For that whereas heretofore, to wit, on the 29th day of August, A.D. 1840, by a certain indenture then made, &c. the plaintiffs did demise, &c. to the defendant, &c. all, &c., to have and to hold the said several demised premises unto the said defendant, from the 24th day of June then last past, for the full end and term of twenty-one years thence next ensuing, and fully, &c. at, &c. [covenants to repair, &c.]; by virtue of which said demise the said defendant afterwards, to wit on the day and year first aforesaid, then entered into, &c. and became and was thereof possessed, and continued so thereof possessed for the said term [averments of performance by plaintiff, non-performance by defendant]. But on the contrary thereof, the said defendant afterwards, and after the making of the same indenture, and during the continuance of the said demise, and while he was so possessed of the said demised premises, with the appurtenances as aforesaid, to wit, on the day and year first aforesaid, and from thence up to and until the commencement of this suit, suffered, &c. [breaches], to the damage, &c.

Plea.—And as to so much of the said supposed breaches of covenant in the said declaration mentioned, as accrued and were committed after the issuing of the fiat in bankruptcy against the defendant hereinafter next mentioned, the defendant says that before and at the time of the day and year hereinafter next mentioned, and before the commencement of this suit, and during the said term by the said indenture created as aforesaid, to wit on the 10th day of May, A.D. 1844, and from thence continually until and after the time of issuing the fiat in bankruptcy hereinafter mentioned, defendant was a dealer, &c. [fiat issued—assignees appointed]. And the defendant further saith, that afterwards, &c. to wit, on the 9th day of July, A.D. 1844, the said W. B. and G. G. so then being such assignees as aforesaid, did decline the said indenture of lease, according to the form, &c. of which the plaintiffs and the defendant afterwards, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the 9th day of July, A.D. 1844, had notice [assignees before suit, and within fourteen days, &c. delivered lease], and this the defendant is ready, &c.

Demurrer.—That it is not averred that the said term continued till the issuing of the fiat, and that it is consistent with the said plea that the said term had ceased before the fiat issued: that it is consistent with the said plea that the said lease was granted to the defendant after his bankruptcy and adjudication, and therefore not such a lease as can be delivered up to the lessor, as in the said plea mentioned.

Joinder in demurrer.

Ogle, in support of the demurrer, referred to 49 Geo. 3, c. 121; 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 75, and cited Turk v. Pike (6 Bing. 321); Parkinson v. Whitehead (2 M. & G. 329).

Pearson, contrà, contended that the date in the habendum fixed the time of the commencement of the term. [PLATT, B.—It would not be at variance with your declaration if the lease was made fifty years ago.]

PARKE, B.—The 24th of June then last past means the 24th of June before the execution of the indenture. There is nothing to shew that the lease was subsisting at the time of the bankruptcy; it is consistent with every allegation that the lease may not have existed until after the fiat, in which case the bankrupt would be liable.

THORPE v. PLOWDEN.

When a composition for tithes made and entered into more than sixty years before the passing of the statute 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 100, has not been validly and altogether set aside by proceedings adopted within the year from the passing of the Act for such purpose, the composition is thereby confirmed and rendered binding on all parties.

Proceedings adopted within the year, not having for their object the entire setting aside of the agreement, are not within the operation of the 3rd section, and will not give either party the right to treat such agreement as at an end.

A composition for tithes is good, notwithstanding it includes some other agreement which may or may not be legal.

This was a special case arising out of a feigned issue to try a right to certain tithes under the following circumstances:—The lands upon which the tithes were claimed were, in 1711, the property of Wm. Plowden. At this time an agreement was entered into between Wm. Plowden and one John Wilson, the then rector, that W. Plowden should convey land to be enjoyed as glebe land, and should convey 40*l.* per annum for ever to the rector; and that all the land taken before as glebe should be possessed and enjoyed by W. Plowden, his heirs, &c. as their own proper lands for ever. A certificate of this agreement was forwarded to the bishop, who consented thereto. The exchange was subsequently, in 1715, confirmed by a decree, and made perpetual. This was continued up to the year 1832, when the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 100 ("An Act for shortening the Time required in Claims of Modus decimandi, or Exemption from or Discharge of Tithes") was passed. The rector then refused to receive the annuity, but still retained the lands which he held under the exchange (and which were much more valuable than the original glebe lands), and took proceedings in equity for the purpose of recovering the tithes, in which he was unsuccessful, upon the ground that he could not come into a court of equity and ask for the payment of tithes while he retained part of the consideration for their discharge, contrary to the principle "that he who seeks equity must do equity." In these proceedings, also, some persons were omitted who should have been made parties to the suit. Since the decision of Thorpe v. Mattingley (1839), the defendant had set out his tithes, but now refused longer to do so; whereupon an action of debt was brought by the rector for the treble value of the tithes not set out. The question then arose as to whether the rector had properly [illegible] ded under the statute so as to entitle him to treat the agreement as at an end; upon which it came before the Court of Exchequer as a special case.

Crompton, for plaintiff.—The primâ facie right of the plaintiff is admitted. After stating the circumstances of the case, he proceeded to contend that this agreement was not a composition for tithes within the 2 Wm. 4, c. 100; but if so, the proceedings adopted by the rector had taken the case out of the statute. This was an agreement for an exchange of lands, not a mere composition of money, nor land given in lieu of tithes; and that part of the agreement having reference to the glebe lands was clearly illegal, for they could not be affected by the agreement, and could not legally pass; and therefore, that part of the agreement being illegal, the whole was so; the agreement was entire, and could not be separated one part from the other for the purpose of declaring such part to be legal. When the Act came into operation, the plaintiff had a right to take the glebe land as belonging to the church; it was his, and the remainder of the land passed to the representatives of the other party, if they could have been found. This question turns entirely upon the statute. In all the previous arguments upon it, it was assumed that this was a tithe composition, and if so, the 2nd section of the statute would have applied to confirm it; but as it was not a composition, that section did not apply. To have made this agreement good as a composition for tithes, it should have expressed that something was given exclusively for tithes, something which might legally be given; here it is impossible to say what was given for the tithes. The difficulty in this case arises from the statute not protecting any transactions as to the glebe lands. The plaintiff might have brought an ejectment to recover them at the time this question first arose, for no time runs as against the church, and there is not a word in the statute having reference to church lands; nor does it render legal every illegal composition; the object is not to give any new discharge from tithes, or any new right, but it is intended to operate on any previous arrangement, and to point out the time within which evidence may be given. (Clay v. Fellowes, 4 Q.B. 313.) The word "since" in the 2nd section means since confirmation by the Court of Chancery, and not since the time of the passing of the Act; this is the only construction by which to avoid an absurdity, otherwise it would be necessary through all future ages to look back to the year 1833. Taking this to be the construction, the 3rd section taken in connection with the 2nd section puts an end to every difficulty. The statute is not to have effect unless the usage existed at the time of passing the Act, and proceedings be taken by the party within the year; if the party does within that time assert his right, whether by action or suit, the whole thing will be open. The Court has already held, in Thorpe v. Mattingley, that a suit going on on the equity side of the Exchequer was sufficient to entitle the rector to his tithes. The plaintiff was clearly within the very words of the statute, as then expounded by this Court. In this case, as in the 3rd section, is it not prejudicial to this plaintiff? He comes directly within the description. The plaintiff is not to be confined to any particular suit. If the party brought his action within the time, successfully or not, he would not be barred: there is nothing in the statute to say that it must be brought to a successful termination; if it was so, this conclusion must be come to, that it must depend upon the ultimate success of the question without reference to the merits, perhaps upon some trifling failure on the record. The statute is intended to apply when there has been a clear user not interrupted before the statute, and not interrupted within the year. The statute must not be construed literally, taking the very words in opposition to the evident meaning, but the intention must be adopted and acted on. The plaintiff had already recovered on the judgment of this Court, and received his money year after year. The first suit had been commenced within the year, and the statute must be held to apply in this case as in that of Thorpe v. Mattingley, unless you introduce the word "successfully," for otherwise they are precisely similar. The construction adopted in that case was a perfectly sound one.

Bethell, Q. C.—The original error in all these proceedings was the institution of a suit for the tithes in kind. The statute was not intended to apply to compositions real made before 13 Eliz. because those were clearly good, but to subsequent compositions. In this case Mr. Plowden was entitled to avail himself of the statute after the expiration of the first year from the passing of the Act. The decree made in 1715 was in the nature of that referred to in the 44th section of the Tithe Composition Act, and was a final decree, declaring this agreement good and binding. The nature of this agreement was to benefit the Church, and to put an end to the disputive claim over the land of Mr. Plowden. The land was given in lieu of tithes, and was a composition real; and it is not the less a composition for tithes because it embraces other matters. This composition would have been unquestionably good before the statute of Eliz. and the Court will now so [illegible] it. But the 2 Wm. 4, c. 100, applies to [illegible] compositions, that intention of the statute being to render valid those agreements which, but for the statute, would have continued invalid, the third section protecting the rights of any parties who might, within the year, proceed to assert them by legal proceedings, for the purpose of setting aside any such illegal agreement. The case of Thorpe v. Mattingley (2 You. & Col. 421), if upheld by the House of Lords, would not have applied to this case, for here the party mistook his remedy. In the first instance, Mr. Thorpe should have proceeded to set aside the agreement altogether, both as to the exchange of lands and the payment of money. Not having done so within the limited time, but having adopted other proceedings to which the Act does not apply, the agreement becomes valid under the statute and binding on all parties.

Cases cited: Cooper v. B[illegible]an (11 Cl. & Fin. 578); Atterbury v. Turner (1 Eng. & You. 543); Plowden v. Thorpe (7 Cl. & Fin. 158); Croughton v. Blake (12 M. & W. 205).

Crompton replied.

PARKE, B.—No difficulty arises under the second section of the statute. The meaning is plain, that where an equitable arrangement has been, before the passing of the statute, entered into between the parties, and continued until the time of the Act, and no proceedings were taken by either party within twelve months from the passing of the Act to set such arrangement aside, it should be binding on all parties: the word "since" must be read as meaning since the passing of the Act. A suit might have been instituted in the Court of Chancery to set aside the previous agreement by making the proper parties the parties to the suit, and then, the statute says, the suit shall be effective. This being to set aside a practice which has prevailed for a century before, care should have been taken to have framed the proceedings against the proper parties, and in the proper way. The case of Thorpe v. Mattingley cannot be supported. A composition for tithes is not to be confined to the narrow construction sought to be put upon it. I think this is not the less a composition for tithes because it may be something more. I am therefore of opinion judgment must be for the defendant.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion. The decision of Thorpe v. Mattingley is not material to the present case. This agreement may not be valid as to the exchange for glebe lands; but it is still good and valuable as a composition for tithes, though it contains other matters. The statute says, that all compositions for tithes then existing and not set aside should be confirmed and made valid. This is a composition not set aside, and therefore made valid by the 2nd section. Then is there any other clause to set aside this injustice, as it might have been, coming suddenly upon the party? The 3rd section contains a reasonable provision for that purpose; it gives a remedy within twelve months; therefore within that time something should have been done for the purpose of setting it aside. This might have been effected by bringing the proper parties before the Court of Chancery, and if so set aside, it would have been final. This is the literal construction of the statute, and we can give no other, consistent with justice to all parties.

PLATT, B.—I have no doubt upon the construction of the statute. The 1st section provides certain means for supporting a modus decimandi, or exemption from tithes. Upon this some case might occur requiring protection, such as when payments had been made and sanctioned by a court of justice; but it would not do to let all loose that were not strictly valid in law, and therefore the 3rd section was passed providing that any party desirous of getting rid of such an agreement, was not to be debarred from so doing, and it gives him a certain time during which he might elect to proceed or not. There is no doubt proceedings might have been adopted for the purpose of setting this aside or for reviewing the decree. Such proceedings not having been adopted, it seems to me the parties must be bound by the agreement. As to whether this is a composition or not, the question is, are the tithes compounded for? if so, it was a composition for tithes; because it was something more, it was not something less. I am therefore of opinion judgment should be for the defendant.

ROLFE, B. was at chambers.

Re JOHN CLARKE, RICHARD MITCHELL, JOSEPH PHILLIPS, and THOS. SMITH, Bankrupts.

Form of promissory note, signed by one partner on behalf of the firm.

A promissory note in the words following—"I promise to pay, &c. for J. C., R. M., J. P. and T. S." signed by R. M. the parties being partners: Held, to be binding upon the firm.

This was a case out of Chancery, arising upon the construction of several notes given in the following form:—

"I promise to pay, &c. for John Clarke, Richd. Mitchell, Joseph Phillips, and Thos. Smith.

"RICHD. MITCHELL."

The firm were bankers; Richd. Mitchell also carried on a distinct business (not as a banker) on his private account. The banking firm having become bankrupts, a question arose whether Richd. Mitchell was separately liable on these notes. The object was to try the validity of Hall v. Smith (1 B. & C. 407, and 2 Dow. & Ry. 584), a case precisely similar to the present.

W. T. S. Daniel, for the assignees, contended, that an action would lie against Richd. Mitchell alone upon the note; that Hall v. Smith was an authority directly in point, and had never been doubted to be good law, except by Mr. Justice Story, in his book on Partnership, p. 222. The note commencing with the word I, that word applied to the party who subscribed it. A reasonable construction to be put upon the document, not regarding it merely as a banker's note, was, that this was a contract on the part of Richd. Mitchell to pay money for the members of the banking firm; it was in the nature of a guarantee. [PARKE, B.—Is not this the case of a person subscribing his name merely as the agent of others, although in reality one of the firm? The note must either bind the firm, or it must bind Richard Mitchell; there is but one promise on the face of the note, and it cannot bind both.] He did not contend that both were liable, he only contended that Richd. Mitchell was the party liable; and if two constructions could be put upon the document, the Court would give it that construction which was most against the maker. (Marsh v. Ward, Peake, N. P. C. 130; Clark v. Blackstock, Holt, N. P. Rep. 474; Lord Galway v. Matthew, 1 Camp. 403; Leadbitter v. Farrow, 5 M. & S. 349; Shipton v. Thornton, 9 A. & E. 314; Doty v. Bates, 11 Johnson, 543, American Rep.)

M. D. Hill, contrà, not heard.

PARKE, B.—The Court will certify that this is a promise binding on the firm, the signature by Richard Mitchell being subscribed as agent for the firm, without any intention to bind himself individually; it is the usual form in which notes of this description are drawn, and therefore that no action could be supported against Richard Mitchell.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Wednesday, July 2.

Ex parte UNDERWOOD, re HEMSWORTH.

Solicitor's lien—Assignees.

The solicitor of a bankrupt had in his possession, at the time of the bankruptcy, a title-deed relating to part of the bankrupt's estate, upon which he claimed a lien for costs: the assignees were held not to have any higher rights with regard to the deed than the bankrupt himself had.

This was a petition by the assignees of the bankrupt, praying that Messrs. Plucknett and Roberts might be ordered to deposit with the official assignee a bill of sale belonging to the [illegible]'s estate, or that the assignees might have [illegible] inspect the document, &c.

It appeared that at the time of the bankruptcy, Messrs. Plucknett and Roberts were the solicitors of the bankrupt, and had in their possession a bill of sale of a vessel which formed part of the bankrupt's estate. Upon this document they claimed a lien on account of costs due to them, and the assignees having offered the vessel for sale, Messrs. Plucknett and Roberts refused to allow an inspection of the deed, or to give a copy of it, without the previous discharge of their lien.

Russell and T. Parker, jun. for the petition, cited Rosser v. Knott (1 Ves. & Bea. 349), and contended that the assignees were in a different position from the bankrupt himself.

Swanston and Giffard, for Messrs. Plucknett and Roberts, who submitted to the jurisdiction, were not heard.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—In cases of this description, perhaps the solicitor may have so conducted himself as to defeat or prejudice the lien given to him by the general law of the country. I presume there has not been any such misconduct in this case. The question is, whether bankruptcy makes any difference—whether the rights of the assignees stand higher than those of the bankrupt. How this cause would have stood if the document in question had belonged to a cause, or related to a proceeding in a court of justice, I abstain from giving any opinion. It does not relate to a cause or a proceeding in a court of justice, it is a simple title-deed, and, as to a title-deed, I think the bankruptcy makes no difference, and that the rights of the assignees do not stand higher than those of the bankrupt. The solicitor stands substantially in the relation of a solicitor discharged, not by his own act, not by his own choice, not by his own fault. Then there remain two questions, if the first can properly be called a question, viz. whether there has been any conduct on the part of the solicitor defeating or diminishing the right which he has by the general law. If the petitioners wish to argue this I will hear it. The remaining question is, whether a solicitor having a lien on his client's title-deed, is entitled to refuse his client a copy of the deed. This I am willing to hear argued, if it is wished.

Russell having intimated that it was not intended to argue the case further—

The CHIEF JUDGE continued.—This petition, so far as it seeks that Messrs. Plucknett and Roberts may be ordered to deposit the bill of sale with the official assignee, must of course be dismissed. The question is, whether, a client desiring from a solicitor a copy of a title-deed, he can have it, when the solicitor is entitled to say "pay me my bill," and does not improperly or unreasonably decline to act. I have stated that I am willing to hear that argued if it is desired. Every part of a claim on the part of assignees to stand on a higher ground than the bankrupt requires to be watched with great jealousy. What the law gives them they shall have. I am of opinion I ought not to make any order on this petition, except to dismiss it, with costs to be paid out of the estate. I do not mean to blame the assignees. I do not give any opinion whether the solicitors might not be examined here, as I am exercising the same functions as a commissioner. I consider the submission of the solicitors to the jurisdiction to extend to the jurisdiction of the Court, for the purpose of considering the whole merits.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE unprecedented number of eighty Bills have received the Royal assent in one batch. The list will be found below. It consists almost entirely of private Acts, and the few public ones are of small importance. The period has now arrived for the annual slaughter of legislative projects. It commenced with the Common Law Process Bills, whose loss is to be lamented, for they went to supply a manifest defect in the difficulties that impede the service of process upon persons abroad. Why they were not permitted to pass without opposition is a mystery nobody can solve. The Government will shortly announce what they intend to abandon, what to carry.

BILL TO AMEND THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

(Presented by the Lord Chancellor.)

This is the promised Bill to amend the Transfer of Property Act, and it provides,—

1. That so much of an Act passed in the last session of Parliament, intituled, "An Act to simplify the Transfer of Property," as enacted that, after the time at which that Act should come into operation, no estate in land should be created by way of contingent remainder; but that every estate which, before that time, would have taken effect as a contingent remainder, should take effect (if in a will or codicil) as an executory devise, and (if in a deed) as an executory estate, of the same nature, and having the same properties as an executory devise; and that contingent remainders existing under deeds, wills, or instruments executed or made before the time when that Act should come into operation, should not fail, or be destroyed or barred, merely by reason of the destruction or merger of any preceding estate, or its determination by any other means than the natural effluxion of the time of such preceding estate, or some event on which it was in its creation limited to determine, shall be and is hereby repealed, as from the time of the commencement and taking effect thereof; and that the residue of the said Act shall be and is hereby repealed, as from the day of , 1845.

2. That after the said day of , 1845, all corporeal tenements and hereditaments shall, as regards the conveyance of the immediate freehold thereof, be deemed to lie in grant as well as in livery; and that every deed which, by force only of this enactment, shall be effectual as a grant, shall be chargeable with the stamp duty with which the same deed would have been chargeable in case the same had been a release, founded on a lease or bargain and sale for a year, and also with the stamp duty with which such lease or bargain and sale for a year would have been chargeable, exclusive of progressive duty.

3. That a feoffment, made after the said day of , 1845, other than a feoffment made under a custom by an infant, shall be void at law, unless evidenced by deed; and that a partition, and an exchange, of any tenements or hereditaments, not being copyhold, and a lease, required by law to be in writing, of any tenements or hereditaments, and an assignment of a chattel interest, not being copyhold, in any tenements or hereditaments, and a surrender in writing of an interest in any tenements or hereditaments, not being a copyhold interest and not being an interest which might by law have been created without writing, made after the said day of , 1845, shall also be void at law, unless made by deed.

4. That a feoffment, made after the said day of , 1845, shall not have any tortious operation; and that an exchange, or a partition, of any tenements or hereditaments, made by deed, executed after the said day of , 1845, shall not imply any warranty or condition in law; and that the word "give" or the word "grant," in a deed, executed after the same day, shall not imply any warranty or covenant in law, in respect of any tenements or hereditaments, except so far as the word "give" or the word "grant" may, by force of any Act of Parliament, imply a warranty or covenant.

5. That, under an indenture, executed after the said day of , 1845, an immediate estate or interest in any tenements or hereditaments, and the benefit of a condition or covenant respecting any tenements or hereditaments, may be taken, without naming the taker thereof a party to the same indenture; also, that a deed, executed after the said day of 1845, purporting to be an indenture, but not actually indented, shall have the effect of an indenture.

6. That, after the day of , 1845, a contingent, an executory, and a future interest, and a possibility coupled with an interest, in any tenements or hereditaments in England, of any tenure, whether the object of the gift or limitation of such interest or possibility be or be not ascertained, also a right of entry whether immediate or future, and whether vested or contingent, into or upon any tenements or hereditaments in England, of any tenure, may be disposed of by deed; but that no such disposition shall, by force only of this Act, defeat or enlarge an estate tail; and that every such disposition by a married woman shall be made conformably to the provisions, relative to dispositions by married women, of an Act passed in the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, intituled "An Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, and for the Substitution of more simple Modes of Assurance."

7. That, after the day of 1845, an estate or interest in any tenements or hereditaments in England, of any tenure, may be disclaimed by a married woman by deed; and that every such disclaimer shall be made conformably to the said provisions of the said Act for the abolition of fines and recoveries and for the substitution of more simple modes of assurance.

8. That a contingent remainder, existing at any time after the 31st December, 1844, shall be, and, if created before the passing of this Act, shall be deemed to have been, capable, notwithstanding the determination of any preceding estate of freehold, by forfeiture, surrender, or merger, of taking effect, in the same manner, in all respects, as if such determination had not happened.

9. That when the reversion expectant on a lease, made either before or after the passing of this Act, of any tenements or hereditaments, of any tenure, shall, after the said day of , 1845, be surrendered or merge, the estate which, if the same lease were determined, would for the time being confer a vested right to the immediate possession of the same tenements or hereditaments, shall, to the extent and for the purpose of preserving such incidents to, and obligations on, the same reversion, as, but for the surrender or merger thereof, would have subsisted, be deemed the reversion expectant on the same lease.

10. That this Act shall not extend to Scotland.

DEODANDS.—The following is the Bill entitled "An Act to abolish Deodands," as brought from the House of Lords:—"Whereas the law respecting the forfeiture of chattels which have moved to or caused the death of man, and respecting deodands, is unreasonable and inconvenient; be it enacted, by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the 1st day of September, 1845, there shall be no forfeiture of any chattel for or in respect of the same having moved to or caused the death of man; and no coroner's jury sworn to inquire, upon the sight of any dead body, how the deceased came by his death, shall find any forfeiture of any chattel which may have moved to or caused the death of the deceased, or any deodand whatsoever; and it shall not be necessary in any indictment or inquisition for homicide to allege the value of the instrument which caused the death of the deceased, or to allege that the same was of no value."

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

FRIDAY, June 27.—On the motion of Mr. KELLY, the Small Debts Bill was read a first time.

NEW WRIT.

MONDAY, June 30.—A new writ was ordered, on the motion of Sir GEORGE CLERK, for the borough of Abingdon, for the election of a burgess in the room of Sir F. Thesiger, who had accepted the office of Attorney-General.

LUNATIC ASYLUMS AND PAUPER LUNATICS BILL.

WEDNESDAY, July 2.—The House, on the motion of Lord ASHLEY, went into committee on this Bill. Clauses 1, 2, and 3 were agreed to without discussion; clauses 4, 5, 6, and 7 were then agreed to after some brief conversation. When clause 8 was under discussion, Mr. WAKLEY said he thought the clause before them was subversive of the entire principle of the noble lord's bill, for there was not a workhouse in the kingdom where a case of chronic lunacy could be advantageously received. He hoped the noble lord would consent to expunge the clause.—Lord ASHLEY said that if the opinion of the House was against the clause he should be ready to strike it out.—Sir J. GRAHAM said that in certain cases chronic lunatics might be advantageously provided for in workhouses. He would not say, however, that a better arrangement might not be made by the building of separate asylums.—Mr. HENLY opposed the clause, on the ground that it might, if adopted, give rise to improper treatment of chronic lunatics.—The clause, with some verbal amendments, was agreed to. Clauses from 9 to 40 were agreed to. Clause 41 was postponed. Clauses up to 45 were agreed to, after which the CHAIRMAN reported progress.

LUNATICS BILL.

On the motion of Lord ASHLEY, the committee on this Bill was fixed for Wednesday next, at twelve o'clock.

GAMING AND WAGERS.

THURSDAY, July 3. — Lord WHARNCLIFFE moved the second reading of th Bill, which, after some discussion, was agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE BILL.

Lord DENMAN moved the second reading of the Administration of Criminal Justice Bill. The object of this Bill was to remedy certain existing defects in the law, of which all the judges were sensible. In several cases severe punishments were affixed by Act of Parliament to certain species of offences, and all discretion was taken away from judges, who were sometimes bound to pass a sentence of transportation for life, where justice would be satisfied by a lighter punishment. Another object of this Bill was to correct a defect in the Criminal Court Act, in respect to recognizances. A third object was to provide that, where the venue was changed, the writ of certiorari should always point out where the trial should take place. With respect to another provision in the Bill, his noble and learned friend (Lord Campbell) had an objection, and he (Lord Denman) was not satisfied with it. In many cases a very serious offence might be committed, little short of felony, but only the punishment affixed to misdemeanors could be inflicted, though it was impossible it could be classed with the other descriptions of misdemeanors. There was no power of adding solitary confinement or hard labour. He could suggest a vast number of cases of great cruelty in which the parties were dismissed with the light punishment of a common assault. He did not know how to prevent this evil but by giving the judges a discretionary power. If any noble lord could suggest a wider criterion he would adopt it. He also suggested that this discretion should be confined to the superior courts.—Lord CAMPBELL said, he very greatly approved of three clauses of the Bill to which his noble and learned friend adverted. But he did most seriously object to the other clause. How did the Bill now stand? Any person convicted before any tribunal of any assault would be liable to be imprisoned for three years, to hard labour, and to solitary confinement, at the discretion of the Court. What was an assault? Holding up a fist in the face of another was an assault. Suppose a game case, and a notorious poacher, who had been several times convicted and sentenced to imprisonment, were brought before the quarter sessions and convicted of an assault, he would be at the mercy of the justices, and although the offence he had committed might be sufficiently punished by two days' imprisonment, he might be sentenced to two years' imprisonment, with hard labour and solitary confinement. Even at the assizes, not only Queen's judges presided, but occasionally serjeants and Queen's counsel. He should feel it to be his duty in the committee to move that this clause be struck out.—Lord BROUGHAM said, this bill was a very great improvement in the law, but for one proviso, which was not sufficiently guarded. If, instead of the words "all assaults," were substituted "all assaults with intent to commit felony," or some such words, the clause would be unobjectionable. He also suggested that the words "assaults of an indecent description" should be introduced into the bill.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that by the common law, common assaults were punishable with fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court; and he understood this was the principle of the bill now under their consideration, with this addition, that offenders should be liable to be committed to hard labour or to solitary confinement. The bill would leave the law as it stood before in this respect—namely, that the punishment would be left entirely to the discretion of the court before which the case was tried; but the bill provided that the amount of punishment should not exceed a certain limit. He must say, that he thought this extensive discretionary power should be confined to the superior courts; for although, generally speaking, justices of the peace had discharged their duties in a most satisfactory manner, there had been some exceptions, and he thought that the powers conferred by this bill ought to be confined to those who from education possessed an intimate acquaintance with the law.—After a few words from Lord DENMAN, the bill was read a second time. The Real Property Conveyance Bill went through committee, with some verbal amendments, and was ordered to be read a third time on Monday.

PETITIONS TO PARLIAMENT.—The 36th report of the Select Committee on Public Petitions shews that there are, amongst others, now before the House of Commons—7 petitions for a repeal of the union with Ireland, signed by 4,751 persons; 3 petitions, complaining of refusals to grant land for the Scotch Free Churches, signed by 784 persons; 5 petitions against the emancipation of the Jews, signed by 105 persons; 225 petitions for a better observance of the Sabbath Day, signed by 26,917 persons; 20 petitions against the Scotch Universities Bill, signed by 875 persons; 24 petitions in favour of it, signed by 883 persons; 561 petitions for agricultural relief, signed by 39,406 persons; 20 petitions in favour of the Arrestment of Wages (Scotland) Bill, signed by 2,083 persons; 77 petitions against the Colleges (Ireland) Bill, signed by 141,567 persons; 327 petitions for a 10-hours factory bill, signed by 15,536 persons; 11 petitions for sanitary regulations in towns, signed by 2,192 persons; 273 petitions for an alteration of the Physic and Surgery Bill, signed by 3,624 persons, and 867 petitions for diminishing the abominable nuisance of public houses, signed by no less than 191,925 individuals.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENTS.—A return of the corporal punishments inflicted in the Royal Navy, in each of the years 1839 to 1843, both inclusive, stating the highest and lowest number of lashes at each time, and the aggregate number of lashes in each year, in continuation of Parliamentary paper No. 371, of session 1838, gives the following results:—There were in 1839, 2,007 punishments inflicted; the highest number of lashes was 59,341; the highest number inflicted at one time, 60, and the lowest, 3. In 1840, the total number of punishments was 2,026; the total number of lashes, 60,302; the highest number inflicted at one time and the lowest were, respectively, 48 and 1. In 1841, the total number of punishments was 2,066; the total number of lashes, 61,669; the highest number inflicted at one time, 50, and the lowest, 2. In 1842, the total number of punishments was 2,472; the total number of lashes, 71,024, the highest number inflicted at one time, and that by sentence of court-martial, 100, and the lowest, 1. In 1843, the total number of punishments was 2,170; the total number of lashes inflicted, 63,985; the highest number at one time, 60, and the lowest, 3.

REPORT OF THE TITHE COMMISSIONERS FOR ENGLAND AND WALES.

Tithe Commission-office, May 31 and June 18.

SIR,—It is our duty to report to you the progress of the commutation of tithes in England and Wales to the close of the year 1844.

We have received notices that voluntary proceedings have commenced in 9,594 tithe districts; of these notices 39 were received during the year 1844.

We have received 6,964 agreements, and confirmed 6,616; of these, 87 have been received and 121 confirmed during the year 1844.

4,545 notices for making awards have been issued, of which 674 were issued during the year 1844.

We have received 3,324 drafts of compulsory awards, and confirmed 2,821; of these 643 have been received and 646 confirmed during the year 1844.

We have received 8,338 apportionments, and confirmed 7,919; and of these 813 have been received and 1,034 confirmed during the year 1844.

In 9,437 tithe districts, as will be seen from the above statement, the rent-charges to be hereafter paid have been finally established by confirmed agreements or confirmed awards.

We have in our possession voluntary agreements, and drafts of awards, as yet unconfirmed, which will include 851 additional tithe districts; and make a total, when completed, of 10,288 districts in which the tithes are commuted.

We have to repeat our regret that no decision has been given on the disputed points arising out of the statute of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 100, commonly called Lord Tenterden's Act.

In the numerous cases which must be determined by the final interpretation of that Act we are at present unable to proceed with any confidence in our own decisions, or any hope that such decisions will be acquiesced in by the parties, or confirmed by the Courts.

This difficulty, of which we pointed out the existence and the consequences in our last report, becomes, of course, of more urgent importance as our labours in other respects draw nearer to their close.

The disputes which existed as to the recovery of rent-charges due from railroads have been removed by a clause of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 85.

On the other points recommended for legislation we have found no reason to alter our opinion.

We are glad to be able to state that the power we now possess of legalizing exchanges of glebe lands and exchanges of rent-charges for a limited portion of land are found extensively useful.

We venture to recommend that before the tithe commission expires, similar power, perhaps slightly modified, should be invested in some permanent public body. The superintendence of the operation is attended by very little labour or difficulty.

We have the honour to be, Sir,
Your faithful and obedient servants,
W. BLAMIRE,
T. WENTWORTH BULLER.
R. JONES.

To the Right Hon. Sir J. R. G. Graham, Bart, &c.

FORMATION OF A NEW PENAL SETTLEMENT.—We are enabled to state, that authentic information has reached the colony of the intention of government to form a penal settlement on the northern coast of Australia, beyond the limits of this colony. The exact spot has not, as we understand, been fixed upon. Halifax Bay is spoken of as likely to form an advantageous position for the purpose. The first ships, with convicts on board for the new settlement, may be expected shortly to arrive at Sydney. A meeting, it is said, is to take place between Sir George Gipps, Sir Eardley Wilmot, and Mr. Latrobe, the superintendent of Port Philip, in order to take into consideration and report upon the course which they may consider most advisable to adopt in the formation of the settlement, and the carrying out a judicious and comprehensive system of penal discipline. —Australian.

CLERKS OF THE PEACE.—The usual annual return relative to the emoluments of clerks of the peace in England and Wales has been issued by order of Mr. Barneby, M.P. THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE melancholy, because untimely death of the brightest ornament of the Bar, in the very

Rumors are rife, but we wait the official announcement which cannot be long deferred In the Profession there cannot be two opinions as to the man whose claims are the strongest—Mr. KELLY

GENERAL ORDERS AND RULES OF THE HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY.

Form of Commission.

CIII. The form of a commission to be hereafter issued for the examination of witnesses is to be as follows, with such (if any) variations as the circumstances of the case require :—

"Victoria, &c.

"To A. B. and C. D. greeting.

"Know ye that we, in confidence of your prudence and fidelity, have appointed you, and by these presents do give unto each of you full power and authority, diligently to examine all witnesses whatsoever upon certain interrogatories to be exhibited to you in a cause wherein E. F. is complainant and G. H. and others are defendants; and therefore we command that one of you do, at certain days and places to be appointed for that purpose, cause the said witnesses to come before you, and then and there examine each of them apart upon the said interrogatories, either on their respective corporal oaths first taken before you upon the Holy Evangelists, or in the case of Quakers upon their solemn affirmation and declaration, or in such other solemn manner as is or may be authorized by law, and that you do take such their examinations and reduce them into writing on parchment; and when you shall have so taken them, you are to send the same to us in our Chancery without delay, wheresoever it shall then be, closed up and under your seal, distinctly and plainly set, together with the said interrogatories and this writ. And we further command you, that before you act in or be present at the swearing or examining any witness or witnesses you do take the oath first specified in the schedule hereunto annexed. And we further command that all and every the clerk or clerks employed in taking, writing, transcribing, or engrossing the deposition or depositions of witnesses to be examined by virtue of these presents shall, before he or they be permitted to act as clerk or clerks as aforesaid, or be present at such examination, severally take the oath last specified in the said schedule annexed; and we also give to you full power and authority to administer such oath to such clerk or clerks in manner aforesaid. Witness ourself at Westminster, the day of , in the year of our reign.

"LANGDALE."

Endorsement.

"By order of Court."

(Name and address of agent and solicitor issuing writ.)

CIV. The oath to be taken by a commissioner is to be set forth in a schedule annexed to the commission, and is to be in the form following; viz.

"You shall, according to the best of your skill and knowledge, truly, faithfully, and without partiality to any or either of the parties in this cause, take the examinations and depositions of all and every witness and witnesses produced and examined, by virtue of the commission hereunto annexed, upon the interrogatories produced and left with you: and you shall not publish, disclose, or make known to any person or persons whatsoever, except to the clerk or clerks by you employed and sworn to secrecy in the execution of this commission, the contents of all or any of the depositions of the witnesses or any of them to be taken by you by virtue of the said commission, until publication shall pass pursuant to some general or special order of the High Court of Chancery.

"So help you GOD."

And the said oath is to be taken by the commissioner who is to act in the execution of the commission previously to his acting therein before any master in ordinary, or before any master extraordinary of the court who is not employed or concerned in the cause, and such master extraordinary is hereby authorized and required to administer such oath.

CV. The oath to be taken by the clerk or clerks employed in taking, writing, transcribing, or engrossing the deposition or depositions of witnesses to be examined by virtue of a commission is to be set forth in a schedule, annexed to the commission, and is to be in the form following: viz.

"You shall truly and faithfully, and without partiality to any or either of the parties in this cause, take and write down, transcribe and ingross, the depositions of all and every witness and witnesses produced before and examined by either of the commissioners named in the commission hereunto annexed as far forth as you are directed and employed by the said commissioner to take, write down, or ingross the said depositions or any of them; and you shall not publish, disclose, or make known to any person or persons whatsoever the contents of all or any of the depositions of the witnesses or any of them to be taken, written down, transcribed, or ingrossed by you, or whereto you shall have recourse or be any ways privy, until publication shall pass pursuant to some general or special order of the High Court of Chancery.

And the said oath is to be taken before the acting commissioner by the clerk or clerks employed as aforesaid, before he or they be permitted to act as such clerk or clerks, or to be present at the examination of witnesses under the commission; and the commissioner is hereby authorized and required to administer the said oath to such clerk or clerks accordingly.

CVI. The commissioner having taken such oath is, at the instance of any party entitled to examine witnesses, to sign and deliver to such party a notice in writing specifying the time and place when and where he will proceed to examine witnesses, and such notice is to be duly served by the party who obtains it upon the solicitors of all the other parties entitled to examine witnesses under the commission, and in case any such party has no solicitor, upon such party, at least ten clear days before the day therein named for proceeding to examine witnesses.

CVII. All depositions of witnesses are to be taken and expressed in the first person of the deponent.

CVIII. If the examination of witnesses cannot be completed in one day, and the circumstances of the case permit, the commissioner is to proceed de die in diem, during six hours of each day, between the hours of eight in the morning and six in the afternoon, until the witnesses for all parties are fully examined; nevertheless the commissioner may, if in his opinion the circumstances of the case require an adjournment, adjourn the proceedings from time to time and from place to place, in such manner as he thinks proper; but he is in all cases to enter on the depositions any adjournment, and where such adjournment is from place to place or otherwise than de die in diem, the cause or reason of such adjournment, and he is also to enter on the depositions the hours of the day on which he commences and concludes the examination of witnesses on each day, and the true cause of his not proceeding for the full time of six hours on each day, if such should be the case.

CIX. When the examination of witnesses is completed, the commissioner is to seal up the depositions, and is to transmit the same sealed up with the commission to the Record and Writ Clerk's office.

CX. The commissioner is, for the performance of his duty as such commissioner, entitled to receive the following sums of money, viz. :—

For every day in which he is necessarily, and without any default of his own, detained in the execution of the commission, for his expenses the sum of	2	2	0
For every day in which he is bonâ fide employed in the examination of witnesses, the further sum of . .	3	3	0
For every mile that he travels directly from his place of residence to the place where he opens the commission, and from place to place where the commission is adjourned, and from the place where he last acts in the execution of the commission to his place of residence, the sum of	0	1	6

Publication.

CXI. Publication is to pass without rule or order on the expiration of two months after the filing of the replication, unless such time expires in the long vacation, or is enlarged by order.

CXII. If the two months after the filing of the replication expire in the long vacation, publication is to pass on the second day of the ensuing Michaelmas Term, unless the time is enlarged by order.

CXIII. If the time is enlarged by order, publication is to pass without rule or order on the expiration of the enlarged time, unless the enlarged time expires in the long vacation, in which case publication is to pass without rule or order on the second day of the ensuing Michaelmas Term, unless the time is further enlarged by order.

Dismissal.

CXIV. Any defendant may, upon notice, move the Court that the bill may be dismissed, with costs, for want of prosecution, and the Court may order accordingly,

1. If the plaintiff, having obtained no order to enlarge the time, does not obtain and serve an order for leave to amend the bill, or does not file the replication, or set down the cause to be heard on bill and answer, within four weeks after the answer, or the last of the answers, is found or deemed to be sufficient, or after the filing of a traversing note; or
2. If the plaintiff, having undertaken to reply to a plea to the whole bill, does not file his replication within four weeks after the date of his undertaking; or
3. If the plaintiff, having obtained no order to enlarge the time, does not amend the bill within fourteen days after the date of the order for leave to amend; or
4. If the plaintiff, having obtained no order to enlarge the time, does not set down the cause to be heard, and obtain and serve a subpœna to hear judgment within four weeks after publication has passed.

CXV. Where the plaintiff has, after answer, amended his bill without requiring an answer to the amendments, any defendant may upon notice move to dismiss the bill, with costs, for want of prosecution, if the plaintiff, having obtained no order to enlarge the time, does not file the replication, or set down the cause to be heard on bill and answer, within the times following; viz.

1. Within fourteen days after service of notice of the amendment of the bill, in cases where the defendant does not desire to answer the amendments.
2. Within fourteen days after the master's refusal to allow further time, in cases where the defendant, desiring to answer, has not put in his answer within eight days after the service of notice of the amendment of the bill, and the master has refused to allow further time.
3. Within fourteen days after the filing of the answer in cases where the defendant has put in an answer to the amendment, unless the plaintiff has within such fourteen days obtained from the Court a special order for leave to re-amend the bill.

CXVI. If, after publication passed, the plaintiff neglects to set down the cause to be heard, any defendant, after the expiration of four weeks, may set the same down at his own request, instead of proceeding to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, and may obtain a subpœna to hear judgment, and serve the same on the plaintiff.

CXVII. If the plaintiff, after the cause is set down to be heard, causes the bill to be dismissed on his own application, or if the cause is called on to be heard in court, and the plaintiff makes default, and by reason thereof the bill is dismissed, then and in such case such dismissal is, unless the Court otherwise orders, to be equivalent to a dismissal on the merits, and may be pleaded in bar to another suit for the same matter.

CXVIII. A defendant is not to be at liberty to move to dismiss a bill for want of prosecution until after the expiration of the time within which a plaintiff may obtain an order to amend such bill.

Conditional Order.

CXIX. In all cases where any person or party having obtained from the Court or from a master any order upon condition does not perform or comply with such condition, he is to be considered to have waived or abandoned such order so far as the same is beneficial to himself, and any other party or person interested in the matter may, on breach or non-performance of the condition, take either such proceedings as the order may in such case warrant, or such proceedings as might have been taken if no such order had been made, unless the Court orders to the contrary.

Costs.

CXX. Where costs are to be taxed as between party and party, the taxing master may allow to the party entitled to receive such costs all such just and reasonable expenses as appear to have been properly incurred in

The service and execution of writs, and the service of orders, notices, petitions, and warrants,
Advising with counsel on the pleadings, evidence, and other proceedings in the cause,
Procuring counsel to settle and sign pleadings and such petitions as may appear to have been proper to be settled by counsel,
Procuring consultations of counsel,
Procuring the attendance of counsel in the master's offices upon questions relating to pleadings or title,
Procuring evidence by deposition or affidavit, and the attendance of witnesses, and
Supplying counsel with copies of or extracts from necessary documents.

But in allowing such costs the taxing master is not to allow to such party any costs which do not appear to have been necessary or proper for the attainment of justice or for defending his rights, or which appear to have been incurred through over caution, negligence, or mistake, or merely at the de[illegible] of the party.

CXXI. The costs of such copies of pleadings and proceedings as have heretofore been allowed in the taxation of costs between party and party in country causes, are hereafter to be allowed in the taxation of costs between party and party in town causes.

CXXII. If upon the hearing of any cause, petition, or motion the Court is of opinion that any pleading, petition, or affidavit which has not been referred for impertinence, or any part of any such pleading, petition, or affidavit, is improper or of unnecessary length, the Court may either declare such pleading, petition, or affidavit, or any part thereof, to be improper or of unnecessary length, or may direct the taxing master to look into such pleading, petition, or affidavit, and distinguish what parts or part thereof are or is improper or of unnecessary length, and may direct the taxing master to ascertain the costs occasioned to any party by such parts or part thereof as in the one case may have been declared to be, and in the other case may have been distinguished as being, improper or of unnecessary length, and may make such order as is just for the payment, set-off, or other allowance of such costs.

CXXIII. Upon interlocutory applications, where the Court deems it proper to award costs to either party, the Court may by the order direct payment of a sum in gross in lieu of taxed costs, and direct by and to whom such sum in gross is to be paid.

CXXIV. In cases where a bill or petition is dismissed with costs, or a motion is refused with costs, or any costs are by any general or special order ordered or decreed to be paid, the taxing master may tax such costs without any order referring the same for taxation, unless the Court, upon the application of the party alleging himself to be aggrieved, prohibits the taxation of such costs; and the costs to be certified by the taxing master are to be recovered by subpœna.

CXXV. The costs of a bill of discovery filed by any defendant to a bill for relief are to be costs in the original cause, unless the Court otherwise orders.

FUNERAL OF SIR WILLIAM FOLLETT.

The mortal remains of this distinguished lawyer and advocate were yesterday morning consigned to their last resting-place, in the vaults under the eastern portion of the Temple Church. The whole of the judges (with the exception of Lord Denman, who was unable to attend), the Lord Chancellor, Lord Brougham, Sir Robert Peel, Sir James Graham, the Right Hon. the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Vice-Chancellor of England, Earl Caernarvon, Vice-Chancellors Wigram and Knight Bruce, Lord Campbell, Mr. Greene, M.P. Chairman of the House; Wm. Brougham, esq. Wm. Wingfield, esq. the Attorney-General, Lord Langdale, R. Kindersley, esq. Mr. Baron Parke, and upwards of 200 of the principal members of the common law and equity courts, being present to pay the last token of respect to the lamented deceased, and assist in the funeral ceremony. The funeral cortege, which consisted of a hearse, containing the body, and three mourning coaches, each drawn by four horses, in which were relatives of the deceased, left Cumberland-terrace at eleven o'clock, and arrived at the Temple exactly at half-past twelve, when the procession was formed on the terrace in front of the gardens, and proceeded in the following order:—The Master, the beadles and attendants of the Inner and Middle Temple; the benchers of the Inner Temple, the benchers of the Middle Temple, two by two; the lid of feathers and porters, the choir, consisting of ten boys and twelve male voices; the reader; Archdeacon Robinson, the Master of the Temple; the coffin, on the right of which, Mr. Burge, Q.C. as treasurer of the Temple, Chief Justice Tindal, Sir James Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer; and on the left, Mr. Crowder, Q.C. Principal of the Temple; Lord Lyndhurst, Sir R. Peel, and the Vice-Chancellor of England acted as pall-bearers. The chief mourner, R. B. Follett, esq. and the brothers and immediate relatives of the deceased, followed by upwards of one hundred gentlemen, forming nearly the whole of the Queen's Counsel in the several Courts of Law, as also the Judges, two by two. They proceeded round the terrace into King's Bench-walk, through Tanfield-court, to the western entrance of the church, and up the centre. The body being deposited on a bier, the persons forming the procession filed off to the places allotted to them. The body and gallery of the church being filled by the various members of the Profession, the Funeral Service was chanted by the whole choir, at the conclusion of which the body was deposited in the catacombs, between the late Mr. Joy and Mrs. Warre, and immediately beneath the remains of the late Lord Thurlow. The scene was altogether one of the most impressive and solemn appearance, and there could not have been less than 5,000 persons present on the occasion.

HOWARD v. GOSSETT.—Up to the present time no steps have been taken on the part of the solicitor for Sir W. Gossett, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons—the nominal defendant, in fact, in this action—to obtain the writ of error for the reversal of the judgment of the Queen's Bench upon the demurrer, notwithstanding the resolution of the House on Thursday. It appears some difficulty exists whether, notwithstanding the resolution of the House, the writ can be available, in consequence of the proceedings after the judgment on demurrer having been allowed to go on to trial, judgment, and execution issued and levied, and the judgment, by payment of the amount of the levy, satisfied, as the writ of error, according to the practice of the courts, ought to have been issued before; at all events, if the writ issues, a reversal of the judgment only could be obtained on record, the plaintiff quietly keeping the amount of the verdict and costs in his pocket.—Globe.

IMPORTANT TO ANGLERS.—By the new Fishery Act, all rivers in England and Wales are to be closed on the 13th of September in each year, and any person catching, or having in his possession, any trout measuring in length less than seven inches from eye to fork, will subject himself to a penalty not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.*

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In your abridgment of the correspondence in the LAW TIMES of the 14th inst. in answer to my statement that the Bill gave power to make an order on wages, but did not give any power to enforce that order, you have observed, that the clause which gives power to imprison will be sufficient to enforce the order. I was afraid, when I read the abridgment, that it would mislead, and be taken as my opinion; and on reading Mr. Dodgson's letter in the LAW TIMES of the 21st, I find it has misled him, as he supposes I hold an opinion on the matter in direct opposition to the one I do hold, and therefore I hope you will allow me to put the matter right, as my opinion, which is formed upon ten years' particular attention to the law of debts, and upon much practical experience, may perhaps be considered valuable, if it be only on account of my practical knowledge of the working system of local courts, and the peculiar facilities I have had for obtaining information. There are thousands, and, I believe, tens of thousands, of orders which were made by the judges of local courts, long before imprisonment was abolished, which could not be enforced by imprisonment or otherwise, as the goods were generally claimed by the landlord, and the plaintiffs suffered the judgments to remain dormant, because they could not afford, as they said, "to throw good money after bad," in sending men twenty, thirty, or forty miles to prison without any probable benefit. Subscriptions have been raised, and parties sent to prison as an example, but it failed to do any good; and defendants have told me they should be happy to go to prison again, as they were as comfortable in prison as out of it.

Imprisonment may be of benefit in cases where the prison is not far from the court and the defendant's residence. I am therefore of opinion, that no law, however severe the imprisonment may be, will be sufficient, unless it gives power to attach wages in the hands of the master, "money in savings' banks, in the hands of trustees, under wills," &c. My practical experience enables me to state, that in at least ninety cases out of every hundred, the defendants in the local courts are either improvident, unprincipled, or drunkards; that it is their own fault which brings them into court; that the generality of cases are under 5*l.* and that most of the defendants have nothing worth the operation of an Insolvent Act.

My opinion will be further collected from the letter on "Imprisonment for Debt," in the Justice of the Peace, of 2nd November last, pages 734, 735, where it is suggested that the tradesman should be enabled to serve the master with the bill on a penny stamp, &c.

The law of payment of rent by execution creditors has a most important bearing upon this subject; and in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 67, an attempt has been made to amend it, but unfortunately, by giving landlords four times of payment, the law is perfectly evaded and rendered null. By making all the weekly and monthly tenants into quarterly tenants, the landlord may claim his four quarters', or one year's rent, as heretofore. If it had, in those small matters, restricted the landlord's claim to three months, it would have been a great benefit to suitors in local courts, and only an act of justice.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I inclose you copy of a clause I sent to Mr. Hawes, for him to propose in the House of Commons when the new Small Debts Bill gets there. You will perceive it is intended to meet an evil of every day occurrence, as any sheriff's officer could easily convince you. I am, Sir, yours &c. H. GRAINGER, Solicitor to the London Commercial Association for Opposition of Fraudulent Insolvents, &c.

8, Basinghall-street, June 7, 1845.

Proposed clause to be added to the Small Debts Bill, now in the House of Lords.

Landlord on claim of rent in arrear to make affidavit of the truth thereof.—And whereas judgment creditors are often deprived of the fruits of their judgments against their debtors on the levy of a writ of fieri facias by fraudulent claims of rent in arrear by the landlords of such debtors acting in collusion with their tenants, be it enacted for remedy thereof, that no sheriff's officer or bailiff, or other person charged with the execution of any process against the goods and chattels of a judgment debtor shall be bound to take notice of any claim for arrears of rent due to any landlord, unless such claim be accompanied by an affidavit sworn before one of her Majesty's justices of the peace, setting forth the amount due to the landlord, and the period when it became due, and such affidavit made by the landlord, or his receiver or agent, shall be delivered to such sheriff's officer or bailiff, or other person having the execution of such process as aforesaid, at the time of making any such claim for rent in arrear as aforesaid, any law, statute, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

SMALL DEBTS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I feel somewhat disappointed that your last number furnishes no announcement of any thing being about to be done by the Profession or the Law Societies, with the view of obtaining the correction and amendment of this Bill ere it passes into law. I hope, however, your next will dispel my anxiety on this subject.

In reference to the clause suggested by Mr. Buchanan, I concur with him, and moreover think that the landlord ought certainly to be required to make oath as to the amount of rent due, ere he is allowed to deprive a judgment creditor of the benefit of his execution; which would in a great measure operate as a check against a claim where there is no rent due, or a less sum than claimed. But I would further observe, that it must be remembered fictitious claims are by no means the most numerous, as it much more frequently happens that the landlord has what would be legally termed a bonâ fide claim for rent in fact due, and which he permits, very frequently in collusion with his tenant, to remain due, so as to defeat all executions whatever (and in which cases the proposed affidavit would always be forthcoming and available); and to strike at the root of such a system, there appears but one remedy, namely, that the suggested clause should, to make it effective, go the length of depriving the landlord of his lien, as against an alias, or any other execution (he having once claimed his lien), say, at the end of three or six months, or otherwise, according with the time the rent falls due. In fact, the above system prevails to that extent in this neighbourhood, that, to speak within bounds, it almost as frequently happens an execution for a small debt is rendered unavailable as otherwise.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Chesterfield, 1st July, 1845. JOS. DODGSON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Being in London at the latter end of last week, I was for the first time shewn an article in your journal of the 7th inst. in which, under the head of "Sham Lawyers," after preluding it by some remarks of your own as to my "mingling law with physic," and "advising the neighbouring law society to keep an eye upon me," you have copied a letter written by me to a Mr. H. Cooper, requiring payment of the sum of 20s. which he owed to a poor man of the name of Harries, I need hardly state that, had I sooner become acquainted with the fact of your having thus made a public exhibition of me, I should have taken earlier notice of it, and, had time permitted when in town, would have paid you a personal visit upon the subject; as it is, I must trust to your sense of honour and fair play (upon which I understand you pride yourself) to give insertion in your next number to these few lines in answer.

In the first place allow me to say that the term "sham lawyer," as applied to me, is most unjust and incorrect, as I do not claim any pretensions to the title, nor do I in any way act in a manner to deserve it. So far from being an enemy to the Profession, which that designation would seem to imply, I am, on the contrary, one of its best friends, being constantly the means of introducing some excellent pieces of business to its different members in this and other localities, which they would otherwise never have heard of, and in proof of which fact I could refer you to some gentlemen as respectable as any others to be found on the roll of attorneys.

I cannot help feeling pity for the party who, from private pique, has been induced to send you the trumpery letter, in the writing of which both he and you seem to think that I have committed so grievous a sin, although "the head and front of my offending" is, that I have gratuitously interfered for the purpose of getting a trifling matter settled between two poor men, and thereby prevented proceedings being taken for the recovery of the paltry sum of 20s.! If the members of the Profession would themselves act upon the same principle, instead of wantonly incurring costs, as too many of them do, one great cause of complaint against them would be removed.

I am, yours, &c.

Narberth, June 30, 1845.

[This letter came unsigned, but of course the writer is the author of the letter published in a previous number.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I am induced to trouble you with a letter relative to a Bill which has been introduced into the House of Lords by Lord Campbell, for establishing a General Metropolitan Registry of Deeds relating to real property in England, and which, I think, ought to engage the attention of the Legal Profession, affecting, as it would, most materially, their interests.

I consider this Bill uncalled for by any adequate occasion of necessity or usefulness either to the land-owner or to the public at large; and in its working, it would be productive of consequences highly injurious to both.

The proposed law would operate most injuriously towards persons wishing to raise money on sudden emergencies, when the increased expense under the machinery incidental to the proposed Bill would often frustrate the object of the party.

Again, the exposure attendant upon a general registry I cannot but consider as an invasion of the private rights of individuals; it might, in many cases, induce persons to avoid entering into transactions which would become known to all, and which might in many cases, from family considerations, be most inadvisable.

Should you concur with me in the propriety of these remarks, perhaps you will be good enough to draw the attention of your readers to the subject.

I am yours, &c.

JACOB F. Y. MOGG.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

OMEGA thus writes:—The apathy of the country attorneys respecting the clause empowering the justices to appoint their clerks to conduct all prosecutions arising within the different divisions is truly surprising. If the bill should pass without having the obnoxious and insulting clause expunged, it is certain that the jobbing will commence immediately afterwards, more especially in the smaller counties. What are the two great law societies about in a matter which affects the interests of the great body of the country practitioners?

SMALL DEBTS BILL.—I am asked by different clients of what practical use the summoning, &c. of a debtor after a judgment obtained will be. They also complain, and justly too, that the present expensive system of recovering, or attempting to recover, small debts under 20*l*. is left totally untouched.

"Z." a correspondent, seeks a reply to the subjoined query:—

Can any of your readers inform me whether, in case of a woman applying under the late Bastardy Act for an order upon the alleged father, should have the case dismissed for want of evidence, she is at liberty to apply again at a future petty sessions, or is she to appeal to the quarter sessions?

SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1845.

MR. KELLY.

THE judgment of the Profession, looking round for the man possessing the highest professional claims to the vacant Solicitor-Generalship, will be pronounced unanimously in favour of Mr. KELLY, who, as a Lawyer, stands confessedly the foremost of the Bar.

But the Morning Chronicle, in an article of great ability, has raised another issue; and, frankly admitting Mr. KELLY'S professional claims, has alleged against him a moral disqualification for the office which, it is agreed on all hands, he is intellectually the most fitted to fill.

A minister, argues the Chronicle, has no right to lead to the foot of the Bench a man whom he would not place upon it; and then the Chronicle proceeds to urge that Mr. KELLY is not morally qualified for the judicial office.

In proof of this, two charges, and two only, are adduced. The one, that Mr. KELLY was guilty of bribery at the Ipswich election; and the other, that he knowingly cited a short-hand writer's note wrongly, for the purpose of misrepresenting the sense of it.

These are grave charges in sound; but when examined they do not justify the conclusion.

True, Mr. KELLY was unseated for bribery at Ipswich. But, in honest truth, is that an offence to disqualify a man for the fulfilment with honour of the duties of a judge? Is it not the fact, that nine-tenths of the members of the House of Commons are guilty of bribery? There is scarcely one of the judges who has held a seat there who was not more or less guilty of the same offence: the only difference being, that Mr. KELLY had the ill luck to be found out. We are far from justifying bribery; but we assert that it is not, according to the estimation of society, such a moral taint as to incapacitate a man for office of any kind. We doubt whether there has been an Attorney or Solicitor-General for the last century who has not been directly or indirectly guilty of bribery.

The other charge is a very cruel one to be preferred against any man, because it is one which he cannot possibly disprove. Mr. KELLY wrongly reads some MS. in the hurry of a trial. It is easy enough for an enemy to say, "that was done wilfully;" nor can the party so charged do more than set his simple denial against that assertion. A fact is against him; its hue depends upon another fact, incapable of proof or disproof. To take from a man his character on such a pretence is at any time a rank injustice—at such a time, ungenerous as well as unjust.

The specific objections of the Chronicle to Mr. KELLY'S appointment, thus examined, are seen to be worthless. But it is yet more cruel at such a moment to endeavour to blast the prospects of professional honour hardly won, and undoubtedly professionally well deserved, by general insinuations, which cannot be met and contradicted, because they allege nothing.

Having thus disposed of the objections of the Chronicle, we may be permitted, on behalf of the Profession, to urge the justice and propriety of conferring upon Mr. KELLY the honours he has so well merited by his profound knowledge as a lawyer and his great abilities as an advocate.

THE CIRCUIT COMMISSIONERS' REPORT.

THE changes recommended are very trifling, and afford some countenance to the unceremonious treatment the Report has received. Undoubtedly it has proved a mountain in labour, and the machinery of a commission, and the laying together of so many wise heads for so long a time, were scarcely necessary for the maturing of alterations so minute as those suggested in the Report. Still, as we have already observed, the blame rests not with the Commissioners, but with the Government that so absurdly limited the circle of their inquiries. They have come to the best conclusion the contracted range of their research permitted, and we must deal with it as we find it.

They first suggest a change in the Terms, so as to distribute them at more equal intervals. Michaelmas and Hilary Terms are to be held in November and December; Easter and Trinity at the same times as now.

The Circuits are then to be appointed at more equal periods. There will be one in January; the other in July, as now. It is rightly anticipated that this will remove the very inconvenient necessity for the Winter Circuit.

Under any circumstances, this change will be desirable. But the proposed re-arrangement of the circuits is open to more objection. Certain it is that the Northern Circuit must be relieved from some of its business; the load is growing more weighty than judges and counsel can endure. But will the evil complained of be cured by the remedy suggested? Is it not, in fact, a palliation, and not a cure? And will not the fast-growing population inevitably compel an entire reconstruction of the existing circuit arrangements ere many years have passed? If, then, a change must be made, let that change be one which will meet thoroughly present difficulties, and provide for pending claims. The construction of a new circuit, either by severing the Northern in twain, or remodelling all, can alone meet the exigency of the circumstances.

But this cannot be effected without the aid of one or two additional judges, and this the commissioners were not empowered to recommend, so they were compelled to leave out of sight the only efficient remedy.

More judges are wanting in Westminster Hall for the establishment of a Crown Court specially for Crown business, and for the criminal appeals, which cannot much longer be withheld from the demands of justice.

This and throwing open the Court of Common Pleas would, we believe, offer an easy solution of the difficulty which the commissioners have evaded rather than overcome; and if they had been permitted to pronounce an opinion upon that question, they would have presented a very different report from this which has so greatly disappointed public expectation.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

THE absence of almost all the Reporters on duty at their various Quarter Sessions, has delayed the issue of three numbers of the reports, which only wait their correction of the proofs. UNSTAMPED INSTRUMENTS.

Buxton v. Cornish (12 M. & W. 426); Smart v. Nokes (7 Scott, N. R. 786).

To what extent, and for what purposes, instruments, which by the Stamp Acts are required to be stamped, may be received in evidence, although not stamped, is a question which has been agitated in so great a variety of cases, and has been the subject of so many decisions, not altogether consistent or reconcilable, that a short review of those cases cannot fail, it is thought, to be acceptable to the profession, and will form at all events an appropriate introduction to the statement of the points decided in the recent cases of Buxton v. Cornish, and Smart v. Nokes.

The words of the Stamp Acts, upon which this question depends, provide, that no instrument, liable to the duties by those Acts imposed, "shall be pleaded or given in evidence in any court, or admitted in any court to be good, useful, or available in law or equity," until the paper, vellum, &c. on which such instrument shall be engrossed, printed, written, &c. shall be stamped or marked with a lawful stamp or mark, to denote the rate or duty as directed by those Acts. Words of larger or more comprehensive import, it would have been difficult to find; and it is not surprising that, when cases arose in which justice and common sense demanded that limitations and exceptions should be engrafted on the general rule so broadly laid down, considerable doubt and difficulty should have been felt, and that a lengthened period should have elapsed before those doubts were fully resolved, and that difficulty overcome.

At an early period, however, it was decided by all the judges, that on an indictment for forging a bill of exchange, the forged bill might be given in evidence, though not stamped (R. v. Hawkeswood, 1 Leach, C. C. 292, 3rd edit.; 2 East, P. C. 955); and that decision has since that time been repeatedly acted upon. (R. v. Teague, Bayley on Bills, 547, n. (12), 5th edit.; 2 East, P. C. 979; R. v. Lee, 1 Leach, C. C. 293, n. (a); R. v. Morton, 2 East, P. C. 955; R. v. Recutist, 2 Leach, C. C. 703, 4th edit.; R. v. Davies, 2 East, P. C. 956.) So in Rex v. Pooley (3 Bos. & Pull. 311; Russ. & R. C. C. 31), an unstamped draft was admitted to prove the larceny of a letter in which it was inclosed; and in the analogous cases of usury, illegality, or fraud, it is well settled that usurious, illegal, and fraudulent instruments may be received for the purpose of defeating them, although unstamped. (Nash v. Duncomb, 1 Moo. & Robb. 104; Dover v. Maestar, 5 Esp. 92; Holland q. t. v. Duffin, Peake's N. P. C. 58; R. v. Fowle, 4 Car. & P. 592; Coppock v. Bower, 4 Mee. & W. 361.) It is true, that in Whitwell v. Dimsdale (Peake's N. P. C. 167), where an agreement between a bankrupt and his sons was offered to prove fraud, Lord Kenyon is reported to have said that an unstamped agreement could not be given in evidence for any purpose whatever, either to establish or defeat it, and that he dissented from the decision in R. v. Hawkeswood: but it appears that subsequently that learned judge altered his opinion. In the case of Keable v. Payne (8 Ad. & Ell. 555), an attempt was made to distinguish that case from those already mentioned, on the ground that the fraud there charged was not a fraud committed by the defendant, but by a third person, and that therefore, as against the defendant, an unstamped cheque, offered in evidence to prove the fraud, ought not to be received; but the Court held that there was no ground for any such distinction; that the cheque was an ingredient in the fraud, and might be given in evidence to shew the criminal act. This class of cases was very much discussed, and the principle upon which they rest very clearly elicited, in the subsequent case of Williams v. Gerry (10 Mee. & W. 296). There Lord Abinger said, "With regard to promissory notes and bills of exchange, and all matters which are the subject of the Stamp Acts, unless they are stamped when they are produced, they must be rejected whenever they are produced to shew that they have or ever had any validity. But the case is different when the purpose is not to give them effect, but to defeat them, and to shew that they were entered into for the purpose of fraud and conspiracy." Then, referring to cases of forgery, he proceeds, "Is it to be said that, because it is forged upon a wrong stamp, the forgery cannot be established in a court of law? It would not be the less a fraud or forgery on that account; and to hold the document inadmissible would manifestly be a departure from the spirit and letter of the Act of Parliament. The ground upon which it is admitted in such cases is, that it is not a valid instrument, but merely evidence of the fraud, and that the party may produce such an instrument for the purpose of defeating it."

On the other hand, even in criminal cases, an unstamped instrument cannot be received in evidence, if offered for the purpose of making it in any sense effective or available. Thus on an indictment for arson, with intent to defraud an insurance company, an unstamped memorandum on the policy, stating the removal of the goods insured to the house in which the felony was charged to have been committed, was rejected; because there, as was said by Patteson, J. in Keable v. Payne, "the validity of the instrument was essential to the offence charged;" and upon the same principle, where a clerk was indicted for embezzling his master's money, Bayley, J. held that an unstamped receipt, given by the servant to the debtor, who paid him the money, was not evidence against the prisoner. (3 Stark. Evid. 1058, last edit.) There is another criminal case in which similar evidence was rejected, although not upon the same ground. In the case of R. v. Smyth (1 Moo. & Rob. 155), Lord Tenterden rejected an unstamped agreement for a lease, although it was offered to shew that one of the defendants, a married woman, had therein described herself as a widow, and that the whole transaction was fraudulent and void; and his lordship upon that occasion said, "The cases of forged instruments are not in point here. The indictment is not in any way founded upon the instrument produced. If it were, if the agreement constituted the crime, the defendant certainly could not exclude it because unstamped; but here it is only collaterally introduced, and must be subject to the ordinary rules of evidence,"—a distinction certainly not drawn in any other case,—and at variance not only with the case of R. v. Pooley, where an unstamped draft was received for a purely collateral purpose, but with the principles laid down in Williams v. Gerry, and the other cases cited. Whether in any particular case, the instrument be offered for a collateral purpose, or as evidence directly bearing upon the issue raised, is immaterial; the true question being whether the instrument is produced for the purpose of giving it any legal effect; or for the purpose of shewing it to be wholly void and inoperative; for the former purpose it is in all cases inadmissible—if for the latter, in all admissible. This distinction has not always been borne in mind, and hence much of the doubt and confusion which have arisen. In the case of Gregory v. Frazer (3 Camp. 454), the decision was in accordance with the view above stated, but not so the words of the learned judge, or the language of the marginal note. There an unstamped promissory note was offered to shew that the defendant was in a state of intoxication when he wrote it,—and that it had been obtained from him by fraud,—and Lord Ellenborough said, "The note certainly cannot be received in evidence as a security, or to prove the loan of the money; but I think it may be looked at by the jury as a cotemporary writing to prove or disprove the fraud imputed to the plaintiff." In Jardine v. Payne (1 B. & Adol 663), Lord Tenterden recognises that case as an authority for the position, that an unstamped instrument may be received "for a collateral object" generally; and it is so cited in Keable v. Payne and other cases. But the language and decision of the Court of Exchequer in Williams v. Gerry establish that, though an unstamped instrument would be evidence to "prove" the fraud, it could not be received if tendered as evidence to "disprove" it; for on that very ground they refused to receive a cancelled bill of sale offered to shew that a second bill of sale was given bonâ fide, and not fraudulently. The same observation applied to the case of R. v. Castle Morton (3 B. & A. 588), where an unstamped agreement for letting a tenement was offered to prove its value, and rejected, not because it was to a certain extent a setting up of that agreement, but because it was not "collateral." The case of Reed v. Deere (7 B. & C. 261), is not easily reconciled with subsequent decisions, for there the Court looked at an unstamped agreement for the purpose of seeing whether it varied materially from a former agreement, also produced. That case does not seem essentially distinguishable from R. v. Pendleton (15 East, 440), where the Court looked at an unstamped instrument to see if the term had expired, in order to determine whether parol evidence was receivable to prove the yearly service after the term had expired; Mr. Justice Bayley saying, "Though we cannot look at the unstamped instrument for the purpose of proving by it any agreement between the parties, for such is the general import of the Stamp Acts, yet the Court may look at it to see whether it applies to the evidence of a contract between them." In both these cases the purposes for which the instruments were offered were certainly collateral; and yet both are at variance with the subsequent decision of Vincent v. Cole (Moo. & M. 257), at nisi prius, and afterwards in the Court of Queen's Bench, where Lord Tenterden held that the plaintiff could not recover for any work extra the agreement, without first producing and proving the agreement.

The only remaining case to which it is necessary to refer is that of Sweeting v. Halse (9 B. & C. 365; 4 M. & R. 287), where the Court held that an unstamped bill of exchange written on the back of a cancelled bill, ought not to have been received in evidence for the purpose of shewing that the first bill had been cancelled with the drawer's consent; a decision which may perhaps be reconciled with the principle already stated, by the fact that the unstamped bill was there offered for the purpose of giving it effect, though that distinction is not very satisfactory; and at all events it would seem that the ground upon which that case was decided was stated too broadly by Lord Tenterden in these words:—"The jury therefore were allowed to draw a conclusion of fact from an unstamped instrument, which in point of law could not be done."

The case of Buxton v. Cornish (12 M. & W. 426) may be very shortly stated, but it is important as settling a point of frequent occurrence in nisi prius practice. It was an action of debt against the maker of a promissory note for 50*l.* with counts for money lent, and on an account stated. Amongst other pleas, there was a plea of set-off for work and labour, &c. pleaded to the whole declaration. At the trial it was proved in the course of the plaintiffs' case, that the work done for them by the defendant was done under written contracts. The defendant's counsel called a witness in support of the plea of set-off, and upon his asking him respecting work done beyond those contracts, the learned judge said that if the defendant proposed to prove work done which was not within the contracts, he must first put in the written contracts to shew what work was within them. The contracts being produced, appeared to be unstamped; but the counsel contended that the judge might still look at them, and admit such parol evidence as had no relation to them. This the learned judge refused to do, and upon a motion for a new trial, the Court of Exchequer held that he was right. The case of R. v. Pendleton was mainly relied upon in support of the motion, but Mr. Baron Parke stated that the case of Vincent v. Cole must be considered as overruling the dictum of Bayley, J. in R. v. Pendleton, and all the Court declared the practice to be now fully established. In the course of the judgments both of Lord Abinger and Mr. Baron Parke, there are strong general observations as to the inadmissibility of unstamped instruments, which must be taken as applied only to the class of cases then under their consideration, and not as affecting that other class of cases which was discussed by the Court in Williams v. Gerry.

To that latter class belongs the case of Smart v. Nokes (7 Scott, N.R. 786). That was an action of debt, for money lent, interest, and on an account stated; to which the defendant pleaded "never indebted" and payment. At the trial a memorandum was put in, by which it appeared that the defendant had been indebted to the plaintiff in a sum of 1,000*l.*, but that he had paid 500*l.* in cash and the residue of the debt with four months' interest at 20*l.* per cent. by a bill for 533*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* That bill was drawn on a wrong stamp and was dishonoured; and it was offered in evidence by the plaintiff to shew by anticipation the real nature of the transaction, and to remove the inference that the whole debt had been satisfied. The evidence having been rejected, a motion was made for a new trial and granted on that ground. All the cases were brought under the notice of the Court, and with the exception of Mr. Justice Cresswell, none of the judges felt even a doubt as to the admissibility of the instrument. The Lord Chief Justice in the course of his judgment used these words:—"What the plaintiff had in view in offering this bill in evidence was not to shew that the bill mentioned in the memorandum was 'good, useful, or available in law,' but that the statement as to the bill was false in fact, and that that which purported to be a bill of exchange was altogether unproductive and unavailable, a mere piece of waste paper." The learned judge then distinguished the case of Sweeting v. Halse, which he considered "the strongest case against the plaintiff," by saying that "there the very purpose of offering the new bill in evidence was to shew an existing contract, not to shew that the unstamped instrument was altogether unavailable, as here." The other judges, relying principally on Williams v. Gerry, agreed with his lordship; although Mr. Justice Cresswell could not "think the point was free from difficulty."

It may now therefore we think be safely stated as the result of all these cases, that that test which we have already mentioned is the true one; that for the purpose of defeating an instrument subject to the stamp laws, for the purpose of shewing it wholly void and inoperative, and for such purpose only, it may be received in evidence though not stamped; and that it is incorrect to say, as in Gregory v. Frazer, that for collateral purposes generally, or, as in Rex v. Pendleton, for the particular purpose of seeing what is not mentioned in it, it is at all admissible in evidence. These cases may be conveniently noted in 3 Stark. on Evid. 1058; Roscoe, 154.

NECROLOGY.

DEATH OF SIR WILLIAM WEBB FOLLETT.

(From The Times.)

Few men of feeble constitution undertake the arduous duties which devolve upon a member of the common law bar; and it almost always happens that the Attorney-General is a man in the full vigour of life. The death of any one holding that high office is therefore an event of very rare occurrence, and since the Revolution is actually unparalleled, with the single exception of Mr. Wallace, who died in 1783. This great public functionary is ex officio head of the bar; but it does not necessarily follow that he is the most distinguished man in the profession; Sir W. Follett, however, was not only the most eminent lawyer of the present day, but a man who had acquired a much higher reputation than usually belongs even to the first member of the bar. He had surpassed his contemporaries in so extraordinary a degree, that his merits, power, and authority as an adviser and an advocate, were never estimated by ordinary rules, or rewarded in the proportion and manner of other men. The events, then, which formed, or at least modified, such an intellect possess an interest deeper and more enduring than commonly attaches to the history of the man who for the time being happens to be the leading member of the bar. Of Sir William Follett's descent there is nothing remarkable to be related. His parents, though not moving in the first circles even of provincial society, were nevertheless persons of much respectability and considerable substance. In early life his father, Benjamin Follett, was in the army; and in 1790, being then a captain in the 13th regiment of foot, married the only daughter of Mr. J. Webb, of Kinsale; and so anxious are the inhabitants of nearly every place to claim for their particular town the honour of having given birth to a great man, that the people of Kinsale appropriate to themselves the distinction of being the fellow-townsmen of Sir William, stating that he was born at the house of his grandfather, Mr. Webb; an event certainly too probable to be disputed on slight grounds; it has been, however, stated on very good authority that his birthplace was Topsham, in Devonshire—the residence of his father. Arduous services in the West Indies having seriously impaired the health of Captain Follett, he was induced to relinquish th[e] profession of arms, and, entering into partnership with [so]me members of his family, he devoted his remaining energies to mercantile pursuits, chiefly connected with building and the timber trade. In the le[ss ex]citing duties of this occupation—aided by the genial climate of Devonshire—he attained the 71st year of his age: his death took place in January 1833, shortly before his celebrated son obtained a silk gown. Although Sir William happened to be the eldest surviving son of his father, he was junior to Lieutenant Follett, of the 43rd Foot, who was killed before San Sebastian in September 1813.

Notwithstanding the fond belief of the people of Kinsale, there is little doubt that the late Attorney-General was born at Topsham; and that that event took place on the 2nd of December, 1798; he was, therefore, at the time of his death, in the 47th year of his age. Of his mere childhood no records have been preserved, beyond the fact that his father—a military man—viewed with much pain and regret the physical weakness of his son William; and was unable to discern in the feeble boy even the faintest glimmerings of that intellect which eventually placed him above the highest rank of the most learned profession. His early education was commenced under Dr. Lempriere, the well-known author of the Classical Dictionary, who was then at the head of the Exeter Grammar School; but, even at that period, the disease which caused his death and embittered his life gave such alarming tokens of its existence that his friends were compelled to relinquish the numerous advantages which attend education in a public school; and he was therefore placed under the private tuition of the Rev. Mr. Hutchinson, at that time curate of Heavitree, near Exeter. As every thing relating to such a man becomes the subject of inquiry and conjecture, we find, on referring to the journals of last year, that a paragraph went the round of the papers, [illegible] liam Follett to an occurrence which took place while he was at school. It was said, that a surfeit of fruit, combined with the effects of extreme fatigue, brought on a degree of illness from which he never afterwards recovered; and that the injury which his constitution then sustained laid the foundation of that malady which has terminated in death. The better founded opinion, however, is, that he laboured under a strong predisposition to an affection of the spine, and that severe intellectual labour developed causes of disease which otherwise might long have remained dormant. He had scarcely entered his 16th year when he proceeded to Trinity College, Cambridge; and [in 18]18 took the degree of B.A. Generally speaking, successful lawyers have been distinguished men at college; but to this rule, the soundness of which is attested by many living examples, Sir William Follett was a memorable exception. He passed through his collegiate course without distinction; and when he left Cambridge his chief acquisition was the affectionate esteem of every man whose friendship was worth possessing. It has often been observed that Liberalism in politics prevails more at Cambridge than at Oxford; and there is no doubt that when Sir William was at the university his opinions partook very little of Toryism. A fellow-student who met him shortly after he entered Parliament taxed him with a desertion of his old principles, to which Mr. Follett replied that his joining the Tories in the days of their adversity was at least disinterested. The Whigs were then in the heyday of power and popularity, and there can be no doubt that he might at once have obtained from their sense of self-interest the highest patronage to which so young a man could aspire. It is well known that overtures were made to him by the ministry of that day. But the earlier part of his career now more immediately demands our attention. The want of physical strength, the absence of a good school education, and the early age at which he went to Cambridge, may account for his quitting the university without much eclat. Besides that, he turned his attention away from university pursuits, and towards the profession of the law, at an almost incredibly early age; and, if the dates on which this statement is founded did not rest upon good authority, we should be inclined to suspect that there might be some mistake. In Michaelmas Term, 1814, he became a member of the Inner Temple, and imbibed the earlier part of his professional education under Mr. Robert Bayly and the late Mr. Godfrey Sykes. It was not the mistaken admiration of friends, for his father had greatly underrated him; nor the influence of powerful connections, for he had none, which could have induced him to incur the hazards of that great intellectual lottery—the bar; on the contrary, he was evidently prompted to this important step by the consciousness of possessing a memory capable of acquiring, preserving, and producing the endless variety of knowledge which an accomplished advocate must possess, the consciousness, also, of being gifted with the soundest judgment, the most vigorous reasoning powers, and a faculty of logical arrangement which none excepting lawyers can fully estimate.

"A pleader," in the technical sense of the word, is a man who estimates very highly—the world says inordinately—the importance of special pleading. Many gentlemen belonging to that branch of the profession affirm, and religiously believe, that special pleading is the only scientific part of the law; it is, however, quite certain that a large majority of those who have succeeded as barristers are men who have practised below the bar as pleaders. Under good advice, or with an intuitive knowledge of that which was "wisest, virtuousest, discreetest, best," Sir William Follett applied himself in right earnest to those toils in a pleader's office from which he eventually reaped a distant, but rich reward. In 1821, being then in the 23rd year of his age, he commenced practice as a special pleader. But the current of every portion of his life was broken by the checks and interruptions of a fatal malady. The sedentary occupations and intellectual labour of a pleader's desk acting upon constitutional predisposition, brought on a severe attack of illness, which compelled him to leave London during the early portion of 1824. In the Trinity Term of that year, however, he was called to the bar, and in the summer of 1825 joined the western circuit. Every one familiar with the history of the profession knows that Sir William Follett's rise was rapid; but whether a man's progress happens to be slow or speedy, the observers "after the fact" are remarkably fertile in their conjectures as to its cause, and wonderfully pertinacious in asserting that one individual case was the sole moving agent. Doubtless the career of a great lawyer must have small beginnings; it must have its adumbrations of coming greatness; but no mistake can be more egregious than to imagine that in life a man has only a few opportunities; and that if he only knows how to take advantage of one of these at the favourable moment, possessing at the same time courage to repress rivalry and vigour to retain his place in the current of success, nothing can arrest his future progress. The ingenious theorists of this class who applied themselves to investigating the first causes of Sir William Follett's eminence, have selected a case in which he successfully opposed Mr. Baron Parke, then in the height of professional distinction, upon the question whether a coroner's was an open court, or whether that officer possessed the power of excluding the public from its deliberations. But the opportunities of distinguishing himself which accidental circumstances brought within his reach were quite as numerous as the skill, dexterity, and judgment which he displayed in taking advantage of them were striking and pre-eminent. The late Sir Charles Williams, Senior Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, was amongst the number of those who took to themselves the credit of foretelling the greatness which awaited "young Follett," as he was accustomed to call him; and Sir Charles even went the length of falling into the impropriety of suggesting to solicitors that he very much liked to have that rising young man as his junior. It was natural enough that a junior so learned, so subtle, so discriminating, at once very prompt and very cautious, should be considered by every leader as his right hand. Leading counsel always wished to have him for a junior, and clients thought themselves safe when that object was attained. His business was, therefore, unusually great before he reached the honour of a silk gown; and it is a curious fact, that his appointments as a King's Counsel and Solicitor-General were very nearly coincident. By this time he had attained not only to the highest rank amongst the gentlemen of the bar, but to a station apart from and above the most eminent of that learned profession. Clients would thus commune with themselves:—"We must have Sir William Follett; if he be not with us, he is sure to be against us. Even with the pressure of his other calls, the uncertainty of his health, the possibility of his never appearing in court till the day is half spent, he still may come to the rescue, and even at the eleventh hour give us a chance of victory." Unhappy disappointments, however, were very frequent. So often did they occur, that solicitors and clients, in the agony of disaster and defeat, were in the habit of saying that Sir William often took briefs when he must have known that he could not attend in court; and, as barristers never return fees, the suitor sometimes found that he lost his money and missed his advocate at a moment when he could badly spare either. These grievous occurrences, against which Westminster-hall rang with complaints, were partly occasioned by the paucity of distinguished men at the Chancery bar, to which, therefore, Sir William was frequently attracted, and partly by the number of cases in which he was specially retained as counsel in various and distant courts; for, wherever a great cause was to be tried or argued, there was he in the midst of the melée. The Court of Queen's Bench—that great mart of ability and learning—was, of course, his head-quarters; but the Bench in every court had the benefit of his wisdom, and every Bar the incitement of his example. From day to day he might be heard arguing colonial appeals before the Privy Council, Scottish appeals before the House of Lords, profound questions of equity before the "Keeper of the Great Seal," a patent cause in the Rolls Court, a question of bribery and corruption before a Parliamentary Committee, a revenue case in the Exchequer, an intricate ejectment cause in the Common Pleas, a piece of magisterial delinquency in his own court, or conducting a weighty cause before a compensation jury in the city. These various demands on his time rendered his presence in any given place matter of great uncertainty. But amongst the most remarkable features in his character we find this,—that though he frequently disappointed a client, he never made a personal enemy, nor ever wounded the feelings of an opponent. Those who have passed through, or even witnessed, the sharp conflicts of the bar and the House of Commons will be ready to exclaim, that "this is another instance in which truth proves to be more wonderful than fiction." But the fact just stated has been attested by evidence respecting which there cannot be a shadow of doubt. His temper was imperturbable; and though, perhaps, too passionless to appeal with eloquence to the feelings of a jury, his admirable coolness, presence of mind, delicacy, and quick perceptions, carried him triumphantly through the thousand embarrassments that beset a lawyer's path. While yet in the early stages of his professional career we find him, according to the "custom of his craft," transferring his thoughts from law to politics; and this "change came over the spirit of his dream" apparently at a most unfavourable period, namely, the dissolution which immediately followed the passing of the Reform Act. At that election he started as a candidate for Exeter; but his advocacy of Conservative principles then gave his opponents a decisive triumph, and it was not till 1835 that he succeeded in obtaining a seat in the House of Commons; at that time, however, he was placed at the head of the poll; and for ten years the city of Exeter has enjoyed the honour of returning him to Parliament. It is said that he owed at least one of his elections to the fact that he was favourable to the Dissenters' Chapels Bill; and it seems to be a well-founded opinion that if he had not cultivated the confidence of the Dissenters he would have found it difficult during so many years to retain his seat for Exeter.

When Sir Robert Peel was summoned from Italy to form a Conservative administration, Mr. Follett was appointed to the office of Solicitor-General, upon which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. Of course, when the Peel Ministry threw up office he accompanied them into opposition; and when they were restored to power, in the year 1841, he resumed his previous office. On Sir Frederick Pollock's being raised to the bench, in May 1844, Sir William Follett became Attorney-General, in which office he continued till the period of his lamented decease. During ten years he possessed—as already stated—a seat in the House of Commons. His first speech was on Lord John Russell's resolution for appropriating the alleged surplus revenues of the Irish branch of the established church; and, although large expectations were formed respecting the parliamentary success of Sir William Follett, yet that success fully realized the anticipations of his friends. Scarcely does a lawyer in a hundred succeed as a parliamentary speaker; and those who never rest contented without an explanation, endeavour to account for this by asserting, as they do with some plausibility, that the practice of the law contracts the range of a man's intellect, and circumscribes the extent of his reading; while, the objects of forensic and parliamentary oratory being widely dissimilar, the one occupied with facts and legal science, the other almost wholly with questions of expediency, it was considered as wonderful that a man like Sir William Follett—a mere lawyer, as he was thought—should become a leading member of the House of Commons. It was only necessary for him, however, to deliver two or three speeches in order to overcome the prejudices which that assembly entertain against gentlemen of the long robe. With little hesitation they acknowledged the extent of his varied acquirements, the force and dignity of his style, and the winning grace of his manner; even the melody of his voice was not without its influence.

While the Conservatives were in opposition, Sir William Follett participated in many of the discussions of that busy period, particularly in those on the Corporation Reform Bill, when he successfully asserted the rights of freemen who were doomed to be sacrificed for their adhesion to Conservative principles; but during the last two or three years he had been obliged in a great degree to abstain from either parliamentary or professional labours. The progress of his afflicting malady made such rapid inroads upon his constitution, that for months together he was obliged to withdraw his attention from business, and make excursions to the south of Europe. But, as organic affections of this nature—though the sufferings of the patient may be mitigated—never entirely yield to medical treatment, the friends of Sir W. Follett have for many months past been prepared for the melancholy event which has deprived society of a most amiable man, the bar of one of its ablest advocates, the legislature of a learned and useful member, the Crown of its great law officer, and his family of one who is understood to have been most exemplary in all the relations of private life.

Just fifteen years ago Sir William Follett married Miss Giffard, the eldest daughter of the late Sir Harding Giffard, Chief Justice of Ceylon. This marriage took place in the month of October, 1830; and the celebrated man whose memoirs are thus brought to a close has left not only a widow but a family to lament a loss which can never be repaired. It only remains for us to state that Sir W. Follett died shortly after three o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday last.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Wednesday, June 25, and Friday, June 27.

BOSCHETTI v. POWELL.

Payment into court—Admissions in answer to affidavits—Infant's suit—Motion to dismiss—Costs—Practice.

Where a suit has been instituted in the name and on the behalf of an infant, of which the infant when of age disapproves, some application by the plaintiff is necessary to stay further proceedings in the cause, but the motion ought not to be that the bill may be dismissed. Where one of several trustees admitted a distinct balance, but the other trustees admitted a large balance, without stating any specific sum, it was held not to be a sufficient admission to authorize the Court to order a transfer of the fund into the name of the Accountant-General. And such an interlocutory order will not be made except upon the personal admission of each party liable to the payment, made on answer or examination. Affidavits in which such admission was made, used in the Master's office for another purpose, will not be received to help the application. Neither will the Master's report be so received, though it expressly finds the sum in the trustee's hands.

This was a motion made on the behalf of the plaintiff, Juana B. M. F. Boschetti, an infant, who sued by Charles Fiddes, her next friend, who was also solicitor in the cause, that the defendants Thomas Powell, Romain Amiel, and Alexander Shea might be ordered to transfer into the name of the Accountant-General in trust in the cause the sum of 28,509*l.* Three per Cent. Consols, now standing in their names as executors and trustees of the will of the plaintiff's father, John Boschetti. By that will all the real and personal estate was vested in the trustees for the plaintiff for life, with remainder to her children equally, and, in the event of her dying without children, with remainder over. The testator was resident at Gibraltar, and his real estates, which were considerable, were in that place; the funds in this country had arisen from remittances for investment made by the executors, who were also resident in Gibraltar. The plaintiff came to this country in 1839, and on the 15th of January 1844, a bill was filed in her name by Mr. Fiddes, as her next friend, against the trustees, for an account of the testator's estate, before the Vice-Chancellor of England. On the same day, but later in the day, another bill was filed in the plaintiff's name by Williams, as next friend, in the Rolls Court. On the 16th of January, an order was made by the Vice-Chancellor for a reference to the Master in Fiddes's suit as to the appointment of guardians. On the same day Powell, one of the trustees, having come to England, put in his answer. A decree was sought, but refused, because no personal representation to the testator had been granted in this country. On the 17th January, 1844, an order was made at the Rolls in both causes, on petition for a reference to the Master as to guardians, and Fiddes was to have liberty to attend the Master on the subject of the appointment of guardians without being bound by any of the statements made in Williams' suit. The Master had reported that certain persons were fit to be appointed guardians, who were appointed accordingly. Fiddes's cause was afterwards transferred to the Rolls. The defendant Powell, who answered separately from his co-trustees, admitted that he and his connections in Gibraltar had from time to time remitted to England various sums of money, belonging to the testator's estate, to be invested, the particulars of which he could not state in the absence of papers, but that there was then standing in his name, and that of his co-trustees, the sum of 28,509*l.* Three per Cent. Consols. The other trustees stated they believed that there was standing in their names, jointly with that of their co-trustee Powell, a large sum of money, but they did not state any definite amount. The Master of the Rolls decided that there was no sufficient admission by all the trustees that any particular amount was standing in their names, to authorize the Court to direct the fund to be transferred on an interlocutory application. From that decision Fiddes, in his suit on the behalf of the infant, appealed; and he gave the defendants notice that upon the motion he would read the affidavits of the defendants used before the Master upon the reference for appointing guardians, and the Master's report on that occasion.

Lowndes and Torriano, for the plaintiff, were about to open the motion, when

Wakefield and Rogers objected that the motion could not be heard, because on the 16th of June instant the plaintiff attained her majority, and on the following day served on Mr. Fiddes a notice that she repudiated the suit, and required him not to proceed with it.

Lowndes cited 1 Smith's Chancery Prac. 167, and Anon. (4 Mad. 461), to shew that it was necessary for the infant to move to dismiss the bill, and that until she had done so the cause must proceed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR held that some application on the part of the infant was required, and that as the cause was properly constituted the motion should go on.

Lowndes and Torriano then contended that they were entitled to read the affidavits used before the Master which contained a distinct admission by the defendants Amiel and Shea of the amount of the fund, and they referred to Quarrel v. Beckford (14 Ves. 177); —— v. Buchall (24 July, 18 5), before Lord Eldon, C. cited in 2 Mad. Prac. 521, 3rd ed.

Wakefield, contrà, cited Black v. Creighton (2 Molloy, 554).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—An incidental admission, where the defendant's attention was directed to another point, cannot be used in aid of the answer.

Lowndes then proposed to read the Master's report, in which he found that the sum sought to be transferred was standing in the names of the defendants the executors.

Wakefield and Rogers contended that no evidence was admissible to bring money into court in this stage of the cause, except admission by the defendant in an answer or examination. They also contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the order, because the plaintiff having become of age and repudiated the suit, it was, in fact, an application by a stranger. The office of next friend has ceased.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Is she an actor in any way?

Rogers.—We appear as her counsel, instructed by her solicitor, to object to the suit proceeding.

Lowndes referred to Ballard v. White (2 Hare, 158); Macpherson on Infants, 152.

Wakefield cited Acres v. Little (7 Sim. 138); Guy v. Guy (2 Beavan, 460).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is an application for payment of money into court for her benefit. Will the Court direct it now she is of age and does not wish it to be done?

JUDGMENT.

Friday, June 27.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—A suit having been instituted by a next friend, an application was made in that suit to transfer stock which was standing in the names of three of the defendants, who are trustees, into the name of the Accountant-General, in trust in the cause. This was opposed on two grounds. First, it was stated that the infant, on whose behalf the suit had been instituted, was now of age, and she has repudiated the suit. She came of age on the 16th of June, and on the following day served a notice on the next friend, who is the solicitor in the cause, of the fact of her having become of age; that the suit had been instituted without her knowledge or authority, and requiring him to abstain from further prosecuting it. This is stated by the defendant in answer to the motion. The question is, whether, under these circumstances, I ought to grant the motion.

It is quite clear that when the plaintiff comes of age she may either adopt or repudiate the suit. If the plaintiff should adopt the suit, or even if she do not repudiate it, but assents to its proceeding, she will become liable to all the costs, past as well as future, of the suit; but if she repudiates the suit, she is not liable for any costs, and upon very good grounds; for the suit may have been instituted without her knowledge or approbation.

The question is, what course the plaintiff, who repudiates the suit, should take. It was said that she ought to apply to dismiss the bill; but if she should do so, it is possible that the Court may saddle her with costs. It is not necessary, therefore, that she should apply to have the bill dismissed; but she may apply to the Court in some summary way, in order to call upon the plaintiff's solicitor not to take any other step in the cause. That has to some extent been done in this instance by the notice. On the infant coming of age the cause becomes her cause, and she has a right to abandon it; but if she pleases to proceed with the cause, the next friend becomes merely her agent. The only question is, whether the course which has been adopted in the cause is sufficient to prevent it being proceeded with, or whether a distinct application ought to be made. It may be doubtful whether the mere notice is a sufficient answer to this motion. I think a distinct application ought to be made. But the solicitor ought not to proceed after such a notice; but if he does, the plaintiff, the late infant, may make an application to stay all proceedings in the cause. Still I shall not proceed with the motion, and if the next friend has any thing to say to the contrary, it must be specially brought under my notice. The motion must stand over, to give the plaintiff, the late infant, an opportunity of making some application. It is clear that the infant, on coming of age, need not move to dismiss the bill, notwithstanding the anonymous case in Maddocks; and my opinion on that case is confirmed by the note in Beames on Costs.

Upon the other point, the answers are not a sufficient admission of a balance in order to have the fund brought into court. They admit it in this manner: one of the trustees states that a particular sum is standing in the names of himself and his co-trustees; and the two other trustees admit that a large balance is standing in their names and that of their co-trustee, but do not state the amount. It was attempted to supply the want of a distinct admission on the part of two of the trustees, by an affidavit used before the Master upon a reference, as to the appointment of guardians. But the parties are not in a condition to read such affidavit. Another attempt was made to supply the defect by the finding of the Master in his report, where the Master found that the sum admitted by the one answer was standing in the names of the trustees. But the report may have been founded upon the affidavit of a third person. That is not an admission by the defendants; and there is no instance in which such a report has been admitted. Then it was said that the report had not been excepted to, and that that was an admission of its correctness; but it is not so; that is merely a constructive admission. There is no admission by the defendants in the report, and there is no instance in which money has been ordered into court on an interlocutory application, except upon admissions in an answer or examination of the defendant. There was no case cited in which such a report had been admitted.

Lowndes referred to the case of Gordon v. Rothley (3 Ves. 572), where a defendant was ordered to pay into court the sum ascertained by the Master's report to be the balance due from him.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—That was in quite a different state of the cause; that may have been founded upon affidavits or upon evidence. But a mere omission to except to the report is only a constructive admission. I have looked for cases, and I could find no case going beyond admission and examination. If it becomes necessary, in consequence of the decision upon the other point, I will look further into it.

ROLLS COURT.

April 24 and May 23.

TOLSON v. JARVIS.

Practice—Order, entry of, irregular—Attachment—Detainer—Discharge.

A detainer is lodged on an attachment for costs which had been ordered to be paid, at the Queen's Bench prison, against A B, then a prisoner in respect of other matters. The order to pay had been carried to the proper office, and signed and stamped with the seal of the office, but by some mistake was not entered. A B moved to discharge the order, and pending the motion the entry was made. Held, that the order, attachment, and entry should all be discharged.

All orders must be duly entered, else they are not deemed orders.

In the year 1837, Major Tolson, the plaintiff, then a prisoner in the Queen's Bench prison, instituted this suit, and the defendant Jarvis having put in a demurrer, it was allowed, with costs, by an order of the Master of the Rolls of the 31st May, 1837. On the 22nd of June, 1837, an attachment was issued against the plaintiff for the sum of 28*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.* costs, and was on the 24th lodged with the marshal of the Queen's Bench prison. It was alleged by the plaintiff, however, that the order had never been entered, and that it could not be found in the indexes of the register-books, &c.; and notice was therefore given to the defendant of a motion to discharge the prisoner out of custody on the attachment. On the 8th of April, before the motion was made, defendant's counsel informed plaintiff's counsel that the order had been entered, and the clerk of the solicitors of the defendant shewed him an order of the 31st May, 1837, marked "entered," and sealed with the seal of the Report Office. It was then agreed that the motion should stand over till search could be made. The plaintiff's solicitor, on searching the books the next day (the 9th of April), found the order entered in fresh ink on the last page of the register book for 1837, and was informed that it had been so made the previous day, the original order having been left for that purpose after the solicitor had seen it. On finding this, the plaintiff, on the 11th of April, served the defendant with notice of motion to discharge the entry, for irregularity, and also the order and attachment, and the motion now came on to be heard.

Hetherington, for the motion, contended that the order not having been entered, was invalid, and therefore all proceedings founded upon it were so too.

Prior, contra.—The usual course is to enter one-sided orders on a sheet of paper, till there is time to enter them in the register-book, and in that way the omission has taken place. But the entry on the sheet of paper is a valid entry, and therefore the order [illegible] valid order, and so is the attachment founded upon it.

Hetherington, in reply. The defendant could have obtained an order, nunc pro tunc, to make the entry, and thus he would have had every thing quite regular. His making the entry as it has been made is an admission on his part that the practice is to have an entry in the book. He ought to pay the costs.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The point is very simple. There is no imputation on the officers of the Court, or on any [illegible]. Mr. Hetherington's proposition is, that entry is necessary to make the order valid; and therefore he seeks to have the prisoner discharged out of custody. I will inquire.

Friday, May 23. The MASTER of the ROLLS.—In this case a demurrer to the plaintiff's bill was allowed on the 31st of May, 1837, and the plaintiff was ordered to pay the costs which had been incurred. The plaintiff disobeyed the order, and in consequence an attachment issued; and on the 24th of June, 1837, it was lodged as a detainer against him at the Queen's Bench prison, the plaintiff being then, as he is now, in the custody of the marshal in respect of other matters. Some time before the 7th of April, 1845, the plaintiff discovered, as he alleged, that the order [illegible] the attachment was founded was valid, [illegible] had not been duly entered, and thereupon he ga[ve] the defendant notice of motion to discharge the o[rde]r and the attachment, for irregularity. [In]quiry was then made at the Report Office, but [no] trace of the entry could be found. The original, however, had been taken to the office and stamped [illegible] in the proper manner, and was so produced [illegible] [plain]tiff, and was then, after such production, entered in the [regist]er-book, and the plaintiff moved to discharge [illegible] as the order, &c. It clearly appears that all the [defen]dant had to do to perfect the [order] was done, as appears by the circumstances of the case. The order, however, being one-sided, was entered a[illegible] paper, and never transferred to the book [illegible]. Not being entered till after the [m]otion, it must be deemed not to be en[tered, an]d it must be discharged, as well as the [att]achment; but I make no order as to [costs. I am] sorry for what has happened, but will [illegible] guard against any such irregularity here[after].

[illegible] [move]d for leave to enter the order as of th[e] [illegible] give a notice of motion for an early da[y], as the [pla]intiff had cleared himself of all other de[tainers].

Hetherington, contra.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The usual course must be pursued.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. RICKARDS.

Practice—Plea—Outlawry—Record—Entry of [illegible] writ of exigent—Return of the writ.

To constitute a judgment of outlawry complete, the writ of exigent must not only be returned by the sheriff, but entered on the rolls of the Court of [Common] Pleas, judgment of outlawry by the coroners of the county is not sufficient.

[The a]llegations in an information by the Attorney-General being that the writ of exigent was returned by the sheriff duly registered and entered on record [in t]he Common Pleas, and a plea being put in to the information that the outlawry was not registered, [nor] entered, nor on record: Held, that the plea [was goo]d, [illegible] it did not deny the allegation of [illegible] directly but only under the general assertion.

[On t]he 14th of January, 1843, the Attorney-General, at the relation of Frederick Engler, and of John Stulz and Samuel Housley, exhibited an information in the Court of Chancery against Edward Henry Rickards and Samuel Walker, and against Arthur Annesley (now Lord Valentia), then and now out of the jurisdiction of the Court.

In the year 1817 Arthur Annesley gave his bond to George Stulz for 300*l*. but neither principal nor interest was ever paid. In 1832 George Stulz died, [an]d Frederick Engler having taken out letters of administration, assigned the bond to John Stulz and Samuel Housley. In 1834 an action was brought in the Common Pleas to recover the moneys due upon the bond, and the several steps of the process to outlawry were gone through, the last proclamation being on the 22nd of January, 1835, "whereby, as on that day the said A. Annesley be[ing calle]d was outlawed, and the sheriff of Middlesex so returned the writ of exigent accordingly." The information alleged that the judgment of outlawry was entered and registered. In July 1841 a capias utlagatum was issued to the sheriff of Oxfordshire to inquire of the goods, &c. of the outlaw, and the return thereto being too general, was quashed. In November 1841 another capias utlagatum was issued, and at the inquisition held in pursuance thereof, Rickards (who, with Walker, was the solicitor of Annesley) produced a deed of conveyance of the estates, &c. of Annesley to Rickards and Walker on trusts, the last of which was for Annesley himself. The sheriff accordingly returned nulla bona, &c. This deed was made between the times of issuing the first and second capias utlagatum, and Rickard and Walker knew of all the steps that [we]re taken by the plaintiffs. The information charged fraud, &c. and prayed that the Attorney-General, on behalf of her Majesty, might have the benefit in equity of the judgment of outlawry and of the writ of capias utlagatum issued thereon, and that the deed might be declared void, &c. Exceptions were taken to the bill, but ultimately overruled in the House of Lords; and afterwards the defendants put in the following plea to the information:—

"These defendants, by, &c. do, &c. and for, &c. say, that there never was, and that there is not now, any judgment of outlawry entered in her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, in the action in the said information mentioned, against A. Annesley, one of the defendants to the said information, on or as of the 22nd day of January, 1835, or on or as of any other day; and that no such judgment as in the said information mentioned was duly or otherwise registered in the said court; and that there never was, and is not now, any record of the outlawry in the said information mentioned, of the said A. Annesley, in the said court, or on the records thereof, as by &c."

That plea the plaintiff set down for argument without filing any replication.

Kindersley (with him Kenyon), for the defendant, insisted that their plea amounted to nul tiel record, and completely took away the foundation of the [in]formation. They contended also that it was correct in point of form, and in proof thereof cited 1 Wentw. Plead. 230, 250, 251, id. 11, 15; 3 id. 117, 118; 7 id. 66, 67, 77, 151, 3 Chitt. Plead. 854; Tidd Pr. Forms, 261. They contended also that the outlawry must appear of record, before forfeiture of goods, &c. (Litt. 197; Co. Litt. 288, b.); that the record of the outlawry is the roll made up by the Court (Co. Litt. [illegible] and the only proof of the outlawry is the record itself. [illegible], Dyson v. Wood, B. & Cr. 151.)

T[illegible] with him (Campbell), contra. The return of the [writ of exigent is no]t denied by the plea; and if the [return be entere]d, it is sufficient. (Co. Litt. 288, b.) If the exigent be the record, it is not material th[at] there should not now be a record; it may have been lost. (Vin. Ab. tit. Record (O), pl. 5; id. Utlawry (Q. [illegible]) pl. 5; id. Record (B), pl. 10; Co. Litt. 260. [Be]sides, entry, however necessary as between party and party, is not so to perfect the Queen's title (Vin. Ab. Utlawry (A 6), pl. 1, referring to 15 Eliz. 317 b.) Besides, the plea raises three distinct issues, inasmuch as it is that there is no judgment of outlawry entered, registered, and on record, [an]d last embracing all, and is therefore bad in form [and] substance.

Kin[dersle]y, in reply.

The [MA]STER of the ROLLS. I hardly think the [illegible] return of the writ of exigent is sufficient. I am inclined to think with the pleader that [th]e entry is necessary. I could not refuse leave, however, to amend either plea or bill, whichever of the two may be found to need, and this proceeding is the [illegible].

Mond[ay] [illegible].—The MASTER of the ROLLS [stated the] facts of the case at length, and observed that the [jud]gment of outlawry was the only title on which the plaintiff rested his claim, and it was alleged that the outlawry was complete; and it was asked, therefore, that the plaintiff should have the benefit in equity of the judgment of outlawry, and [of the writ] of capias utlagatum issued thereon. On the other hand, that allegation is denied by the defendants, and they say that there never was any outlawry duly entered, nor is there any such now, and therefore that the plaintiff's title is incomplete. Taking the allegations in the plea to be true, we must take it that the writ of exigent was returned, but not entered or enrolled. I think, then, that the allegation of Annesley being outlawed can only be understood to amount to an allegation that he was outlawed by the coroner adjudging him an outlaw; and the question is, what is the effect of that, followed up by a return of the writ of exigent, but no entry thereof on the rolls of the Court of Common Pleas? The writ returned is a record; it is so said by Coke; but is the return of the writ such a record as was intended? All I can collect from the cases in Viner is, that after the return of the writ the entry on the roll was a subsequent proceeding, which might be adopted at any time. But the cases do not appear to warrant that the return of the writ of exigent is alone sufficient to constitute outlawry. The plea, therefore, is good, and must be allowed.

Re MASSEY.

Practice—Taxation—Payment under protest—Application by third parties.

After a bill of costs as between a trustee and his solicitor has been bonâ fide delivered and paid, a third party interested in the fund cannot have it taxed as against the solicitor, after the expiration of a year from the payment of it, even though he may have no notice of the payment; but he may have an account against the trustee.

The words "under protest," if only used as an expression of dissatisfaction at the amount received or paid, have no effect: they must be accompanied with a reference to a ground sufficient to justify taxation, to have any efficacy in reserving a right to it.

The stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, was never intended to interfere with the arrangements between trustees or executors and their solicitors.

R. Francis being indebted to the petitioner, William Cann Kiddle, in the sum of 200*l*. on his promissory note, in 1815 made his will, and thereby devised his estate to his sons William Francis and R. Francis, to sell and pay debts. The testator died in 1819. The interest on the debt was paid down to the year 1840, when the only part of the testator's estate which remained unrealized being in mortgage to one Baldwin, it was agreed between R. Francis, the surviving trustee, and the petitioner, who was the only creditor of the testator, that the estate should be sold, and the surplus proceeds, after satisfying the mortgage, &c. should be paid to the petitioner in discharge of his debt. R. Francis accordingly employed William Massey to sell the estate, which he did in 1841, and received the purchase-money, amounting to 823*l*. 12*s*. 9*d*. and paid off the mortgage debt, which was 604*l*. The petitioner then applied for payment of the balance, which William Massey said he could not ascertain till he should get his town agent's bill of costs for making out the title to the estate. There being great delay, however, he subsequently proposed to pay interest. On the 29th of August, 1844, the petitioner's solicitor, Mr. Spanton, wrote to Mr. Massey for the account and for payment of the balance, and subsequently made other applications. At last Mr. Massey proposed to pay the balance without any deduction for the town agent's bill, and on the 11th December, 1844, he delivered an account headed "R. Francis, trustee of R Francis, deceased," containing several items, of which one was 634*l*. stated to have been paid to the mortgagee. In January last Mr. Spanton had a meeting with Mr. Massey, and on again pointing out, as he had on the 14th December previously, that the mortgage item should have been 604*l*. Mr. Massey insisted it was [righ]t, and it is alleged by Mr. Spanton, but denied by Mr. Massey, that the latter said, if the petitioner did not take the balance as made out, he would pay it over to Mr. Francis, and the petitioner "might help himself as he best could." Under these circumstances, therefore, the petitioner received the amount offered, but under protest, and gave a receipt for it. It was shewn to Mr. Massey, by his own handwriting, that the 634*l*. should have been 604*l*. and he then admitted it, but said there was a sum of 15*l*. rents not allowed for, and deducting that he would pay the remainder. It appeared on affidavit that Mr. Massey's bill of costs had been allowed in 1841 by Mr. Francis out of assets then in his hands. The petitioner now sought, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, copies of his bills of costs and taxation thereof; also payment of the 30*l*. overcharge in respect to the mortgage. Several items were objected to, some charged long before Mr. Massey was the solicitor.

Rogers, for the petitioner, denied that there was any payment binding so as to prevent taxation. The pay[ment] had been made behind the back of the petitioner, and could not be permitted to interfere with his rights.

Toller, contrà, cited Re Downes (5 Beav. 425).

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—In cases of taxation such as this, the matter rests on a very narrow foundation. Whoever supposed the Attorneys and Solicitors Act was intended to interfere with arrangements between trustees or executors and their solicitors? I admit if a solicitor seeks to evade the provisions of the Act by a pretended delivery of a bill and payment thereof by the trustee, the Court would interfere, but there is nothing of that kind suggested here. Mr. Kiddle was entitled by the agreement to an account from Mr. Francis, and he may still have it; but the question is not between Kiddle and Francis, but between the former and Massey. The latter proposed to pay the balance, without deducting any thing on account of the town agent's bill, and on Kiddle hesitating, he told him he would pay it over, and he might help himself the best way he could. This is denied by Massey, but he was angry, and perhaps has not the clearest recollection of what he said. Kiddle then accepts the money "under protest." These words, if used in reference to some other ground which would justify it, might have the effect of reserving a right to taxation; here they only mean you give me too little. It is now asked to tax the bill, the Act being express that payment shall not preclude it, if application be made before the expiration of the year. The petition must be dismissed, and admitting Mr. Massey's want of temper, I nevertheless give him his costs.

LANGLEY v. FISHER.

In this case, which was reported in 5 Law T. 283, Malins renewed his motion upon an amended affidavit, in which the plaintiff distinctly swore that he wished to examine two witnesses, without whose evidence he could not, and with which he could, proceed with the cause.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I grant your order, but you must pay the costs.

CLARK v. HALL.

Practice—Examination of a witness after decree before the Master, who had been examined as a witness in the cause—Time within which application for leave may be made.

A reference to the Master having been directed, by a decree made at the hearing of a cause to inquire who were the next of kin of a deceased intestate, a witness who had been examined by the plaintiff before the hearing in support of his claim as next of kin was, on the application of a person (not a party to the suit) coming in under the decree, and claiming as one of the next of kin, directed to be examined by the Master, if he thought fit, as a witness for him.

This was a suit instituted by parties claiming as the next of kin of Thomas Sharpe, deceased. They had examined as a witness before the commissioners in support of their claim one Wheeler, a parish clerk, the subject-matter of the examination being in respect to an inscription on a tombstone. The cause having come on to be heard, and a reference to the Master having been directed, to inquire who were the next of kin of the deceased, a person not a party to the cause came into the Master's office under the decree, and claimed to be one of the next of kin, and in support of his claim, tendered the same Wheeler as a witness, but the Master refused to examine him without an order.

Fleming now moved, on behalf of the claimant, for liberty to examine Wheeler in support of the claim. The evidence of the witness is material, and the party now seeking to examine him was no party to the suit, and had no opportunity of examining him before the commissioners. The rule of court that a party had examined a witness before the commissioners should not be permitted to re-examine him before the Master, was intended to prevent a party from bolstering up a case if found to be defective, but did not apply to such a case as this. He cited Melford v. Peters (8 Sim. 630).

Heathfield, for the plaintiffs, contrà.—Mr. Hall, one of the defendants, having disputed the pedigree of the plaintiffs, they went into that question and examined Wheeler as a witness in their favour. The result was, they established their pedigree against Hall. Now this party comes, and insists on examining Wheeler to the very same points; but if the motion be granted, it will let in all the mischiefs that the rule of the court against the re-examination of a witness was intended to guard against. The evidence of the witness had been read in the Master's office, and the object of the present application is to make him contradict himself. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—What is to prevent them filing a bill, and then examining any one they think fit?] Besides, there has been great delay, and the application is now too late.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I have no doubt about the case. The cause was at issue, and the witness had been examined as between the plaintiffs and the defendants, but no other person. Well, then, the present claimant comes in under the decree, having been no party to the cause, and having had, therefore, no opportunity to examine the witness; and it is said to be unreasonable that he should now examine him, because the plaintiffs have done so before. It is both reasonable and fair. But then it is said the application is too late. How long is evidence admissible in the Master's office? why just till he signs the warrant for drawing up his report, which in this case he has not yet done. Let the Master be at liberty to permit the witness to be examined, if he should so think fit.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Saturday, May 31.

CHADWICK v. HEATLEY.

Trustee—Release.

Circumstances under which a trustee is entitled to a release on account of his trust, and of what nature such release should be.

This suit was instituted by a cestui que trust, entitled to a sum of stock, against a trustee, to compel the transfer of the stock; and the bill also prayed that the costs of the suit should be paid by the trustee. The circumstances under which the suit was instituted will sufficiently appear from the Vice-Chancellor's judgment.

Anderdon and Terrell, for the plaintiff.

Swanston and Amphlett, for the defendant.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the defendant, Mr. Heatley, and two others, were the executors, and, under the will of the testator, were trustees of his real and personal estate. They acted in the trusts, paid the debts so far as the personal estate was sufficient, and sold the real estate for payment of the remainder. A residue of the money remained, and of this clear residue the plaintiff and his sister were entitled to equal shares, subject only to a life interest in it, which life interest had determined; and the plaintiff was, therefore, absolutely entitled to his moiety, his sister having received hers, and given a release to the surviving trustee, the defendant. On the death of the tenant for life, the defendant required a general release, containing a full statement of the accounts, which would have the effect of releasing him from all responsibility in respect of the estate of the testator, so far as that could be done. The lady acceded, and executed the deed, which was prepared for the execution of both, but the plaintiff declined to join in it. His Honour was of opinion that the defendant was not entitled in this case, nor in any such case deed would be, and was, wholly harmless, but that was another question; but, although a deed was not requisite, and could not be insisted on, it was the right of the defendant, the trustee, to require that his accounts should be seen, and he and his family who might succeed him should be relieved from the pain, anxiety, and danger of an unsettled outstanding account—a pain, anxiety, and danger familiar to every one who had practised in the Court of Chancery. The defendant was entitled to have his accounts, as it was familiarly termed, "wound up," and to have a valid receipt and release, no matter what the form, from all further claims, except so far as his accounts would be open to be surcharged and falsified. The plaintiff, however, by his correspondence, not only refused to execute the deed, but refused to give any release, either express or implied, but offered a mere simple receipt for the money, and intimated pretty plainly that he would keep the accounts open. On the one hand, the defendant was not entitled to a release by deed, which he demanded; and on the other hand, he was entitled to a release in respect of his trusteeship, which was refused to be given in any form by the plaintiff. If the plaintiff would not accept the sum in question in full of all demands on the defendant, in respect of his account of the testator's estate, his Honour said that he must direct a general account of that estate.

Anderdon said he was not instructed to ask for such an account, and the following order was ultimately made:—

The Court having desired to be informed whether the plaintiff was willing to receive the sum in full of all demands of the plaintiff on the defendant in respect of the real and personal estate of the testator, and counsel stating that he has no instructions, and no answer to make to the suggestion of the Court, and respectfully leaves the case to the judgment of the Court, the money must be brought into court, and the ordinary administration accounts of the testator's estate must be taken.

Anderdon and Terrell afterwards applied that the cause should stand over in order to ascertain whether the plaintiff would elect to take the decree, or to accept the money as suggested, which application was granted.

BUTLER v. POWIS.

Specific performance—Lease by tenant for life.

An agreement for a lease upon the expiration of an existing lease, entered into by a tenant for life of the land, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with the ultimate reversion in fee in himself, was, under the circumstances, directed to be specifically performed, there being a part performance of the agreement, and the tenant for life, though married twenty-eight years, having no children at the date of the agreement.

By a bond, dated in 1807, John Bowater became bound in the penal sum of 800*l.* to demise and grant, when two leases therein mentioned should terminate by surrender or otherwise, unto James Elcock, his executors, administrators, and assigns, two pieces of land, which by two leases dated the 26th of December, 1769, were demised by Bowater's father to two persons for ninety-nine years; the demise to be to Elcock, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for ninety-nine years from the date of such demise, at the rent of 20*l.* per annum, with a covenant by Elcock to lay out 150*l.* within twenty years in building a house upon the land, and such other covenants as were usually inserted in leases by the said John Bowater. By his will, dated the 10th of August, 1809, John Bowater devised his real estates to Powis and Long, in fee, upon trusts for the natural children of the testator therein described, and the will was re-executed in 1810. The testator died in June 1810, and the will was shortly afterwards proved by the trustees, who were also appointed executors, and the executrix. The defendant Powis was the surviving trustee and executor of Bowater's will. Elcock, the obligee of the bond, died in 1812, and the plaintiff in this suit was the representative of the surviving executor of his will. At Michaelmas 1826, the two leases expired, and the trustees of Bowater's will thereupon gave possession of the land to the executors of Elcock's will, and they or their representatives remained in such possession until the institution of this suit, and the rent of 20*l.* was paid from the year 1826 to the receiver appointed in a suit for the administration of Bowater's estate. The bill was filed to obtain a specific performance of the agreement contained in the bond. It appeared, however, from the answer, that by indentures dated the 30th and 31st July, 1778, the land (amongst other things) was settled by Bowater, to secure a jointure to his wife, with remainder to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail, with remainder to Bowater in fee, with power to grant leases for twenty-one years. By a private Act of Parliament, passed in 1779, power was given to Bowater during his life, and after his death to the guardians of his issue male by his said marriage, during their respective minorities, to grant building leases for ninety-nine years, to take effect in possession, and not by way of future interest.

Russell and Taylor for the plaintiff.

Wigram and Heberden for the principal defendants; Kenyon, Parker, and Steere, for the surviving trustee; and Beales for another defendant.

The case of Harnett v. Yeilding (2 Sch. & Lef. 549) was cited.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This instrument alone, or in combination with the other facts of the case, is, or amounts to, evidence of an agreement, which is, in my opinion, a building agreement in favour of the plaintiff for the grant of the lease on the terms stated in it. Whether or not the Court shall exercise its jurisdiction in decreeing a specific performance is another question. The principle laid down by Lord Redesdale in the case cited, viz. Harnett v. Yeilding, is said to furnish an objection. In the case now before me, Mr. Bowater was tenant for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male by his then wife, with remainder, or rather for he was the author of the settlement—with reversion to himself in fee simple. He had been married to the lady upwards of twenty-eight years at the time he executed the instrument, namely, on the 23rd of March, 1807, and does not appear ever to have had any issue by her; under such circumstances it was not very unreasonable for Mr. Bowater to consider himself tenant in fee simple of this property. There does not appear to be any reason to suppose that the tenant who took the land from him knew any thing of his title. He describes himself as if he were tenant in fee simple. He died before 1826, the year when the former leases, on the expiration of which the new lease was then granted, determined; and eventually the tenant, or those representing him, entered into, or continued in, possession, that is to say, continued in possession on the former terms. The rent paid on the original lease was 6*l.*; that reserved by the instrument in question was 20*l.*; and that rent was regularly paid, and has been regularly paid, up to the present time—paid to the receiver duly appointed by the Court in the suit for the administration of the testator's estate, and, it must also be assumed, so paid with the knowledge of all parties concerned. It has been argued that there is a want of mutuality, by reason that the agreement is one-sided, as being only executed by the testator. That does not form any sufficient defence, for it has long been decided that an agreement so situated may be enforced; and, if such an agreement were available, there has been a part performance in this case. If there had not been such part performance, a difficulty might have arisen in that part of the instrument which directs that the lease should be subject to such covenants as were usual in leases granted by the said Mr. Bowater. This would have presented a difficulty had the benefit of the Statute of Frauds been prayed, and the part performance been out of the question. Situated, however, as the case is, I am not called on to consider that point. The plaintiff is entitled to have it ascertained what are the covenants usually inserted in leases granted by Mr. Bowater; he is entitled to his lease accordingly; and he must have the costs of the suit, which, for all substantial purposes, is an undefended one.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. CORPORATION OF BOSTON.

Evidence of usage—Practice.

To expla charter of the 5th year of Ph. & M. it was held that evidence of practice and usage was receivable.

In this case a question arose upon the construction of a charter of the 5th of Philip and Mary, whereby, after reciting that lands had formerly belonged to two guilds, and had been devoted to the support of a school and other religious purposes, and that it was the object of the charter to restore them to those uses, it was directed that the lands should be appropriated "ad sustentacoem pedagogi et suppedagogi Scole predce ac Cappelanoz et pauperes predict' ac alia necessaria predict' Burgum Scholam Capellanos et pauperes predict et sustentacoem et manutenocem eosdem," &c. In the translation used by the corporation, the words "Burgum cholam" had been rendered "borough school." After providing for the purposes mentioned in the charter, the corporation had applied the surplus funds in the erection and keeping in repair of a bridge, and this information was filed to decide, among other things, whether this was a proper application of the funds. It being necessary, in the first instance, that a reference should be made to the Master, the question was argued whether, to explain the charter, evidence might be given of contemporaneous, subsequent, and uniform usage.

Swanston and Metcalfe, for the relators.

Bacon and R. Palmer, for the schoolmaster and usher.

Russell, Campbell, W. D. Chambers, Wigram, Cole, and Spurrer, for other defendants, were not heard.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The language of the charter and the age of the charter are such as, in my opinion, justify the introduction of evidence of practice and usage; nor do I think that the pleadings exclude that evidence. If, however, they had, I should have directed the case to stand over to have the pleadings amended. Whatever that evidence amounts to, it will not be conclusive. All that the Court does is to say that the evidence is receivable.

Refer it to the Master to inquire what estates are comprised in the charter, and whether the corporation or the charitable trustees are now seised or in possession of the whole thereof and if not, what has become of the rest. The Master also to inquire for what pur or purpos from time to time, ever since the date of the charter, so far as can be ascertained, the rents and revenues have been applied. Let the Master inquire what property is included in Bragg's deed [describing the deed], and what has become thereof: and let the Master inquire what real estates other than those in that deed the corporation were seised or possessed of as trustees for any charitable purposes: and let the Master inquire and state the charitable purposes to which the several parts were of right devoted, and, if it sho ld appear that the corporation has at any time alienated any estates of which they w l for any charitable purposes, let the Master stat the particulars and circumstances of such alienation The Master to state specially as to the e of any particular lands at any particular tim Let the parties be at liberty, without prejudice to any question, to continue the payments to the clergyman, schoolmaster, and usher, and to the poor. Liberty to apply.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Infant—Next friend—Solicitor—Costs.

A solicitor is not justified in selecting a next friend to act in a suit on behalf of an infant against the express desire of the near relations of the infant: the Court will remove a next friend so appointed, and, where interested motives appear to have induced the act, the solicitor will be made to pay the costs of a reference to the Master to have another person to act as next friend.

This was a motion of the infant plaintiff, by Mrs. Lander, his mother and testamentary guardian, as his next friend, to have Mr. Shepherd, the next friend named in this suit, removed, to make him give security for costs already incurred, and for a reference to the Master to name a new next friend during the further prosecution of the suit

The motion was made on the ground of improper conduct on the part of the solicitor, in making Mr. Shepherd the next friend, which arose under the following circumstances. The infant plaintiff became entitled to one fifth part of the residuary estate a lady named Armfield, whereupon his motl ployed Mr. Elworthy, an attorney at Plymouth, to act for the infant, and by his instructions a bill was filed in July 1843 by Mr. Sirr, his London agent, on behalf of the infant, by a Mr. Carteret, as next friend, to secure the rights of the infant in the residuary estate. Mr. Carteret was named next friend by the consent and approval of Mrs. Lander; he, however, shortly after died, whereupon a meeting took place between Mrs. Lander, Mr. Elworthy, and Mr. Sirr, to settle who should be named next friend: Mrs. Lander was anxious to have herself, her father, or brother named; nothing, however was settled, and a dispute afterwards arose upon what did occur at that meeting, and Mrs. Lander, after seeing Mr. Sirr frequently upon the business, considered her affairs had not been sufficiently attended to by Mr. Sirr, of which she complained to Mr. Elworthy, and not receiving a satisfactory answer from Mr. Elworthy, she wrote on the 5th of Feb. 1844 to withdraw her retainer from him, and requested him to send in his bill of costs, and also to instruct Mr. Sirr to deliver up the papers relating to the suit to her: Mr. Elworthy did not attend to her instructions, whereupo Mrs. Lander employed a Mr. White, a solicitor, to write a similar letter, and also a Mr. Bridgeman, a solicitor, to make the same application; all which applications Mr. Elworthy answered by frivolous excuses, but never either sent in his bill of costs, or instructed Mr. Sirr to deliver up the papers; at length Mr. White writes a peremptory letter, by Mrs. Lander's instructions, that he was not to act further in the suit, and demanded his bill of costs and the papers; the day following this letter Mr. Elworthy obtains an order in the suit to amend the bill, and on the 8th of March, 1844, the bill is amended by him, making a Mr. Shepherd the next friend of the infant, without consulting Mrs. Lander. Mr. Shepherd was a friend of Mr. Elworthy, and tter stranger to Mrs. Lander. Upon Mrs. Lander hearing of the amendment, Mr. Bridgeman, her solicitor, writes to Mr. Elworthy, on the 2nd of August, 1844, to have Mr. Shepherd's address, that Mrs. Lander might communicate with him; Mr. Elworthy refuses to give Mr. Shepherd's address, stating that it was quite unnecessary, and that he could justify all he had done. Mr. Bridgeman, from ill-health, gives up the management of Mrs. Lander's affairs, when she employs a Mr. Smith, a solicitor, and in January 1845 he writes to Mr. Elworthy, stating that the suit being in the name of a stranger to Mrs. Lander, she wishes all further proceedings to be stopped; to which Mr. Elworthy answers by merely guaranteeing the respectability of Mr. Shepherd. No further steps were taken by Mrs. Lander until this motion was filed in May 1845: in form, as originally filed, it was the motion of Mrs. Lander, who was no party to the suit, and was in substance the same as the motion in Nalder v. Hawkins (2 Mylne & Keen, 243): that being of a similar nature was used as a precedent.

Romilly and Mylne for Mrs. Lander.

Wilcox for the infant, his next friend Mr. Shepherd, and Mr. Elworthy.

Cairns and Collins for other parties in the suit.

On the motion coming on for hearing, Wilcox took objections—first, that no notice had been served on the next friend or other parties; second, that the motion was wrong in form, it being framed as the motion of Mrs. Lander on behalf of the infant plaintiff, and not the motion of the infant by Mrs. Lander as his next friend. Mrs. Lander had no right to make a motion, being no party to the suit—she had no locus standi in court; all which objections the Vice-Chancellor allowed, and directed the motion to stand over, that notice might be served on Mr. Shepherd, and to be amended by making it the motion of the infant plaintiff. The motion was amended as directed by the Court, and was amended in addition by asking that Mr. Shepherd might be ordered to give security for costs, which was not asked in the original motion. When the amended motion came on for hearing, Wilcox took objection that the Court had not ordered the motion to be amended by asking security for costs against Mr. Shepherd, and that therefore the amendment was irregular; the Court, however, overruled the objection, and directed the motion to proceed.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This is an application to remove a next friend by an infant plaintiff. The ground of the application is not that this suit was improperly instituted, or that there was any misconduct in the next friend; but it was said there had been, and it appeared on the face of the proceedings, that delay had occurred in the prosecution of this suit. I considered there was no ground for charging that delay against the next friend, and I do not wish by any observations to appear to impeach the conduct of Mr. Shepherd in any way, but that the solicitor of the next friend is not a person who ought to have the conduct of this suit. The question before me is, whether it would be for the benefit of the infant to accede to this application, and whether that could be done in justice to the other parties. Upon the facts of the case I may state it, as the clear result of the evidence, that Elworthy was originally retained by the mother of the infant, and received the papers from her, and that he looked to her for the payment of his costs; and thus the original suit was instituted, and Mr. Carteret made next friend. Carteret died shortly after the institution of the suit; some time was then lost in fixing who should be next friend, for, after several meetings, no one was named. Mrs. Lauder then changed her residence, and withdrew her retainer from Mr. Elworthy, and asked for her bill of costs and papers. Mr. Elworthy excused himself for the delay in sending his bill, stating no harm would take place. Harm, however, did take place. Mrs. Lander appointed another solicitor; Mr. Elworthy continued to act as solicitor in the suit by making Mr. Shepherd next friend of the infant in the suit; Mrs. Lander applies for interviews with Mr. Shepherd, and is refused; and costs are by all these proceedings incurred. This is the evidence upon which the motion is founded. It may be looked at in two ways; first, that the application is proper to the extent that it shews Mr. Elworthy is not a proper person to have the conduct of this suit; and, second, that it is not for the benefit of the infant that the suit should be removed from the control of the infant's friends; and upon the more general principles I should come to the same conclusion, that, while the Court encourages suits on behalf of infants, it will not encourage them where, as in this case, a person retained by the family, makes this private arrangement for his benefit, in consequence of some pique to the mother. Great difficulty has been imposed by the conduct of the infant; I say the infant, but it must be considered the conduct of the mother during that time. Mr. Elworthy has become under THE liability of the other parties who have incurred costs by reason of his conduct: the effect of removing Mr. Elworthy would be to deprive the other parties of their security for costs. This conduct has arisen from the neglect which began in 1844; it is out of that the difficulty has arisen. Some limit should be given to the indulgence of infants where the rights of other parties are concerned. Shepherd has no interest; he can have no desire to act, provided he can be set right by the Court in respect of costs. Mr. Elworthy's costs must be paid up to this time: he can have no objection, upon the Court relieving him with a proper indemnity. It is right to say the delay in bringing on this motion unexplained. If Mr. Romilly's clients will give security for costs, and the other parties do not object, I shall make the order at once.

Ordered, that Mrs. Lander, as next friend of the infant, undertaking to pay the costs of the next friend within a fortnight after taxation, as between solicitor and client, refer it to the Master to name a next friend, Mr. Elworthy to pay the costs of this application, and the cost of the inquiry before the Master, reserving the question by whom the costs paid by Mr. Elworthy are to be paid; Mrs. Lander to pay the costs of getting the security for costs, because of the delay made in this proceeding, being upwards of fourteen months, altogether unexplained.

BROWN v. PRINGLE.

Petition—Practice—Affidavits.

A petition to the Court of Chancery, under a power of attorney from a party abroad, must be made in the name of the grantor.

This was a petition by an attorney, who acted under a power from a woman named Anne Jackson, the wife of Archibald Jackson, living at New York, in the United States of America, for an order to have a legacy paid to him for Anne Jackson, which was allowed to her under the decree of the Court in this suit.

Anne Jackson was entitled to the legacy in question under the will of a lady named Hart, who bequeathed it to her by the name of Anne Jackson, the wife of Wm. Jackson, of New York. Affidavits made at New York were read to prove that Anne Jackson, the wife of Archibald Jackson, was the person intended by the testatrix. These affidavits had not been filed in court.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR directed the petition to be amended, by making it the petition of Anne Jackson, and not the petition of her attorney, and the affidavits to be filed; and upon an undertaking being given to account, granted the prayer of the petition.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

MERCER v. WALL.

Right to begin—Master and servant.

Wherever the plaintiff has any thing to prove, either to obtain a verdict or to ascertain the amount of damages, he has the right to begin, although in form the affirmative of the issues may be upon the defendant.

A knowledge of a servant's misconduct is not essential to justify his dismissal.

This was an action of covenant for a wrongful dismissal of the plaintiff by the defendant, an attorney, to whom he had been clerk. The defendant had pleaded a justification, setting out an alleged conspiracy with one Grattan, a professional rival, by unlawful means and devices to cause divers clients to leave the defendant and employ Grattan, and the acts alleged were numerous; such as improper production of deeds, and improper behaviour in personating the defendant, &c. At the trial the defendant claimed to begin, but Lord Denman, C. J. held that the plaintiff was entitled to do so, and left it to the jury to say whether the misconduct proved was sufficient to justify the discharge, and said that it was necessary that the defendant should have known of the misconduct at the time of dismissal. A rule for a new trial had been obtained, against which

M. D. Hill, Q. C. and Humfrey, Q.C. now shewed cause.—The plaintiff had the right to begin; for the principle is, that if the plaintiff is called upon to give evidence to enable him to succeed in his action, there he must begin. The construction that would limit this to cases where the plaintiff must give evidence to obtain a verdict is too narrow. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Where substantial damages are sought, the plaintiff must begin.] Here success for nominal damages would be ruin. There is no case of a new trial being granted on account of a mistake as to the right to begin, unless the burden of proof has been thrown upon the wrong party. To the rule above laid down some have made exceptions, as in cases of personal injury and libel and slander. But in fact there are cases every way, and the presiding judge cannot be said to have broken any rule. [Lord DENMAN, C.J. —In Solomon v. Lawson there was no dispute as to the right of the plaintiff to begin.] The following cases were cited: Burrell v. Nicholson (6 C. & P. 202); Curtis v. Wheeler (1 M. & M. 493); Wood v. Morewood (not reported); Cooper v. Wakley (1 M. & M. 248); Hoggett v. Oxley (2 M. & R. 251); Carter v. Jones (1 M. & R. 281); Bird v. Higginson (2 A. & E. 160); Stamford v. Paton (1 Car. & K.) Then the opinion of the jury was properly taken, and the knowledge of the grounds of complaint was necessary. (Cussons v. Skinner, 11 M. & W.)

Whitehurst, Q.C., Waddington, and Mellor, in support of the rule.—The Court will interfere where the judge has made a mistake on the right to begin. Here the affirmative of the issue was upon the defendant, and that is the test of the right to begin, except where the rule laid down by the judge as to libel and slander applies. If the rule as laid down by Lord Denman is right, the plaintiff will begin in every case, for some damages must always be proved. The excepted cases are against principle, and prove what the law really was. The test is, against whom would the verdict be if no evidence was given on either side?—then that person must begin. The following cases were cited: Cooper v. Wakley, Cottin v. James (M. & M. 270); Bird v. Higginson (2 A. & E.); Mills v. Barber (1 M. & W.); Lewis v. Barker (4 A. & E.); Poole v. Rogers (2 M. & R.); Wooton v. Barton (1 M. & R. 518); Reere v. Underhill (6 C. & P. 773); Pearson v. Coles (1 M. & R. 406). As to the misdirection, the learned judge should have stated which of the charges would have sufficed to justify the dismissal. [PATTESON, J.—It is a charge of conspiracy, and the conspiracy must therefore be proved.] Conspiracy is only an agreement, and is not an essential part here. Then it was not necessary that the defendant should have known the facts. (Ridgway v. Hungerford Market Company, 3 A. & E.; Morrish v. Murray, 13 M. & W. 52.) Cur. adv. vult.

At the sittings after Trinity Term, Lord DENMAN, C. J. delivered judgment as follows:—

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—In the case of Mercer v. Wall, the first question was, whether the defendant or the plaintiff ought to begin. It was for a breach of covenant in turning away a clerk without sufficient cause. The question was, whether the defendant, by his plea, had alleged certain sufficient causes; that led to rather a general discussion. The natural course would seem to be, that the plaintiff should bring his own cause of complaint before the Court and the jury, in every case where he has any thing to prove, either which he thinks necessary to obtain a verdict, or for the amount of damages. The law, however, is supposed to be, that the defendant, by admitting on the record the statements there pleaded, which, if not proved, will defeat the plaintiff's cause of action, may entitle himself to open the proceedings at the trial, anticipating the plaintiff's statement, either for the purpose of answering and disparaging him and his ground of complaint, offering or not offering any proof of his own defensive allegations; and if he offer it, it is not the plaintiff's case as established, but that which he chooses to represent the plaintiff's case to be.

It appears to us highly expedient the plaintiff should begin, in order that the judge and jury, and the defendant himself, should know precisely how the claim is shaped; for this may convince the defendant the defence he has pleaded cannot be established, or, on hearing the extent of the demand made, it may induce him to consent to it. If this does not occur, the plaintiff brings forward his case, and points attention to the principal object of the trial, and enables the defendant to meet him with full understanding of the nature, and character, and object. If it were a presumption of law, or all experience proved that the plaintiff's evidence must always occupy many hours, and that the defendant's could not last more than as many minutes, some advantage would be secured by postponing the plaintiff's case to that of the defendant; but first, the directly contrary in both instances may be true; and, secondly, the time would only be saved by stopping the cause for the purpose of taking the verdict at the close of the defendant's proof, if the evidence was in favour of the defendant. This has never been done or suggested; if it was suggested, the jury would be likely to say, on most occasions, they could not form a satisfactory opinion on the facts of the defendant's proof in answer, until they had heard the grievance on which the plaintiff founds his action; and the temptation would be strong to a defendant, who knows that the case can be proved against him, to admit it in his plea in general terms, and offer something by way of general defence, which he knows to be untrue, for the mere purp[illegible] of beginning. Take one [illegible] two cases,—trespass, plea of leave and license. The plaintiff wishes to shew extensive damage to have bee[illegible] done to his property, for the purpose of p[illegible]ving a wilful injury; but the defendant a[illegible]firms, and must begin. It is obviously necessary for him to state some cause of action, and to shew that some supposed license applies to it: he brings evidence to prove a license; when the plaintiff's turn comes, he clearly shews the license set up could not apply to the trespass complained of, and the real trial now commences, and the whole time given to the defendant's statement in evidence in support of his affirmative has been thrown away. Suppose an action for criminal conversation—plea, that the plaintiff had deserted his wife. The defendant then is to begin, and possess the jury of the plea of cruelty and infidelity, and other injuries. He purchases his right only by admitting his adulterous intercourse. What good reason does such an admission supply for conferring any advantages upon him? He makes his attempt by calling some evidence; whether he fails or succeeds, cannot be known until the whole case is closed. Then the plaintiff brings forward his own complaint as to the extent of injury and the just amount of damages, with the disadvantege of first struggling against the heavy charge with which he is so loaded. Probably the defendant has no such defence; but his affirmative on the record gives him the right to introduce the plaintiff's case by stating his infamy without proof, and by proving every circumstance of mere disparagement and degradation short of the fact he has pleaded. It is not wonderful little authority should be found on this point; very few Nisi Prius cases were formerly reported. What was called the right to begin was rather a burden than a benefit: the general opinion prevailed that the course [illegible]lopted by the judges at Nisi Prius was not subject to revision in any other court. I for one can speak of my own impression, arising from an attendance at Nisi Prius as a barrister near thirty years, corresponding, as far as I have been able to observe, with the general opinion of the Bar during the whole of that time. It was never doubted, to my knowledge, that the plaintiff was privileged, and required to begin whensoever any thing was to be proved by him. The simple and easy application of this mode of practice would recommend it for adoption if the question were new, and would raise a great probability that the common sense of old times had sanctioned it as part of our system. It frequently occurred that, in an action of trespass and plea of justification under a right, the defendant claimed to begin: he said, "I admit the trespass, the burden of proving the defence rests upon me." The answer constantly given was, that the plaintiff had a right to begin, although you do admit the trespass, for then I go for substantial damages. I claim to disprove your right in the first place, if I think proper; at all events, to possess the jury of the extent of the mischief you have done me. On such an occasion the judge was in the habit of taking upon himself to decide whether the plaintiff really went for substantial damages; if he did, it was always assumed that he must begin, and the judge perhaps decided this matter without any adequate materials; but he would not have thought of so deciding if the right depended on the issue as it appeared on the record. We are well aware of the decision in Cooper v. Wakley in an action for a libel on a surgeon, charging want of skill in an operation; the defendant admitted the publication, but pleaded the truth of his charge, and contended that, as the said issue was affirmative, he had the right to begin by proof of it. Lord Tenterden doubted; after consulting two other judges who were then sitting in an adjoining court (Bayley and Littledale, JJ.) he decided in the defendant's favour. No three judges who ever sat together in Westminster Hall commanded more respect than those, yet the appeal may be made to all who were then practising at the bar, whether that decision was not universally felt to be wrong, both as against principle and as an innovation. Soon after the period when I was raised to the bench, this ruling became the subject of discussion among the judges; many of them attended to consider of it, and the following short resolution was drawn up and signed by those present, and afterwards adopted by Lord Lyndhurst, then chief baron, by Mr. Baron Bayley, Mr. Justice Taunton, and myself:—"In actions for libel, slander, and injuries to the person, the plaintiff should begin, although the affirmative issue is on the defendant." I possess this document, signed by the initials of the present Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, Sir John Bosanquet, the late Mr. Justice Park, Littledale, Justice, Bolland and Gurney, Barons. Among the judges who adhered to this retractation of the decision of Cooper v. Wakley, were the two I have named the cosessors to Lord Tenterden when that decision was made. His own opinion on the principle, I gather from what he said in Cotton v. James. If ever a decision was overruled on great deliberation, and by an undeviating practice afterwards, it is that in Cooper v. Wakley. An ingenious argument was used at the bar that this resolution did not declare the law as the judges understood it, but merely enacted a new practice, which they thought more convenient than the former. We cannot think this explanation admissible; the judges have never assumed the right of sacrificing the law to their sense of convenience. The balance of convenience might have some effect as an argument to shew how the rule of practice was bad; but their duty was limited to a declaration of the rule, which they never would have promulgated if they had not believed it to be the law. The rule and practice were decided as confined to the case then under consideration, wisely avoiding any matters not then before them; contented with the correction of what they thought a grievous mistake, they excluded from their consideration every other point, and left the practice upon actions of contract in its former state. How, then, did the practice stand, taking it to be now established as to those which have just been described, in ca[illegible]s of tort? The first question seems to be why any difference should exist between the two classes. There is the same general reason, the propriety of first understanding from the plaintiff the nature of his complaint, and his estimate of damage sustained; there is often exactly the same question to be tried in assumpsit or covenant as in libel, slander, or injuries to the person. Suppose an action for breach of promise to marry; plea, the defendant broke his promise because the plaintiff was guilty of fornication; can any reason be assigned for allowing the defendant to begin in that case rather than when he pleaded the same facts as a justification in libel [illegible] slander? The very case now before us raises t[illegible] very same question;—plea, the clerk was guilty of misconduct in the service. On what principle can it be right for the defendant to begin, if the same plea was pleaded for a justification for libel and slander, and to follow the defendant when the very same facts are made the excuse for a breach of covenant? Suppose a plea that the contract was rescinded to an action for a breach of marriage promise; according to the present argument, the proof of the rescission must precede the proof of the contract, and the record, in dryly stating such a rescission, gives no information as to the real understanding between the parties. There was probably a correspondence; the letters which the defendant selects as rescinding may appear to have that effect when presented alone, but the contrary taken with reference to those with which, combined with the contract, the verdict itself must be inferred. In ejectment, the defendant may entitle himself to begin by admitting the plaintiff must recover possession which alone is sought, unless the defendants can establish a certain fact in answer; and so in an action for damages, if the damages are ascertained, the plaintiff must recover the amount, and no more, unless the defendant proves what he has alleged in pleading. Here is no difficulty against the defendant proceeding at once to establish the fact; but if the extent of damage is not ascertained, the plaintiff is the person to ascertain it, and his doing so will have the good effect of making the defence in a vast majority of cases much more easily understood by all who are interested with the decision of it. For these reasons we are of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to begin on the present occasion, and it is plain that the defendant has suffered no disadvantage from the course pursued; the plaintiff, in going forth to meet the charge of misconduct, called the witness on whom the defendant must have relied, whom he then had the advantage of cross-examining to prove his own case. A second objection was, that the judge held the plea not to be proved, because the conspiracy to injure the defendant was not proved; upon that subject the opinion of the jury was taken upon a general statement that the proof of conspiracy was insufficient, upon which I believe the jury agreed with the judge, and no particular point was made of leaving it to the jury more in detail. Now there is some little difference in the Court up[illegible]n that subject, because some of us are of opinion that that alone ought to have induced the judge to say that the plea was altogether unproved; however, the course taken was, that I submitted to the jury the question whether the charges were of a sufficient magnitude, if they were proved, to justify the defendant in dismissing the plaintiff; those of my learned brothers who think the plea ought to have been stated to have been unproved altogether, if the conspiracy was unproved, of course think that the plea ought to have been stated as unproved, though on different grounds from what were taken at the trial. Then there was also a question, whether it was not wrong to tell the jury that it was necessary to shew that the defendant was aware of the offences laid to the plaintiff's charge, and for that reason dismissed him. The case of Ridgway v. The Hungerford Market Company was quoted; there is no doubt about that case, that it is not necessary that the defendant should be aware of the offences, and should prove at the trial he knew of them; because, if any offence could be proved to have occurred before, which would warrant him in dismissing the plaintiff, and which shewed the plaintiff had no right to continue in his service, the plea would be well proved on proof of the facts themselves, without proof of knowledge; but here the very description of the offences was, that they were known to the defendant, and that he acted upon them; so that the plaintiff would be materially misled if he were to enter into any other set of charges; on the contrary, he must confine his attention, under such a plea, to those that are described to have been brought to the defendant's knowledge. Upon the whole, we do not believe there has been any thing wrong, and the rule for a new trial must be discharged. Rule discharged.

COOPER v. HARDING and ANOTHER.

Application being made to a District Court of Bankruptcy under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 33, for a warrant to apprehend a party who had failed to attend in obedience to a summons previously served, an affidavit was read on the part of the person summoned, stating that his expenses had not been tendered to him; upon which the commissioner told the applicants, the solicitors to the fiat, that if, under those circumstances, they took the warrant, they must take it at their peril, to which they replied that they would take it upon their own responsibility. The commissioner then signed the warrant, which was executed by the messenger. Held, that the signing of the warrant was nevertheless a judicial act in the commissioner, that the applicants had not made the act their own, and were therefore not liable in trespass.

Semble, that the words, "any person suspected of having of the estate of the bankrupt in his possession, in the 33*rd and* 35*th clauses of* 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, do not mean suspected by the commissioners, and therefore an averment in a plea that the plaintiff was suspected by the commissioner was held immaterial.

Trespass, for false imprisonment.

Pleas, by the defendants severally.—1st. Not guilty. 2nd. A special plea of justification, setting out proceedings in bankruptcy against John Jones and John Boon, before the passing of the stat. 7 & 8 Vict.; and the transfer of those proceedings into the Birmingham District Court of Bankruptcy after the passing of the said Act; and stating that after the adjudication upon the said fiat, as thereinbefore mentioned, and after the removal into the said district court, to wit, on, &c. the plaintiff was a person suspected of having some of the estate of the said bankrupts in his possession, and was capable of giving information concerning the trade, dealings, and estate of the said bankrupts, according to the true intent and meaning of the statute in such case made and provided; and thereupon, &c. Edmund Robert Daniell, esq. then and still being a commissioner of the said Court of Bankruptcy, duly appointed and authorized, &c. suspecting the plaintiff of having some of the estate of the said bankrupts in his possession, and believing the plaintiff to be capable of giving such information as aforesaid, did by a certain summons, bearing date, &c. summon the said plaintiff personally to be and appear before a commission acting in the prosecution of the said fiat, on a certain day, &c. at, &c. then and there to be examined, by virtue of the said fiat and of the said statutes, &c.; which said summons was personally served upon the plaintiff a reasonable time before that appointed therein; then alleging the attendance of the commissioner for the purpose of examining the plaintiff; yet, that the plaintiff having no lawful impediment whatever, did not appear &c.; whereupon defendant, Wm. Harding, as solicitor to the fiat, and to one Thomas Wood, an assignee under the fiat [said in the plea by the other defendant, "Geo. Smith, as agent for one Wm. Harding, &c."], did apply to the said commissioner to issue a warrant, under his hand and seal, to apprehend the plaintiff and bring him before the said commissioner to be examined, &c.; and thereupon the said commissioner then being duly authorized, &c. then, to wit, on, &c. by his certain warrant, given under his hand and seal, and bearing date, &c. and directed to Francis Order Badham, messenger to the said fiat, and to his assistants, and which said warrant was duly made according to the form of the statute, &c. after reciting the issuing of the fiat, the authority of the commissioner, the summons, proof on oath of the service thereof, the attendance of the commissioner, and the non-appearance of the plaintiff, having lawful impediment made known to or allowed by the said commissioner, did thereby will, require, and authorize the said messenger and his assistants, &c. immediately upon the receipt thereof, to arrest the said plaintiff by his body, and bring him before a commissioner acting, &c., on, &c., in order to his the said plaintiff's being examined as aforesaid, which said warrant afterwards, &c., was duly delivered to the said messenger, to be by him executed in due form of law. Virtute cujus, &c.

Replication, protesting the issuing of the fiat against Jones and Boon, the adjudication, the transfer into the Birmingham District Court, the authority of E. R. Daniell, Esq. as commissioner, and the issuing of the summons and warrant by him, and de injuriâ absque residuo causæ.

At the trial before Lord Denman, at the Warwick Spring Assizes, 1844, it appeared that, on the 31st of October, 1843, a request was preferred to the Birmingham Court of Bankruptcy on behalf of the defendant Harding, for a summons, requiring the attendance of the plaintiff as a person capable of giving information concerning the estate of the bankrupts, that request being contained in a printed form, always used in that court for such applications; but it having been before stated that the plaintiff was suspected of having property of the bankrupts in his possession, that Mr. Commissioner Daniell thereupon issued a summons, which was served upon the plaintiff; that at the time of th the plaintiff claimed to have his expenses tendered to him then, and, upon a refusal to comply with that demand, stated that he should not attend in obedience to the summons. That, upon the return of the summons, both the defendants appeared in the Bankruptcy Court at Birmingham, and were both present and consulting together, when the defendant Smith applied for a warrant to apprehend the plaintiff and bring him before the Court. A solicitor named John Smith then read to the commissioner an affidavit, setting forth the ground of the plaintiff's non-attendance; but declined to appear for him, as that might waive his right to object to the proceedings. That the commissioner then asked the defendants if they had heard the affidavit read, and said to them, "If you take the warrant, you take it at your own peril." That defendant Smith, after consultation with the other defendant, said, "We will take the warrant on our own responsibility." That the warrant was afterwards drawn up by an attorney, who was instructed for that purpose by the defendants, and signed by the com that it was left on the table before the commissioner, and Badham, the messenger, directed by the same person to take and execute it. Under that warrant the plaintiff was taken and brought before Mr. Commissioner Balguy, who immediately discharged him, as being not a person suspected of having the bankrupt's property in his possession, but a witness, and entitled to have his expenses tendered on the service of the summons. The summons and warrant were put in, and neither of them contained any statement that the plaintiff was a person suspected, &c.; nor did the warrant allege any tender of expenses when the summons was served. On the part of the defendants it was submitted, first, that case, and not trespass, was the proper form of action; and, secondly, that the special plea was proved. The learned Judge left it to the jury say whether the plaintiff was suspected of ing some of the bankrupt's property in his posse n either by the commissioner or the defendants; l the jury found that he was so suspected by the defendants, but not by the commissioner; and accordingly they gave a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 25*l.*; but the learned Judge reserved leave to move to enter a nonsuit, or a verdict for the defendants on the special plea.

M. D. Hill, Q. C. Clarke, Serjt. and Bittleston, now shewed cause.—First, it is impossible that the verdict can be entered for the defendants, for the jury have found that their plea is not proved; and, therefore, if they mean to say that all that is necessary and material to their case is admitted by the replication then their rule should have been for judgment non obstante veredicto. But, secondly, trespass the proper form of action. This is not a mere application to a Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter, as in Carratt v. Morley (1 Q. B. 18); but that degree of "officious interference" which, in Green v. Elgie (5 Q. B. 99) was held to render an attorney a trespasser. That case was very similar in its circumstances to the present, and is a strong authority for the plaintiff. Bryant v. Clutton (1 Mee. & W. 408), and West v. Smallwood (3 Mee. & W. 418), also support the same ..... The imprisonment of the plaintiff was the natural and necessary consequence of the defendant's conduct; and although it was the commissioner who signed the warrant, it is impossible to say, under the circumstances of this case, that in so doing he performed a judicial act, which will protect these defendants. They con ted to take the warrant at their peril; and they cannot therefore claim the protection of a judicial authority, which as to that case was disclaimed by the commissioner himself. They were the actors in the transaction, not the commissioner. Raphael v. Verelst (Sir W. Black. 1055). The third point turns upon the construction of the Bankrupt Act (6 G. 4, c. 16), the thirty-third section of which enacts that, after adjudication, "it shall be lawful for the commissioners, by writing under their hands, to summon before them any person known or suspected to have any of the estate of the bankrupt in his possession, or who is supposed to be indebted to the bankrupt, or any person whom the commissioner believes capable of giving information concerning the person, trade, dealings, or estate of such bankrupt, &c. and if such person so summoned as aforesaid shall not come before the commissioners at the time appointed, having no lawful impediment made known to the said commissioners at the time of their meeting and allowed by them, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by warrant under their hands and seals, to authorize and direct the person or persons therein named for that purpose to apprehend and arrest such person and bring him before them to be examined as aforesaid." The 35th clause enacts, "That where any person known or suspected to have any of the estate of the bankrupt in his possession, or who is supposed to be indebted to the bankrupt, shall be summoned to attend before the said commissioners, every such person shall have such costs and charges as the said commissioners shall in their discretion think fit; and every witness summoned to attend before the commissioners shall have his necessary expenses tendered to him in like manner, as is now by law required, upon service of a subpœna in an action at law." It is clear, from these clauses, that the legislature intended that a different course should be taken with regard to persons suspected of having bankrupts' property in their possession, from that which was to be pursued in regard to persons summoned as witnesses only. Now upon these pleadings every material fact not protested is put in issue (Lucas v. Knockells, 10 Bing. 156; Carnaby v. Webb, 1 P. & D. 98); and the defendants are not entitled to a verdict upon that plea unless all the necessary steps in the bankruptcy (as the act of bankruptcy, and the petitioning creditors' debt), the suspicion of the commissioner that the plaintiff had some of the bankrupt's property in his possession, and the absence of a lawful excuse for his disobedience of the summons, have been proved. The argument on the other side will be, that the averment that the commissioner suspected, &c. is wholly immaterial; but that can hardly be so, since the commissioner is the person who ought to decide upon the issuing of the warrant, and before he issues it, he ought to be satisfied at all events that there is some reasonable ground for the suspicion. It is impossible that the Legislature could have intended that all persons were to be treated as suspected, who were merely stated to be so by the applicant for a warrant. The averment, therefore, is material, and has been found expressly for the plaintiff. Further, the plaintiff had a lawful excuse for his non-attendance; the summons served upon him required his attendance to be examined only; he therefore was in a situation to require a tender of his expenses; that was a condition precedent to his obligation to pay the summons, and he could not be deprived of that right by the circumstance, of which he knew nothing, that the parties who had applied for the summons suspected him of having the bankrupt's property in his possession. That being so, the plaintiff had a lawful excuse; he was not bound to obey the summons; and there was no jurisdiction to issue the warrant against him. Upon the whole, therefore, the rule ought to be discharged.

Whitehurst, Q. C. and Hayes, for the defendant Smith; and Humfrey, Q.C. and Waddington, for defendant Harding, contrà.—First, the rule is properly framed; the defendants could not move in arrest of judgment, or for judgment non obstante veredicto, because their plea is a good plea, and, as they contend, is completely proved. The proper application, therefore, is, that the verdict should be entered for them on that plea. As to the second point, it has been established ever since the Marshalsea case (10 Co. Rep. 76a), that the parties who merely put in motion a court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter, are not trespassers, though the proceedings should be inverso ordine, or erroneous. That is the case here; that the commissioner had jurisdiction over the subject-matter, cannot be disputed; and the proceedings of which the plaintiff complains were, at most, only erroneous. The act of the commissioners in signing the warrant was a judicial act, and is a complete protection to the defendants. Green v. Elgie is quite distinguishable; for there the Court considered that after the issuing of the warrant, the defendants had been guilty of officious interference in its execution; but in the present case the execution of the warrant was left entirely to the messengers of the Court, the defendants not interfering at all after the warrant was issued. The commissioner could not divest himself of his judicial authority; nor could the degree of pressure used by the defendants affect the character of the Act. [WILLIAMS, J.—The judges frequently say, when pressed to grant a rule, "you must take it at the peril of having it discharged with costs."] Certainly; and their saying so does not make the granting of the rule less a judicial act. If the defendants were actuated by malice in what they did, they would be liable to an action on the case; but they are not in any legal sense trespassers, and the rule for a nonsuit must be made absolute. As to the special plea, we contend that the suspicion of the commissioner was wholly immaterial, and that every thing else must be taken as found; but that even if material, the granting of the warrant was conclusive evidence of it. It is essential that the form of the summons should be the same in all cases; otherwise the very object of the statute would be defeated, by giving the suspected person notice of the suspicions which were entertained. Then the plea alleges that the plaintiff had no lawful excuse allowed by the commissioners, and that is distinctly proved; it is to be taken as found that the commissioner disallowed the excuse. Then the warrant is set out, and it is a good warrant upon the face of it; for it is not necessary to aver a tender of expenses, or that the plaintiff was a suspected person; it is sufficient to shew that he had no lawful excuse for his disobedience allowed by the commissioner. [They were then stopped by the Court.]

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—If I may venture to say so, the defendants have not rested their case on sufficiently high ground; for my decision proceeds upon this—that the act of the commissioners was a judicial act of the mind; it was the judgment of a competent court, founded upon certain grounds which, whether rightly or wrongly, influenced its decision; but stress is laid upon the language used by the commissioner, "You must take the warrant on your own responsibility," and the defendant's acquiescence; I do not think that that makes any difference; suppose, as might well be, that any gentlemen of great weight at the bar were to press upon us observations which should lead to an incorrect decision, can it be supposed that it would be less the judgment of the Court on that account? It is quite clear that a judge cannot relieve himself from the responsibility of deciding if he has jurisdiction; and therefore, if he has jurisdiction, it is a protection to him and to all who put him in motion, as well as to those whose duty it is to obey his order. In this case I am satisfied that the defendants did not make the act their own, and therefore they are entitled to have a verdict of Not Guilty upon the general issue. It is therefore unnecessary to enter upon the question as to the plaintiff's being a suspected person; but it appears to me that the averment of the commissioner's suspicion is wholly immaterial. The intention of the act is clear, that if the commissioner finds that suspicions are entertained, then he may issue his warrant to bring the party before him.

Ejectment—Limitation of Title—" Rent."

These two cases, with one exception, to which it is not now necessary to refer, arose out of the same state of facts.

Each case was an action of ejectment against the defendant, who for many years had occupied a part of a parish-house belonging to the churchwardens of a parish, upon the condition that such defendant should assist in sweeping and cleaning the parish-church, and the action was brought to recover possession of such tenement. The defence set up upon the trial was founded upon the Limitation of Title Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), and the question now before the Court was, whether that statute applied to a possession founded upon such a service as that by which the defendants in these two actions held. That question turned upon the words of the 1st section of the Act, by which it is provided that "the word 'rent' shall extend to all heriots and to all services and suits for which a distress may be made." Upon these words arose the point, whether a distress would lie for the particular service above mentioned.

Plea.—That the defendant did not make the note, upon which issue joined, tried before Mr. Justice Coleridge at Stafford, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. BILTON v. LORD GRANVILLE.

New trial—Negligent and improper working of mines —Verdict against evidence.

Case against the defendant (lessee under the Crown) for improperly and negligently working mines at Newcastle-under-Lyme, in the county of Stafford, near to the messuage, &c. of the plaintiff, whereby the said messuage and premises, the foundations of which were enjoyed by and of right belonged to the plaintiff, were undermined and damaged, &c.

Pleas.—1. Not guilty. 2. That the plaintiff did not enjoy, &c. the foundations, &c.; and several pleas setting up the custom of working mines in this county, in accordance with the manner in which the defendant's mines had been worked. On the two first pleas issue was joined, and traverse to the pleas as to the custom of the district.

This case arose out of some proceedings in Chancery, and had been directed by the Lord Chancellor to be tried, in order to decide the question whether the mines were properly worked in accordance with the custom of working mines in the county of Stafford. Under the direction of the Lord Chancellor, an admission was made by the defendant that his agent worked the mines "near" the house of the plaintiff, and that the damage suffered arose from such working. The case was tried at Stafford, before Tindal, C.J. The plaintiff's counsel, having addressed the jury, called two witnesses, who proved the damage done to the plaintiff's property, and that that damage had gradually increased, the [mine] had been worked nearer and nearer to the house. Sir T. Wilde, on the part of the defendant, then (at two in the afternoon) requested the judge to adjourn the trial until the succeeding day, on the ground that the witnesses to prove the custom of the county were not ready. On the following morning, however, Sir T. Wilde declined to call any witnesses. He addressed the jury, and in his address submitted to the learned judge, that he must direct the jury to find a verdict for the defendant on the first issue, the plaintiff's evidence having been insufficient to support the allegation of negligent and improper working. The learned Chief Justice, in summing up, told the jury, that as to the custom they must find a verdict for the plaintiff, but the general issue, whether the damage arose from the improper and negligent working, he left to the jury, expressing, at the same time, a strong opinion that the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to support it, and that the verdict must be for the defendant. The jury, however, who had had a view of the premises, found a verdict for the plaintiff on that issue. During the course of the trial, a question arose as to the construction of the admission made by the defendant in the Court of Chancery. The Lord Chief Justice held that it did not admit any negligent or improper working of the mine.

Sir T. Wilde subsequently obtained a rule to shew cause why the verdict found for the plaintiff should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection, or that the verdict was against evidence.

Kelly, Q. C., Godson, Q. C., Stammers, and J. W. Smith now shewed cause.—There clearly was no misdirection on the part of the Chief Justice. His summing up had been altogether in favour of the defendant. If it were said that there was no evidence of negligent working, and that the plaintiff should have been nonsuited, the defendant's [counsel] had not asked for a nonsuit. He had asked his lordship to adjourn the court on the first day of the trial, and on the next morning had proceeded to address the jury. This shewed that, in his opinion, there was some evidence to go to the jury, and the weight of that evidence it was the province of the jury to estimate. The jury had had a view of the premises, and the old authorities shewed that a view itself was evidence for the jury. (Bushell's case, Vaughan's R. 147; 3 Bl. Com. 228.) This jury, selected out of a mining county, was familiar with the proper working of mines, and they had found that the mines in the present case had been improperly worked. A question, too, would arise as to the improper working, upon the defendant's admission. With great deference to the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, it was submitted that the admission did admit and was intended to admit the negligence, &c. If not, it was an injury, instead of an advantage, to the plaintiff's cause, for it prevented an inspection of the mine by witnesses who could have proved the improper manner in which it had been worked. But, looking to the legal aspect of this case, was it necessary either to allege in the declaration, or to prove on the trial, wilful negligence? Would not the law presume negligence in a working of mines which placed in ruins the superincumbent houses, unless such a working were founded upon and justified by a peculiar custom? The action would lie in this case if the terms "negligently and improperly" had been struck out of the declaration. The cause of action consisted of the damage done to the plaintiff's property, not in the negligent working of the defendant's own mine, which he was entitled to work negligently or in whatever way he pleased, if he did no injury to his neighbours. If this view were correct, the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence on the trial—if it were insufficient—to support the negligent working of the mine would afford no ground for a new trial; and in support of this view the authorities were numerous and conclusive. (Wyatt v. Harrison, 3 B. & Ad. 876; Dodd v. Holme, 1 Ad. & E. 493; Partridge v. Scott, 3 M. & W. 220; Stansell v. Jollard, 1 Sel. N. P. 10th ed. 435; Trowerd v. Chadwick, 3 B. N. C. 334; in error, 6 B. N. C. 1; and a Nisi Prius case not reported, Mansfield v. Gressel, tried at Guildhall at the sittings after last Term, per Coltman, J.) That the allegation in this, as in all actions of tort, was severable, would scarcely be disputed; but the cases on the point were all collected in the 1st vol. of Starkie on Evidence, 442, 3rd ed. If the Court, however, were of opinion that the rule must be made absolute, it must be upon payment of costs.

Sir T. Wilde, Talfourd, Serjt. and Ellis submitted that the rule must be made absolute, and they hoped, under the circumstances of this case, without the payment of costs. They supported the rule upon one of two grounds; either that the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas had in his summing up stated that which clearly amounted to an intimation that the jury should find a verdict for the defendant, and in that case that the verdict was perverse; or that he had not given such an intimation, and then, that the omission so to do amounted to a misdirection. The parties had gone down to try the question of negligent working, and to that question they were now restricted. Upon the negligent working the plaintiff's counsel had insisted in his very strong address to the jury. Upon that point the learned judge had summed up, and the jury had given their verdict. The Court therefore would now say whether that verdict should stand, and would not be led away to another question which had not been raised at the trial. They were not now called upon to argue the effect of the declaration. They were bound by the view with which the case had been tried. They, however, submitted that proof of positive negligence was necessary for the maintenance of this action. In all the cases mentioned on the other side, the houses or property had existed antecedently to the working of the mine; but here, the mine in question had had been worked long before the plaintiff's house had been in existence. Undoubtedly, a man was bound so to use his own property as not to interfere with the rights of his neighbour, and the defendant here was bound so to work his mine as not to interfere with the due enjoyment of the owners of the houses whose rights had been vested prior to the commencement of his operations. But was a man bound so to work his mine that the surface of the land should be capable of bearing any weight which the proprietors of the surface chose to put upon it? Was the owner of a mine compellable by law to be for ever altering his mode of working and managing his own property to suit the convenience and interests of those who possessed the super-jacent soil? or was he to be deprived of the profits derivable from its proper working in order that additional profits might flow into the pockets of his neighbours? For such a proposition no principle of law and no authority could be quoted, and it was opposed to reason and to public policy. (They referred to the cases conveniently collected in the 2nd vol. of Williams's Saunders, last ed. p. 400.) The evidence, then, necessary to support the plaintiff's case failed him upon the trial. It surely could not be meant that a view by the jury was of itself sufficient evidence. [PATTESON, J. If there was no evidence to go to the jury, why did you not ask for a nonsuit?] The defendant's counsel was unwilling to leave unanswered the strong and exaggerated address of the counsel on the other side. It had produced a deep impression in the county, and it was most desirable to remove a belief that the noble defendant, who was a lessee under the Crown, had in his working of these mines been utterly indifferent to the lives of the inhabitants, and to the existence of churches, hospitals, and every other sort of property. [DENMAN, C. J.—Why did you not try the question of custom which you had raised on the pleadings?] Because the case on the trial had been treated as a case of negligent working; and no custom could justify gross and wilful negligence.

DENMAN, C. J.—We all think, under the circumstances of the case, that the verdict is an unsatisfactory one, and that a new trial must be had; but as the defendant did not ask for a nonsuit, and did not attempt to establish the custom which he himself had placed upon the record, we make the rule absolute upon the payment of costs.

Pleas—1st, Never indebted, except as to 1*l.* parcel, &c.; 2nd, as to the sum of 99*l.* parcel of the moneys in the first count, and as to the sum of 99*l.* parcel of moneys in last count, the same sums being other and different parcels from the aforesaid sum of 1*l.* parcel, &c. in the first plea mentioned, and therein excepted, that heretofore, and before the having or receiving by defendant of the said sum of money in the said first count mentioned, and before the said statement of the said account and making of the promise in the declaration mentioned, a certain race, to wit, a horse-race, called the Derby Stakes, in which divers, to wit, 155 horses were proposed to run, was about, to wit, on 22nd of May, 1844, to be run, to wit, upon a certain course, called Epsom Downs, in the county of Surrey; and that heretofore, and before the having or receiving by defendant of the said sum of money in the first count mentioned, or any part thereof, and before the said statement of the said account, and before the making of the said promise in the said declaration mentioned, to wit, &c. a certain illegal game called a lottery, not authorized by law or Act of Parliament, was, contrary to the form of the statutes in such case made and provided, by defendant set up, kept open, and exposed to be played and drawn at by lot, at and in a certain public house and inn, called or known by the name or sign of the George and Gate, situate and being in the city of London, under and subject to the following, amongst other terms, rules, and regulations; that is to say, that the adventurers and subscribers in and to the said game might consist of as many as, but not of more than, 155 members; that each of those adventurers and subscribers should contribute and pay the sum of 1*l.* for his playing in the said game and the chance of his drawing a prize therein; that the said contributions and payments should be made to defendant, who should be the treasurer; that before the running of the said race, the name of each one of the horses entered for the running thereof should be put on a several and separate card, making together 155 cards; and that all of those cards should afterwards, and before the running of the said race, be placed in a box, and be mixed up together therein in one general mass, and that the name of each one of the said several persons respectively who had become adventurers in and subscribers to said game, should be put on a several and separate card, making together 155 cards, and that all of those cards should also, before the running of the said race, be placed in another box, and mixed up together therein in one general mass, and that before the running of the said race, two disinterested persons should draw the said cards out of the said boxes in the following manner; that is to say, that one of those two persons should openly and as chance should direct, first draw out of the said box containing the cards with the names of the said horses so put thereon, one of those cards, and that the said other of the said two disinterested persons should openly and as chance should direct then draw out of the said other box, containing the cards with the names of the said adventurers and subscribers put thereon, one of those cards, and that the said two disinterested persons should continue drawing in that manner alternately, openly and as chance should direct, out of the said boxes, the whole of the said cards, and that the person whose name was on the card drawn out of said box containing the cards with the names of the said adventurers, immediately succeeding the drawing of the card out of the said box containing the said cards with the names of the said horses so put thereon as aforesaid, on which card was put the name of the horse that on the running of the said race should be placed as the winner thereof by the person who should be the judge of the said race, be entitled to receive from and be paid by the defendant the prize or sum of 100*l.* out of the moneys so to be subscribed, and deposited with, and paid to the defendant as treasurer as aforesaid, contrary to the form of the statutes in such case made and provided. And further, that the said illegal game having been so set up, kept open, and exposed to be played and drawn at in manner aforesaid, the plaintiff and divers, to wit, 154 other persons afterwards, to wit, on, &c. and in divers other days and times afterwards, and before the drawing the said game as hereinafter mentioned, according to the said terms, rules, and regulations, became and were respectively adventurers in and subscribers to the said game, to the amount of the said sum of 1*l.* each. And they then, as such adventurers and subscribers, contributed and paid the said sum of 1*l.* each; and the amount of the said sums so contributed and paid by them as aforesaid came altogether to the sum of 155*l.* and the same were, in pursuance of the said terms, rules, and regulations, on the said days and times, paid to and received by defendant, as such treasurer as aforesaid; and further, that afterwards, and before the running of the said race, to wit, on, &c. in pursuance of the said terms, rules, and regulations, and in furtherance of the said illegal game, the name of each one of the horses entered for the running of the said race was put on a several and separate card, making together 155 cards, and all of those cards were then placed in a box and mixed up together therein in one general mass, and the name of the plaintiff, and of each one of the said several other persons who had become adventurers in and subscribers to the said game, was then also put on a several and separate card, making together 155 cards, and that all of those cards were then placed in another box, and mixed up together therein in one general mass; and further, that, in pursuance of the said terms, rules, and regulations, and in furtherance of the said illegal game, afterwards, and before the running of the said race, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, two disinterested persons, whose names are to the defendant unknown, then respectively drew the said cards respectively out of the said boxes in the manner and form, and according to the terms, rules, and regulations aforesaid; that is to say, one of those persons then openly, and as chance directed, first drew out of the said box containing the cards with the names of the said horses so put thereon as aforesaid one of those cards; and the other of the said two persons then openly and as chance directed drew out of the said other box, containing the cards with the names of the plaintiff and the said other adventurers in and subscribers to the said game put thereon, one of those cards, and the said two disinterested persons then continued drawing in that manner alternately, openly and as chance directed, out of the said boxes the whole of the said cards; and on that occasion one of the said two disinterested persons then drew openly and as chance directed out of the said box, containing the said cards, with the names of the said horses thereon, according to the said terms, rules, and regulations, a card with the name of a horse thereon, to wit, a horse called Running Rein, which had been and was proposed and entered to run, and was about to run the said race, and then immediately succeeding such drawing the said other disinterested person drew out of the said box containing the cards with the names of the plaintiff and the said other adventurers in and subscribers to the said game, according to the said terms, rules, and regulations, a card with the name of the plaintiff thereon, contrary to the form of the statutes in such case made and provided; and the defendant further saith, that afterwards and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c. the aforesaid race was run, and the said horse called Running Rein, whose name was put on the said card so drawn as aforesaid, was, in the running of the said race, placed by one Mr. Clark, the person who was the judge of the said race, as the winner thereof, whereby the plaintiff, according to the said terms, rules, and regulations of the said illegal game, became and was entitled to receive from and be paid by the defendant the said sum of 100*l.* out of the moneys so subscribed and deposited with and paid to the defendant as aforesaid; and the defendant further saith, that the said sum of 99*l.* parcel of the moneys in the said first count of said declaration mentioned, and to which this plea is pleaded, was and is parcel of the same identical sum of 100*l.* to which the plaintiff became and was entitled under the terms, rules, and regulations of the said game, to receive from and be paid by the defendant as aforesaid out of the moneys so subscribed and deposited with and paid to the defendant as aforesaid, and not any other or different sum of money; and that the same consists wholly and exclusively of portions of the contributions and moneys so subscribed and paid to and received by the defendant as aforesaid from the said adventurers in and subscribers to the said game other than the plaintiff; and that the said sum of 99*l.* so being such parcel as aforesaid, was received and always held by defendant as such treasurer as aforesaid, and due to the plaintiff, and to which he was entitled as aforesaid, and in manner in this plea mentioned, and not otherwise howsoever; and that the said account in the said last count mentioned to have been stated by and between the plaintiff and the defendant, so far as the same relates to said sum of 99*l.* parcel as aforesaid, and to which this plea is pleaded, was stated by and between the plaintiff and defendant of and concerning the said sum of 99*l.* so received and held by defendant as such treasurer aforesaid in manner aforesaid, and not for or concerning or in respect of any other moneys or any other account whatsoever.—Verification.

Thirdly,—As to the sum of 1*l.* parcel, &c. payment of that sum into court.

Demurrer to the second plea, assigning for causes of demurrer that the method of determining the right of the said plaintiff to the moneys as to which the second plea is pleaded, as the same is stated, set forth, and described in the said second plea, was not an illegal game or a lottery not authorized by law, but was in fact a mode of betting by each of the so-called adventurers or subscribers in the said second plea mentioned to a small and legal amount or stake in that behalf upon the horse-race therein mentioned, being a lawful horse-race; and also that the said second plea amounts to the general issue.

The case was argued in Easter Term last by Byles, Serjt. for the plaintiff, and Channell, Serjt. for the defendant, but the arguments so fully appear in the judgment of the Court that it would be superfluous to state them here. It is only necessary to refer to the following statutes and cases which were cited: 16 Car. 2, c. 7; 9 Anne, c. 14; 10 & 11 Wm. 3, c. 17; 8 Geo. 1, c. 2, s. 36; 12 Geo. 2, c. 28; 18 Geo. 2, c. 34; and 42 Geo. 3, c. 119; Applegarth v. Colley (10 M. & W. 723); Shillito v. Teed (7 Bing. 405); and Bentick v. Connop (13 Law J. N.S. Q.B. 125).

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Tindal, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was an action for money had and received. The plea states that a race was about to be run, and an illegal game called a lottery, not authorized, but disallowed by Act of Parliament, was set up by the defendant for single subscribers of 1*l.* each, to be paid to the defendant under regulations which amounted in substance to this; that the subscriber whose name should be drawn out of a box after the name of a horse was drawn out of another box, if such horse should be placed first in the race, should be entitled to receive from the defendant 100*l.* The plea alleges that the subscriptions were paid by the plaintiff and others to the defendant, and that the plaintiff, under the regulations, became entitled to the sum demanded. To this plea there was a demurrer, and in support thereof, it was contended before us, on the part of the plaintiff, that the statutes for the suppression of lotteries were to be restricted in their construction, to lotteries of the same description with those mentioned in the respective preambles thereto, at least to lotteries in which an unfair advantage was taken, and that they do not render illegal the lottery in question, which it appears was perfectly fair. We are of opinion, however, that those statutes are not to be so restricted, but that, on the contrary, effect is to be given to the clear words and general prohibitions contained in them, and that the lottery in question is illegal. The 10 & 11 Wm. 3, c. 17, recites the mischiefs from certain lotteries under colour of certain patents or grants under the great seal, and it enacts, not only that all such lotteries, but also that all other lotteries, are nuisances, and imposes a penalty on all persons who shall draw at any lottery. The 42 Geo. 3, c. 119, recites the mischiefs from certain lotteries called "little-goes," and enacts that any person who shall keep any place to keep open any lottery called a "little-go," or any other lottery whatsoever, not authorized by Parliament, shall forfeit 500*l.* We think it would be in contravention of the express words and clear intention of these statutes if we held the lottery in question can be excepted from the operation of these very general words. It was also contended that the plaintiff's cause of action was not derived from a lottery, but was more properly in the nature of a bet to lay a sum under 10*l.* on a particular race, and on that ground was to be considered a lawful wager. We are of opinion, however, that this ground cannot be sustained, both because it appears in the plea that the plaintiff's cause of action depends entirely on the lottery, and also because, even admitting the cause of action to arise from a bet, without the lottery, the plaintiff could not by law recover the sum in question. As we shall have occasion to consider this precise question more fully in the case of Thorpe v. Coleman, in which we purpose to give judgment this day, it will be unnecessary to enlarge on it at present. The plea, therefore, as it appears to us, shews that the cause of action was illegal by statute, and consequently, under the new rules, the special plea was necessary, and cannot be held to amount to the general issue. The defendant, therefore, is entitled to the judgment in his favour.

Judgment for defendant.

THORPE v. COLEMAN.

A bet of 10*l. upon a horse-race is illegal, and the payment thereof cannot be enforced by action.*

Assumpsit.—The first count of the declaration stated that at the time of the making of the agreement and promise of the defendant thereinafter next mentioned, a certain race called the Derby, for certain sweepstakes amounting to a large sum of money, to wit the sum of 4,000*l.* was intended and about to be run over a certain course called the Derby Course, at a certain place, to wit at Epsom, and it was then expected that a certain horse called Orlando, and a certain other horse called Campunero, and also certain other horses, would run the said race over the said course for the said stakes; and thereupon heretofore, to wit, on, &c. it was agreed by and between the plaintiff and the defendant that if the said horse called Orlando, in running the said race, should beat the said horse called Campunero and the said other horses which should run the said race over the said course for the said stake, and should win the said race, he, the defendant, should pay the plaintiff the sum of 10*l.*; but that if the said horse called Campunero, in running the said race, should beat the said horse called Orlando and the said other horses which should run the said race over the said course for the said stake, and should win the said race, he, the plaintiff, should pay to the defendant the sum of 10*l.* Averment of mutual promises, and that afterwards, to wit, on, &c. the race for the said stakes was run by and between the said horse called Campunero and the said horse called Orlando and divers, to wit, 20 other horses, over the said course; and that, in running the said race, the said horse called Orlando did beat the said horse called Campunero and the said other horses so running as aforesaid, and did win the said race, whereof the said defendant then had notice, and was then requested by the plaintiff to pay him the said sum of 10*l.*

Breach—The non-payment of the said sum of 10*l.* or any part thereof to the plaintiff.

There was also a count on an account stated.

The defendant pleaded secondly, as to first count, that certain two persons, to wit, Jonathan Peel and Sir Gilbert Heathcote, and certain other persons whose names are to the defendant unknown, before and at the time of the making of the agreement and promise in the first count mentioned, to wit, on, &c. were playing at a certain game called horse-racing, and respectively intending and about to cause the said horses in the first count mentioned to run the said horse-race in the said first count mentioned, in and about the said playing and as part of the said game, in manner following; that is to say, by the said Jonathan Peel causing the said horse called Orlando, and a certain other horse so to run, and by the said Sir Gilbert Heathcote causing the said horse called Campunero so to run, and by the said persons whose names are to the defendant unknown respectively, each of them causing one of the remaining horses in the first count mentioned so to run. That the said intention of the said persons then caused the said expectation in the first count mentioned, of all which premises respectively the plaintiff and the defendant respectively, before and at the time of the making of the agreement in the first count mentioned, had notice; that the agreement in the first count mentioned was made, as therein is mentioned, after the 1st day of May, A.D. 1711, to wit, on the day and year in the first count mentioned, and was an agreement whereby the plaintiff and the defendant betted the sum of 10*l.* to the sum of 10*l.* being the said sums of 10*l.* and 10*l.* in the first count mentioned, on the sides of the said Jonathan Peel, so far as he was about and intended to cause the said horse called Orlando so to run as aforesaid; and of the said Sir Gilbert Heathcote, that is to say, on their sides, in the said game, he, the plaintiff, by the said agreement so then betting as aforesaid on the side of the said Jonathan Peel in respect of the said horse called Orlando, so by him, the said Jonathan Peel, intended to be caused to run, and he, the defendant, thereby so then betting on the side of the said Sir Gilbert Heathcote in respect of the said horse called Campunero. That he, the defendant, then, after the 1st day of May, 1711, to wit, on, &c. at one and the same time, by so as aforesaid betting on the side of the said Sir Gilbert Heathcote, so as aforesaid then playing at the said game, lost to the plaintiff the said sum of 10*l.* so by him, the defendant, bet as aforesaid, and which is the said sum of 10*l.* so in the first count alleged not to have been paid by him, the defendant, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided. Verification.

To this plea there was a general demurrer.

Byles, Serjt. (Sir J. Bayley with him), in support of the demurrer.—The question is, whether a bet for the sum of 10*l.* on a legal horse-race is a legal bet. It is submitted that it is. The question turns on the construction to be put on the statute of 9 Anne, c. 14. The first section of that Act is considered in Applegarth v. Colley (10 M. & W. 723) to make void not merely the securities, but also the contracts themselves, and reliance is there placed on the effect of the statute 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 41; but it is submitted that that last statute makes no alteration as to the construction formerly put on the first section of the statute of Anne, and that construction did not make the contract void. As to this he cited Robinson v. Bland (1 W. Black. 260); Barjeau v. Walmsley (2 Stra. 1249); and M'Kinnell v. Robinson (3 M. & W. 434). The 5th section only applies to deceitful gaming, and gaming for more than 10*l.* (Daintree v. Hutchinson, 10 M. & W. 85.) The opinion of Patteson, J. in giving evidence, on the 4th March, 1844, before the House of Commons, was cited, to shew that a bet is illegal only when above 10*l.* The second section is not now in force; it has been suspended by the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 3, & 7 & 8 Vict. c. 58. Besides, the second section does not avoid the contract, as appears from the opinion of Heath, J. in a case mentioned in Mr. Evans's note, quoted in Chitty's Statutes, 422. (Carman v. Bryce, 3 B. & A. 179.) The objection, too, to the plaintiff's suing, on the ground of its introducing a circuity of action, does not apply, as this action is only for damages for breach of a contract, and is not for recovery of a debt.

Channell, Serjt. contrà.—The case of Applegarth v. Colley was determined after consideration, and is an express authority that the first section of the statute of Anne makes the contract itself void; a bet, therefore, for any amount would be illegal. If the first section does not make the contract void, then it is submitted the second section applies, and that that section has not been repealed. No case has decided that a bet of or even under 10*l.* is legal, and although the action is for damages, yet if the consideration is illegal by the statute, the plaintiff ought not to recover, and it would give rise to a circuity of action, which should be avoided. It was also contended that the present fell within stat. 18 Geo. 2, c. 31, s. 8.

Byles, Serjt. replied, citing, on stat. of Anne, sec. 2, Smith v. Bond (11 M. & W. 549). Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was an action brought for the purpose of recovering the sum of 10*l.* won by betting on a legal horse-race; the pleadings were properly framed, and raise the question whether such a bet is recoverable in a court of law. In the course of the argument much discussion arose respecting the case of Applegarth v. Colley (10 M. & W. 723), in which it was stated that all contracts for payment of money won at play, however small the amount, were void, by virtue of the statute 9 Anne, c. 14. We do not mean to express any opinion, or to intimate any doubt in reference to that case, but we do not think it necessary for the decision of the present case that we should enter into a discussion of the law there laid down as applicable to bets under 10*l.* the action in the present case being brought for the sum of 10*l.* and so falling wholly within the 2nd section of the statute 9 Anne, c. 14; and, looking to the pr[illegible]f that section, we are of opinion that the present act[illegible]nnot be maintained. By that section it is provided in substance that any person who shall at any time, by betting on the sides of such as do play at any of the games aforesaid (amongst which horse-racing is held to be included), lose to any person so playing or betting the sum or value of 10*l.* and shall pay or deliver the same or any part thereof, the person so losing and paying or delivering shall be at liberty within three months then next to sue for and recover the money so lost and paid or delivered, or any part thereof, from the winner thereof; and it is further provided, that if the person so losing shall not sue for the money or other thing lost and paid or delivered within the time aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any person to sue for and recover a sum treble the value thereof, one moiety to his own use and the other moiety to the use of the poor of the parish. Now it appears to us to follow from that provision, if the party losing shall be entitled to recover back the money which he paid voluntarily that no action can be maintained against him for refusing to pay it; it is clearly the intention of the Act that the loser shall not ultimately lose, and the winner ultimately win the money, if the loser choose to enforce the rights given him by the Act. It cannot be supposed that any thing so unreasonable should be intended, as that the loser, in order to avail himself of the benefit of the Act, should first pay the money and then recover it back; it is much more reasonable to hold that the intention of the Act was that he should not be compelled to pay his share and that no action should lie to compel him to do so. The law, which is said to "abhor circuity of action," is not so absurd as to allow the winner to maintain an action to recover the money which he may immediately afterwards be compelled to refund in an action brought against him. It was, indeed, contended by my brother Byles, that the argument against circuity of action did not properly apply, for that the plaintiff had brought the action, not for the purpose of recovering the money he had won, but to recover damages against the defendant for a breach of his agreement to pay the money. This argument appears to us to savour rather too much of subtlety, and cannot avail here, for the only substantial question in the case is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to the money. The question of damages is dependent altogether on the right to the money itself, and if the defendant is not bound to perform his contract, no action can lie against him to recover damages for not performing it. My brother Byles further cited the case decided by Heath, J. as being in favour of his client. The case is to be found in the note in page 422 of Chitty's edition of the Statutes, and is thus reported: "Trover for a mare lost upon a gaming contract (the action being commenced after three months): it was ruled the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, on account of the general invalidity of the contract, and by Heath, J. there is no substantive clause in the Act which avoids the contract, it only renders it liable to be defeated sub modo, for which purpose the plaintiff must bring an action in a limited time." That case, however, is quite distinguishable from the present. The question there appears to have been whether a person who had voluntarily paid a bet could bring an action to recover it back after the expiration of three months; the question here is, whether he can be compelled to pay it; and my decision in the present case is, therefore, by no means at variance with the decision of Heath, J. A further argument was urged, arising out of the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 3, and also c. 58. It was contended that the action given by the second section of 9 Anne, c. 14, to the loser to recover back the money lost, is an action to recover a pecuniary forfeiture or penalty, within the meaning of the statutes 7 & 8 Vict. c. 3, & c. 58, and that by the operation of those statutes, the right the loser has to sue for it is suspended, and that consequently that right could not be set up by way of answer to the plaintiff's claim to maintain his present action. By the former of the two Acts referred to it is enacted, that it shall be lawful for any person against whom any writ shall have been sued out at the suit of any common informer, or any person other than the actual loser, for the recovery of any forfeiture or pecuniary penalty incurred under the provisions of the Acts there specified, amongst which is the statute 9 Anne, c. 14, by play at any of the games in the schedule mentioned, or by betting on the sides of such as did play, to apply to the Court or a judge for an order to stay proceedings for three months, and until the end of the then sessions of Parliament, which order the Court or judge was required to make. By the latter Act, after citing the former, and that it was expedient that all the proceedings which were stayed or suspended, or authorized to be so by the operation of the former Act, should be stayed or suspended for a further period, and that no proceedings of a like nature should be commenced or proceeded with during such further period, it is enacted that all actions that shall have been brought for the recovery of any forfeiture or pecuniary penalty incurred, or supposed to have been incurred, under the provisions of the several Acts recited in the said recited Acts, for playing or betting on the sides of such as do play thereat, whether any order of any court or judge shall have been made therein or not, shall be and the same are thereby stayed and suspended until the end of the then next session of Parliament, and that no action, suit, or other proceeding shall be brought for the purpose of recovering any forfeiture or any pecuniary penalty incurred, or supposed to be incurred under the provisions of the several Acts for playing and betting on the side of such as do play thereat previously to the end of the then next session of Parliament. It is clear the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 3, has not the effect of suspending the right of the loser of the bet to recover back the amount paid, there being an express exception of such person; and considering that the two Acts are made in pari materiâ, and that the preamble of the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 58, refers only to proceedings which might have been stayed under the operation of chap. 3, and to other proceedings of a like nature, we think that the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 58, was not intended to suspend the right to sue except for the recovery of any pecuniary penalty or forfeiture of a like nature with those, the recovery whereof was stayed by the 3rd chapter of the statute, namely, penalties to be recovered from persons other than the losers. But even if this were doubtful, and even though it should be held that the particular remedy given by the Act of Anne is temporarily suspended by the effect of the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 58, it will not follow that it will have the effect of giving to the winner of the bet a right of action which he did not before possess. The Act is a temporary Act passed for the purposes of obviating a particular inconvenience, and sufficient effect is given to this provision by holding it to apply to those matters which are directly and in terms applicable, without giving it entirely the effect of altering the existing state of the law, a matter which the framers of the Act did not appear to have at all in their contemplation. We think, therefore, for the grounds above stated, that there should be Judgment for the defendant.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

KING v. THE QUEEN.

An indictment for a conspiracy to defraud certain liege subjects, being tradesmen, of their goods, was held bad, for not particularizing the persons intended to be defrauded.

This was an indictment preferred by William Ayscough Wilkinson and Charles Wilkinson, Frank Braithwaite and William Jones, John White and Charles White, and Charles Town and Emanuel Emanuel, against William Henry King, Emily Ann Birch, widow, Ann Dorcas Phillips, and Augusta Ann Birch, charging them that they did unlawfully combine, conspire, confederate, and agree together to cheat and defraud certain liege subjects of our lady the Queen, being tradesmen, of divers large quantities of their goods and chattels; and that the said Emily Ann Birch did, in pursuance of the said conspiracy, fraudulently order and obtain, upon credit, from William Ayscough Wilkinson and Charles Wilkinson, upholsterers, in the city of London, divers goods and chattels of the value of 500*l.* belonging to the said William A. Wilkinson and Charles Wilkinson; from Frank Braithwaite and William Jones, silversmiths, of Westminster, divers goods and chattels of the value of 600*l.* belonging to the said Frank Braithwaite and William from John White and Charles White, wine merchants, of London aforesaid, divers goods and chattels of the value of 500*l.* belonging to the said John White and Charles White; from Charles Town and Emanuel Emanuel, silversmiths, of Westminster aforesaid, divers goods and chattels of the value of 500*l.* belonging to the said C. Town and E. Emanuel; and from divers other tradesmen, whose names are to the jurors unknown, divers other goods and chattels of the value of 2,000*l.* belonging to such tradesmen respectively; and that the said E. A. Birch did, in further pursuance of the said conspiracy, and in order that the said goods and chattels might be taken in execution and sold as hereafter mentioned, order and direct that the said goods and chattels, so fraudulently obtained on credit as aforesaid, should be delivered by the said several tradesmen respectively, at the house of the said E. A. Birch, in Bedford-place, Russell square; and that the said goods and chattels were so delivered accordingly; and that no payment, remuneration, or satisfaction for the said goods and chattels was at the time of such delivery, or at any other time, made by or on behalf of the said E. A. Birch, W. H. King, A. D. Phillips, and A. A. Birch, or any of them, to the said several tradesmen before mentioned, or whose names as aforesaid are to the jurors unknown, or to any of them, or to any other person authorized by them, or any of them, to receive the same; and that, in further pursuance of the said conspiracy, and in order that the said goods and chattels might be taken in execution and sold as hereafter mentioned, the said E. A. Birch did allow and procure the said goods and chattels, so delivered as aforesaid, to continue and be in her said house, until they were taken in execution as hereafter mentioned; and that the said E. A. Birch, W. H. King, and A. D. Phillips, in further pursuance of the said conspiracy, did falsely and fraudulently pretend that certain debts were due and owing from the said E. A. Birch to the said W. H. King and A. D. Phillips respectively, viz. a fictitious debt of 2,145*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* to the said W. H. King, and a fictitious debt of 511*l.* 16*s.* to the said A. D. Phillips: and that the said W. H. King and A. D. Phillips, in further pursuance of the said conspiracy, and in order to obtain payment of such false and fictitious debts, did commence and cause to be commenced respectively, by collusion with the said E. A. Birch, separate actions at law against the said E. A. Birch, in the Court of Queen's Bench at Westminster, and in the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster; and that afterwards judgments were collusively signed and caused to be signed by the said W. H. King and A. D. Phillips respectively, in each of the said actions for want of a plea; and certain writs of fi. fa. were collusively sued out and caused to be sued out by the said W. H. King and A. D. Phillips, upon the respective judgments so obtained by collusion as aforesaid; by virtue of which writs the said goods and chattels, so fraudulently obtained as aforesaid from the said several tradesmen before mentioned, and the said several tradesmen whose names as aforesaid are to the jurors unknown, were, before the expiration of the said respective times of credit, taken in execution and sold in due course of law, in order to satisfy the fictitious debts falsely and fraudulently alleged to be due and owing from the said E. A. Birch to the said W. H. King and A. D. Philips respectively. The jury found the defendants guilty of the conspiracy to defraud, as alleged in the first count, and on that count alone the judgment was entered up against the defendants. The indictment contained thirty-three counts, varying the statement of the case; but as the judgment was then entered up only on the first, it is unnecessary to refer to them.

Pashley now contended that the first count in the indictment was bad, and that the judgment entered thereon must be reversed.(a) The overt acts set out are consistent with innocence, legal and moral. The count avers neither want of intention to pay, nor of present ability to do so; nor that the parties alleged to be defrauded were not actually paid. The indictment was sustained below by the authority of Rex v. Gill (2 B. & Ald. 204); but that case went to the extreme verge of the law. Besides, there the individual alleged to be defrauded was named in the indictment, and Holroyd, J. relied expressly on that point in his judgment. That circumstance distinguishes the case from the present. Holroyd, J. says—"Here it is stated that the parties did conspire, and that the object was to obtain, by false pretences, money from a particular person." No doubt a conspiracy to get goods fraudulently from particular persons would be good. (The Poulterers' case, 9 Co.) But they must be expressly named in the indictment, unless the very nature of the case prevents it, as in Rex v. De Berenger (3 M. & S. 67), which was a conspiracy by false rumours to raise the price of the public government funds on a particular day, with intent to injure the subjects who should purchase on that day; and there certainly it was held unnecessary to specify the persons who purchased or the persons intended to be injured. [ALDERSON, B.—There it was impossible to name them, as they were not known at the time of the conspiracy. POLLOCK, C.B.—In the State Trials indictments are frequent where crowds of persons are alleged to have been intimidated; but there the persons could not be known, and consequently could not be named.] Those cases are perfectly reconcilable with the argument here, that when they can be named, they should be. Lord Ellenborough said, in Rex v. De Berenger, "The defendants could not, except by a spirit of prophecy, divine who would be the purchasers on a subsequent day." In Reg. v. O'Connell (11 Clark & F. 155—234), an allegation that the defendant endeavoured, by intimidation, to effect a seditious conspiracy, was held not sufficient. In the present case the uncertainty of the charge is greater. It may be against tradesmen of any part of England. [POLLOCK, C. B.—Such a conspiracy is possible.] No doubt; and it would be a good charge if so stated. [PARKE, B.—Either the name should be given or there should be some reason assigned why it cannot be given.] Cases of necessity are of course an exception to the rule. They are stated 1 Starkie Criminal Pleading, 188. [ALDERSON.—A person at the Old Bailey refused to give his name, and was indicted as a person now present who refuses to give his name, &c.] In Reg. v. Parker (3 Q. B. Rep. 292), an indictment charged that defendants conspired, by false pretences, to obtain from persons named divers goods and merchandize, and to cheat and defraud them of the said goods, &c.; and, in pursuance of the said conspiracy, did, by false pretences, which are stated, obtain from them the goods, &c. and did cheat, &c. to the damage of the persons named: held bad, for not stating whose the goods, &c. were. Lord Denman said, "Although weighty doubts may be stated as to the propriety of requiring particularity in matters which do not affect the question of moral offence, yet it has always been held that the goods must be described as belonging to some party, or that some other description must be given of them, since otherwise the prosecutor might make an indefinite statement, and lie in wait for whatever might come out in evidence." The acts here alleged to have been done in pursuance of the conspiracy are all innocent. The phrases "of corruption," &c. merely shew the prosecutor's notion. Lord Ellenborough, in Rex v. Turner (13 Car. 231), said, "I should be sorry that the cases of conspiracy against individuals, which have gone far enough, should be pushed still further;" and in Reg. v. Kenrick (5 Q. B. Rep. 49), it was held that Rex v. Gill was not to be extended. In Rex v. Fowle (1 C. & P. 592), it was held by Lord Tenterden that an indictment to "cheat the just and lawful creditors of F." ought to have stated who was to be defrauded. 2nd. The judgment is bad, because it is in futuro. It is to commence from the time of the person being taken. On this point the Court thought the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 70, s. 9, conclusive that judgment might be so given in the defendant's absence.

Cleasby, contrà, said, the difficulty of proving conspiracies as laid had given rise to the generality of allegation. The acts were secret. [MAULE, J.—Not necessarily. Sometimes conspiracies are exclusively in public.] The first part of the count charges the intent to have been to defraud tradesmen. All that follows has relation to that defrauding. It was a general confederacy, not against any particular persons or confined to any place. No doubt, when a charge is made of defrauding a particular person, he must be named, or stated to be unknown. All the cases have turned, not on whether a conspiracy can be charged for defrauding generally, but on whether, when you have a specific person, you ought to name him. [MAULE, J.—Suppose it was alleged to be to cheat a subject of the Queen. Ought you not to name him? Must it not be intended that he could be named? The question is, is the crime stated with sufficient particularity?] Rex v. Spragg (2 Burr. 993) quite bears out this indictment. [CRESSWELL, J.—Suppose evidence had been given of a conspiracy to defraud A and B; would that have sustained this indictment?] The case of Reg. v. O'Connell turned on the word intimidation not being a technical word. Here the latter part explains the former; and Reg. v. Peck (9 Ad. & Ell. 686) is an express authority that the person to be defrauded need not be named. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

June 14. TINDAL, C. J. delivered the judgment of the Court of Error.—In this case, the learned counsel for the plaintiff in error relied mainly on two objections; first, that the judgment of the learned judge, pronounced at Nisi Prius under the provisions of the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4. c. 70, s. 9, was erroneous, inasmuch as it was entered on the postea in language which the law does not recognize as proper for that purpose, and he cited the case of Rex v. Kenworthy (1 B. & C. 711), and the several authorities therein referred to. The form used in the postea is that the judge pronounced judgment, and did order and adjudge, &c.; and we do not think it necessary to decide whether, when judgment is pronounced under the Act of Parliament above referred to, the usual and appropriate language in which judgment is given by the Court, namely, that it is considered, &c. must be made use of or not. Perhaps it may be better that the established words of art and form should not be omitted on all future occasions. The second and more important objection was, that the indictment in itself was bad, and we are all, upon consideration, of the opinion that this objection must prevail. Mr. Pashley, for the plaintiff in error, argued that this indictment was bad because it contained a defective statement of the crime of conspiracy, and we agree that it is so defective. The charge is, that the defendants below conspired to cheat and defraud divers liege subjects, being tradesmen, of their goods, &c.; the objection is, that these persons should have been designated by their Christian and surnames, or an excuse made, such as, that their names are to the jurors unknown; because this allegation imports the intention of the conspirators was to cheat certain definite individuals, and if the conspiracy was to cheat indefinite individuals, as, for instance, those whom they should afterwards deal with, or fix upon, they ought to have been described in appropriate terms, shewing that the objects of the conspiracy were at the time of entering into it unascertained, as was in fact done in the case of Rex v. De Berenger (3 M. & S. 67), and Reg. v. Peek (9 A. & E. 683). It was argued, if on the trial of this indictment it had been proved that the intention was not to cheat certain definite individuals, but such as the conspirators should afterwards trade with or select, they would have been entitled to an acquittal; and we all agree in this view of the case, and think that the reasons given against the validity of this part of the indictment are correct. It was then urged by the learned counsel for the Crown, that, supposing these objections to be well founded, this defect in the allegation of the conspiracy was cured by referring to the whole indictment, particularly that part stating the overt acts, as well as that stating the conspiracy. The case of Rex v. Spragg (2 Burr. 993) was cited as an authority that the whole ought to be taken together. The point decided in that case appears to us to have been merely this;—that in an indictment for a conspiracy, although the conspiracy be insufficiently charged, yet if the rest of the indictment contains a good charge of misdemeanor, the indictment is good. And Lord Mansfield distinguished between the allegation of an executed conspiracy to prefer an indictment, as to the sufficiency of which he gives no opinion, and that of the actually preferring an indictment maliciously and without probable cause, which he calls a complete conspiracy actually carried into execution; and this we hold to be clearly sufficient; and no doubt it was so, for, rejecting the statement of the unexecuted conspiracy, the indictment undoubtedly contains a complete description of the common law misdemeanor. But if we examine the allegations in these indictments, there is no sufficient description of any act done after the conspiracy which amounts to a misdemeanor at common law. None of the overt acts are shewn by proper averments to be indictable in themselves. The obtaining goods, for instance, from certain named individuals on credit, without any averment of the use of false tokens, is not an indictable misdemeanor; and if it is said, because it is averred, to have been done in pursuance of the conspiracy before mentioned, it must be taken to be equivalent to an averment that the conspiracy was to cheat the named individuals of their goods; the answer is, first, that it does not necessarily follow that, because the goods were obtained in pursuance of a conspiracy to cheat some persons, the conspiracy was to cheat the persons from whom the goods were obtained; they might have been obtained from A in the execution of an ulterior purpose to cheat B of the goods. And, secondly, another answer is, that if that averment is to be taken as equivalent to an averment that the goods were taken from the named individuals in pursuance of an illegal conspiracy to cheat and defraud those named individuals of their goods; it would still be defective, as not containing a direct and positive averment that the defendant did conspire to cheat and defraud those persons, which an indictment for a conspiracy, when that conspiracy itself is a crime, ought certainly to contain; the averment describing the offence ought to be direct and positive. The other allegations of what are termed overt acts are open to the same objection; in none of them is there a complete description of a common law misdemeanor, independent of the conspiracy; the allegation of the conspiracy is insufficient, and not direct and positive. For these reasons we are of opinion that the indictment is defective, and the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench must be reversed.

ON ERROR FROM THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

(Before TINDAL, C.J. PARKE, ALDERSON, ROLFE, and PLATT, BB. COLTMAN, MAULE, and CRESSWELL, JJ.)

SOARES v. GLYN.

(Argued June 13; determined July 3, 1845.)

The government of Don Miguel in June 1833 negotiated a loan with Messrs. Outrequin and Jauge in Paris, who transmitted the amount to the government by bills of exchange. Some of those bills were bills accepted by the defendants, and they were specially indorsed by Messrs. O. and J. in June 1833 to Monsieur the treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal. The treasurer-general at that time was M. Conto, who remained in that office till the 9th August, 1833, having been dismissed by a decree of the government of Don Pedro, dated the 7th. Don Pedro expelled Don Miguel from the government of Portugal on the 24th July. The bills were indorsed to the plaintiff by M. Couto on the 7th of August. Held, that it was erroneously left by the Lord Chief Justice to the jury to consider whether, by the indorsement of Messrs. O. and J. they intended to apply it to the person then holding the office of treasurer-general to Don Miguel, and to no other person, and that if it was intended to apply only to the government of Don Miguel, the plaintiff could not recover; as at the time of both indorsements Couto was treasurer, and no evidence of the intention of Messrs. O. and J. was receivable to qualify the terms of their indorsement.

This case arose on a bill of exceptions to the direction of Lord Denman at Guildhall, in February 1843.

The action was in assumpsit by Manuel Joaquim Soares against Sir A. C. Glyn, Charles Mills, and G. C. Glyn, and the declaration stated that the Baron d'Este, on the 4th of June, 1833, in foreign parts, to wit, at Paris, made his bill of exchange, directed to the defendants, and required them, ninety days after date, to pay to the order of Messrs. Outrequin and Jauge 650*l.* and the defendants accepted the said bill, and the said Messrs. O. and J. indorsed the said bill to Monsieur the treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal, and the said treasurer-general, i. e. one Joaquim Fernandes Couto, then being the treasurer-general aforesaid, indorsed the said bill to the plaintiff, but the defendants did not pay the bill when due. There were several other counts on other bills to the same effect. There were several pleas: 1st, That the said Messrs. O. and J. did not indorse the said bills to Monsieur the treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal, as alleged; 2nd, That the said treasurer-general did not indorse to the plaintiff; 3rd, That the treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal mentioned in the several counts of the declaration is one and the same person; and that the said treasurer-general by whom the indorsements are respectively alleged to have been made to the plaintiff at the time when he so indorsed, was not such treasurer-general as was designated and intended by the said indorsement of Messrs. O. and J., but was another and different functionary, and the agent and minister of another and different and adverse and hostile government, and had no title or authority to indorse the said bills or any of them. The fourth plea, to the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th counts, stated that when the said bills were indorsed by the said Messrs. O. and J. and for some time afterwards, Don Miguel was de facto king of Portugal, and by himself and his ministers carried on the government thereof; and all ministers and functionaries in the administration were appointed by and accountable to him; and that before such indorsements by Messrs. O. and J. and whilst he was such king, the said Don Miguel had occasion to raise a loan of money for the exigencies of his government, upon the security of certain scrip or bonds issued under the authority of the said Don Miguel and his government, they engaging to pay to the holders the sums mentioned therein and interest half-yearly; and that the said Messrs. O. and J. being bankers at Paris, entered into an agreement with the said Don Miguel and his government for negotiating such loan on account of the said Don Miguel and his government, and for remitting the same when raised to the treasurer of the royal treasury of Portugal, appointed by and acting under the authority of the said Don Miguel and his government, to be applied by such treasurer to and for the use and service of the said Don Miguel and his government; and that afterwards, and before the said indorsements of Messrs. O. and J. and whilst the said Don Miguel was such king, to wit on the 1st March, 1833, for the purpose of raising such loan, certain scrip or bonds were issued by and under the authority of the said Don Miguel and his government, whereby the said Don Miguel and his government became bound for the repayment of the several sums of money mentioned in such bonds or scrip respectively to the holders thereof, with interest thereon, half-yearly, which scrip or bonds were then delivered to Messrs. O. and J. as agents of the said Don Miguel and his government, for the purposes and under the agreement aforesaid; and Messrs. O. and J. thereupon became bound to transmit to the treasurer of the royal treasury of Portugal the amount of the said loan when and as the same should be received upon the said scrip or bonds, and otherwise to apply the same according to the directions of the Portuguese government, meaning the government of Portugal as then constituted and existing. And that afterwards, and while the said Don Miguel was such king, Messrs. O. and J. in pursuance of the said agreement, themselves subscribed and advanced, and procured to be subscribed and advanced by divers other persons, considerable sums of money, for the use of Don Miguel and his government, upon the security of the said scrip or bonds, which sums of money amounted in the whole to more than the amount of the bills of exchange mentioned in the declaration; Messrs. O. and J. retaining for themselves, and delivering to the other subscribers to the loan as security, certain of the said scrip or bonds, according to the amount of the several advances. And that on the 4th June, 1833, Messrs. O. and J. purchased and procured to be drawn, payable to them, or their order, among others, the said bills of exchange, for the purpose of remitting the same on account of the said loan to the said Don Miguel and his government; and in order to enable Don Miguel and his government to receive payment of the said bills of exchange, when due, Messrs. O. and J. on the 6th June, 1833, specially indorsed the said bills, in the French language, as follows:—"Pay to the order of M. the treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal, value on account of the negotiations of the royal loan of Portugal. F. J. Outrequin and Jauge;" the said Messrs. O. and J. thereby intending to make the same payable to the order of such person as should be for the time being the treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal, by the appointment and as minister of the said Don Miguel and his government, and not of any person appointed by or acting under the authority of any government or pretended government distinct from and adverse to that of the said Don Miguel; and that Messrs. O. and J. then sent the said bills of exchange, so indorsed, to the royal treasury at Lisbon, for the use of Don Miguel and his government, and on account of the said loan, and not for the use of any government or pretended government distinct from and adverse to that of the said Don Miguel. And that on the 12th July, 1833, the said bills of exchange were duly received by Joaquin Fernandes Couto, then treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal, by the appointment and as minister of Don Miguel. And that afterwards, and while the said bills of exchange were still in the possession and custody of the said J. F. Couto, as such treasurer, Don Pedro, Duke of Braganza, with a hostile force, took possession of the city of Lisbon, and compelled Don Miguel to quit, and afterwards, and before the said indorsement of the said bills of exchange, subverted the government of Don Miguel, and caused Donna Maria to be proclaimed Queen of Portugal, in the room of Don Miguel, and with his adherents assumed the functions of government, as regent for the said Donna Maria, she being then under age. And that on such assumption of the government by Don Pedro and his adherents, the said J. F. Couto altogether ceased to exercise the functions of treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal, and thereafter did no act as minister or agent of Don Miguel, or on his account as such treasurer. And that afterwards Don Pedro and his government, in the name and on the behalf of Donna Maria, forcibly took possession of the said bills of exchange, without the consent and against the will of Don Miguel; and the said J. F. Couto, after he had ceased to be treasurer as aforesaid, to wit, on the 7th of August, 1833, being then treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal, under an appointment colourable, made by Don Pedro as regent for Donna Maria, for the purpose of procuring the indorsement of the said bills of exchange by the said J. F. Couto as such treasurer, and being the minister of Donna Maria and her government, a government distinct from and adverse to that of Don Miguel, fraudulently, and in collusion with Don Pedro and his ministers acting for Donna Maria, indorsed the said bills of exchange to the plaintiff, for the purpose of enabling Don Pedro and his ministers, through the means and agency of the plaintiff, to procure and receive payment, and to apply the proceeds thereof to the use of Donna Maria and her Government, in fraud and violation of the purpose for which the said bills of exchange were indorsed and remitted by Messrs. O. and J. as aforesaid. And that afterwards, and before the said bills of exchange were presented to the defendants for payment, Donna Maria attained her full age, and took upon herself the functions of sovereignty, and carried on the government; and thereupon, to wit, on the 1st of November, 1834, the said bills of exchange came into her possession; and that the government of Donna Maria, after she attained her full age, as well as that of Don Pedro as regent for her before that period, was distinct from and adverse to that of Don Miguel; and that neither Don Pedro as such regent, nor Donna Maria, nor any person for them or either of them, ever gave any valuable consideration whatever for the said bills of exchange; and that the loan raised, and the bonds or scrip issued, as aforesaid, have not been recognised or repaid, nor has any interest thereon been paid or agreed to be paid, by or on behalf of Donna Maria or her government; but, on the contrary, Donna Maria and her government, alleging that the government of Don Miguel was not a lawful government, and that the acts of Don Miguel and his government are altogether null and void, have refused, and still do refuse, to acknowledge as valid and binding on the government of Donna Maria the said bonds or scrip, in consideration and on security of which the said bills of exchange were indorsed and remitted by Messrs. O. and J. as aforesaid; and that the plaintiff hath not given any valuable consideration whatever for the said bills of exchange, and holds them merely as the agent of Donna Maria and her government, for the purpose of fraudulently, and in collusion with Donna Maria and her government, procuring and receiving payment of the same, and applying the proceeds thereof to the use of Donna Maria and her government, in fraud and violation of the purpose for which the said bills of exchange were indorsed and remitted by Messrs. O. and J. as aforesaid. The 5th plea, as to the 5th and 6th counts, was similar to the 4th; and to the last count the defendants pleaded that they did not promise in manner and form as the plaintiff complained against them.

The replication joined issues on the two first pleas, and to the third plea alleged that the said treasurer-general by whom the said indorsements were made to the plaintiff was the treasurer-general designated and intended by the said indorsements of Messrs. O. and J.; and to the following pleas alleged that the several matters therein were not true in substance or fact. The jury found that the said Messrs. O. and J. did indorse, and that the said treasurer-general did not indorse as alleged; and thirdly, that the said treasurer general was not the treasurer-general designated or intended by the said indorsements of Messrs. O. and J.; and that the fourth and fifth pleas were not true in substance or fact, on which judgment was entered up that the plaintiff take nothing by his writ. The bill of exceptions then set out the evidence, and the summing up of the Lord Chief Justice at length. [TINDAL, C. J. complained of the unnecessary and absurd length of the bill of exceptions, and said it was wrong to state all the judge says. He said, when bills of exception were brought to him, he only allowed so much of the short hand writer's note to be set out as was necessary to explain the exception; and PARKE, B. said he would refuse to sign such a bill.] The evidence first consisted of the various bills, and the indorsements on such bills were as follows:—"Payez à l'ordre de Monsieur le Trésorier-Géneral du Trésor-Genéral de Portugal, valeur en compte des negociations de l'emprunt royal de Portugal. Paris, le 6 Juin, 1833. "J. Outrequin and Jauge." And by the treasurer-general thus: "Pague se a ordem de Sen. M. J. Soares valor em conta. Lisboa, 7 d'Agoste de 1833.

"P. Thesoureiro Mor do real Erario,
"Joaqm. Fernandes Couto."

The record then set out the evidence of Caetano Mazziotti, who said,—"I am one of the commissioners for the liquidation of the extinct treasury in Lisbon. In August 1833 I was second book-keeper of the treasury. I knew Joze Fernandes Couto; he held the office of treasurer-general ad interim in the treasury of Lisbon, and also of accountant-general; he performed the duties of treasurer since 1822; he served first till 1827, and then from 1829; after which he served till 9th August, 1833. The bills of exchange were registered by me at Couto's direction, and I saw them indorsed by him in the building of the treasury. Couto finished being treasurer-general on 7th August, 1833, but he did not quit the situation until the 9th. Previously to his quitting the office, I saw him deliver over the bills to the commission. He did act till 9th August." On cross-examination, he said:—"Don Miguel was displaced by Don Pedro by force on 24th July, 1833. I said that Couto filled the office of treasurer-general ad interim; that was after Don Pedro got possession of the country. The government of Don Miguel was put an end to on the arrival of Don Pedro at Lisbon on the 24th July, 1833. From that day the government of Donna Maria exercised the sovereignty of Portugal." And the record then set out the evidence on the part of the defendant, by which it was proved, among other things, that on the 9th August, 1833, Couto was dismissed from his office of chief treasurer ad interim; and by the evidence of M. Jauge it was shewn that they, Messrs. O. & J. delivered the bills to the use of Don Miguel exclusively. We do not think it necessary to detail the rest of the evidence. The record then set out the summing up of the Lord Chief Justice, in which his lordship said: "The only question most undoubtedly is as to the plaintiff's legal title to sue on these bills—as to the person who was designed to have authority to indorse these bills. You are to say, on all the evidence, whether the indorsement was made to him in the character of treasurer-general exclusively, or whether it was made to him as an individual; and whether on the change of the government the authority to indorse continued in that person who still held the office by name, but held it as an officer to a government in direct hostility to that under which he held when M. Jauge indorsed the bill to him. Now it appears to me that the description of treasurer-general of Portugal is a description upon which you may receive evidence as to the intention of the party who indorsed to him, whether that was meant to represent the treasurer who then was in the service of Don Miguel, and him alone, and for the use of Don Miguel, or whether it was meant to apply to any other person who should hold the office of treasurer of Portugal at any time the bills should be found in the treasury there, although a change of government should have taken place in the meantime. If you think that the object was to put this money into the hands of the servant of Don Miguel, and for him alone, and for the use of Don Miguel, I confess I cannot conceive that then the government of Portugal who happened to succeed him are entitled to possess themselves of that money, or that such servant had authority to indorse it so as to convey a property in it to M. Soares or any other party." The record then alleged that the counsel for the plaintiff excepted to the direction of the Lord Chief Justice, and insisted that he ought to have told the jury that if they believed that Couto was treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal at the time of the indorsement to him by Messrs. O. and J. and that he indorsed to the plaintiff, it was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict on the second and third issues; and further, that no evidence ought to be received or considered to shew any other intention by the indorsement of Messrs. O and J. than what is expressed by the written indorsement itself, or to vary the legal effect of the indorsement; and further, that the Lord Chief Justice was wrong in directing a verdict for the defendant, if the jury thought Messrs. O. and J. intended that Couto should have power to indorse the bills so long only as he should be treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal under the government of Don Miguel.

Crowder, Q. C. (Watson, Q. C. and Greenwood, with him) in support of the writ of error.

Kelly, Q. C. (Martin, Q. C. with him) contra.

Crowder.—The case is shortly this: While Don Miguel held the government of Portugal, he caused a loan to be negotiated through Messrs. O. and J., who negotiated it by issuing scrip, the money to be remitted to Lisbon; and instead of sending the amount direct in money, they purchased bills in London, and transmitted them in the ordinary way. The bills were indorsed 6th June, 1833, while Don Miguel was sovereign. In the ordinary course of transmission, they would have arrived at the treasury of Portugal. The indorsement does not name the treasurer. Couto was at that time filling the office. His indorsement was on the 7th of August, 1833, the day he was dismissed; but he acted till the 9th, when he received the decree of his dismissal. The first issue is, whether O. and J. did not indorse to Couto. It is clear they did. On the second issue, the direction of the Lord Chief Justice was in effect that the jury should find for the defendant. On the 24th of July, 1833, there was a change of dynasty in Portugal. Don Pedro succeeded to power, as regent for the queen, Donna Maria. The judge seemed to consider the indorsement had a different effect because of the change of government in July. But that circumstance can, in law, make no difference in liability. I contend that, whether the indorsement was to Couto as a public officer, or as an individual, the property passed by his indorsement. First, as regards his being a public officer. If a bill be indorsed to an officer, in the name of his office, and there should afterwards be a change of dynasty, the question of such change cannot be discussed in an action between merchants. The law merchant knows of no such political distinctions. It is said, on the other side, that as the officer is designated on the face of the bill, you are to import the nature of the government into the question of liability. Suppose a succession in ordinary cases, that would have made no difference. Suppose, also, a change of ministers under Don Miguel, that would have made no difference. The public revenues of the state were pledged to the subscribers for the loan—nothing was said about Don Miguel. [ALDERSON, B.—Suppose the recent case of the downfal of Espartero?] Surely no one would contend that all the bills indorsed under that government were void. Besides, secondly, here Couto was himself the treasurer-general at the time of the indorsement. He remained in office under Don Pedro from July to the 9th of August. There was a combination of the individual with the officer. No authority on the subject can be cited. The nearest is Rex v. Box (6 Tau. 320), where a note was given to two ladies, stewardesses of a society, and it was held a good note. This very case was before the Courts of Chancery and Exchequer in 1835. (1 Younge & Coll. 644, 700; reversed, House of Lords, 1 West, 250, and 3 M. & K. 450.) In Chancery, the Lord Chancellor Cottenham, then Master of the Rolls, thus expressed himself:—"It is impossible to suppose that it could ever be maintained, in action upon a bill of exchange by the holder against the acceptor, that the title to the crown of a foreign state was matter to be put in issue, and to be submitted to the consideration of a jury." Unless this action can be maintained on Couto's indorsement, no title can be given to any one to recover the money. It is said on the other side to be a question who was designated and intended. But no question can arise except on the words of the bill. We except to the direction, that it permits the legal effect of the indorsement to be matter of evidence. In Thomas v. Bishop (1 Strange, Bayley on Bills, 57) a bill for 200*l*. was drawn upon the defendant by the description of Mr. H. Bishop, cashier of the York Buildings Company, at their house in Winchester-street, London, and the bill directed him to place the 200*l*. to the account of the company. The defendant accepted the bill; but on being sued, insisted that the acceptance did not bind him personally, and gave in evidence that the letter of advice from the drawer of the bill was sent to the company. But Page, J. directed the jury to find for the plaintiff, which they did; and upon a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial, the whole Court held the direction right; that the addition to the defendant's name was only to describe him with more certainty, and to point out where he was to be found; that the direction to place the money to the account of the company was for the use of the drawee only; and that the letter of advice could not vary the case against an indorsee (which the plaintiff was), because an indorsee could only look to the bill itself.

Kelly, contra.—The question is not as to the legal effect of the indorsement, nor whether the bill is negotiable by the custom of merchants, nor whether the third plea is bad in law; but whether, looking to the issues and the plea, any one of the exceptions can be maintained. The issues necessarily involve what office Couto held at the time of the indorsements. I contend that if a bill be indorsed to an officer by his title of office, and if the office existed at the time, it would be a good bill, and the indorsement would vest the property in it. The indorsement not being by name, but by office, an inquiry as to the nature of the office must be made by evidence. It appears that there was such an office as treasurer-general at the time of the indorsement by Messrs. O. and J. and a person filling it, and I admit that the indorsement by Messrs. O. and J. was good; but if Couto had ceased to hold such office, or if the office itself had ceased to exist, then I say the negotiability of the bill ceased also. There is no allegation in the declaration that O. and J. indorsed to Couto, but to the treasurer-general, and that such treasurer-general indorsed to the plaintiff. The plea is, that the treasurer-general who indorsed was not the treasurer-general designated by the indorsement. The Lord Chief Justice, therefore, on those issues was perfectly right in his direction. There was no other mode of determining the real question raised by the pleadings. It does not follow, because a person holds an office in June, that he or any one else may hold it in August. We say the office held at the time of the indorsement by Couto, was not the same office which he held when the bill was indorsed to him. They were different offices. We may be right or wrong in that construction; but that was the question between the parties. The treasurer-general who indorsed is not the officer intended by Messrs. O. and J. The treasurer-general has indorsed. Defendant says it is not the officer intended. [PARKE, B.—The only case in which evidence of intention is received is where two persons are of the same name; there is an ambiguitas latens.]

Crowder, in reply.—The main exceptions are, that the effect of the instrument was a question of law, and not of intention. According to the Law Merchant, no such evidence as this is receivable; and it would be most dangerous to commerce and the complicated transactions of merchants if it were allowed.

Cur. adv. vult.

TINDAL, C. J. delivered the following judgment on the 3rd of July; but as there were only five judges present, judgment was delivered pro formâ afterwards on the 5th.

JUDGMENT.

Thursday, July 3.—TINDAL, C. J. delivered the judgment of the Court.—In this case, which was argued before us at the sittings of this court of error, after the last Term, the question for our decision is, whether the direction of the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, given on the trial of the cause, was or was not correct, in respect of those points which form the subject of the bill of exceptions. The charge of the Lord Chief Justice is set out at length upon the record, a course of proceeding which is unusual, and ought not to be adopted. The precise point upon which the summing up is sought to be impugned requires so much only of the context to be stated as was necessary, if any was necessary, to explain the direction of the judge, and no more. The statement of the charge at length tends much to embarrass the question, and adds greatly to the expense of proceeding in error. In order to understand the nature of the exception, it will be necessary to state shortly the substance of the pleadings. The action was brought upon six bills of exchange, drawn in Paris, by the Baron D'Este, on the defendants in London, to the order of Outrequin and Jauge, and accepted by the defendants. These bills were indorsed by Outrequin and Jauge to the treasurer-general of the treasury royal of Portugal, and the declaration stated, that one Joachim Fernandes Couto, then being the treasurer-general aforesaid, indorsed the said bills to the plaintiff. To this declaration there were several pleas; first, that Outrequin and Jauge did not indorse to the treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal; secondly, that the treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal did not indorse; thirdly, that the said treasurer-general, by whom the indorsements were alleged to have been made to the said plaintiff, at the time when he indorsed the same, was not such treasurer-general as was designated or intended by the said indorsement of O. and J. but was another and different functionary, and agent of and minister of another and different and adverse and hostile government, and had no title or authority to indorse the bills. There were also the special pleas stating that Don Miguel whilst king of Portugal, raised a loan at Paris, and O. and J. being bankers at Paris, entered into an agreement with Don Miguel and his government for negotiating the raising of the loan and remitting the same; that O. and J. purchased and procured these bills to be drawn, for the purpose of remitting the same on account of the said loan, and in order to enable Don Miguel and his government to make payment of the said bills of exchange, indorsed the said bills of exchange to the order of the treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal, thereby intending and meaning to make them payable to the order of such person as should be for the time being treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal, by the appointment and as minister of the said Don Miguel and his government, and not of any person appointed by or acting under the authority of any government adverse to that of Don Miguel; that the said bills were given to and duly received by the said Fernandes Couto, he being treasurer-general of the royal treasury of Portugal, under and as minister of Don Miguel; that Don Pedro by hostile force took possession of Lisbon, compelled Don Miguel to quit, and subverted his government, whereupon Couto altogether ceased to exercise the functions of treasurer-general of the royal treasury, and from thence has never done any act as minister of Don Miguel; that Don Pedro and the persons then exercising the functions of government in Portugal took forcible possession of the bills, and that Couto fraudulently, and in collusion with Don Pedro and the new government, indorsed the said bills, for the purpose of enabling Don Pedro and the new government, through the plaintiff, to obtain payment of the bills. The plaintiff, in his replication, joined issue on the two first pleas; and as to the third plea, he replied that the treasurer-general by whom the indorsements were made to the plaintiff was the treasurer-general designated and intended by the indorsement of Outrequin and Jauge; omitting, however, to include in the traverse the statements in the defendant's pleas, that he was so at the time of the indorsement; and with respect to the two other special pleas, the replication avers that the matters of fact therein stated were not true. On the trial, evidence was given that the bills were indorsed in order to obtain a part of a loan raised for the use of Don Miguel at Paris, and were intended to be received and negotiated by his treasurer when the bills were indorsed and received at Lisbon. The government of Don Miguel continued, and Couto was the treasurer of the royal treasury under his government. In July, the government of Don Miguel was subverted, and his loan was not recognised by the government of Donna Maria, who succeeded him. But Couto was retained a short time as treasurer, and removed on the 9th of August; and on the 7th of August, before the notification of such removal to him, he indorsed the bills to the plaintiff.

In his summing up, the Lord Chief Justice stated that the description of treasurer of the kingdom of Portugal was a subject on which the jury might receive evidence as to the intention of the party who indorsed, whether it meant the treasurer then in the service of Don Miguel and him alone, or whether it meant to apply to any other person who should hold the office at any time the bills should be in the treasury, although a change of government should take place in the mean time; and that the defendant was entitled to a verdict, if Outrequin and Jauge exclusively looked to Don Miguel as the person whose treasurer was to receive and indorse these bills; and that if it was so intended, the government of Portugal which succeeded, or their servant, had no authority to indorse the bills. His lordship then said the question was, whether the intention of Outrequin and Jauge was that the bill should be indorsed to M. Couto, not as treasurer of the kingdom of Portugal, but exclusively as the treasurer of Don Miguel, and acting in his separate interest; and that the legal title of the plaintiff depended on the question which was submitted to their consideration. The plaintiff's counsel excepted to this direction, and stated that the Lord Chief Justice ought to have given his opinion that if the jury believed that Couto was treasurer-general of the royal treasury at the time of the indorsement to him by Outrequin and Jauge, and that he indorsed to the plaintiff, it was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict on the second and third issues; and further, that no evidence ought to have been left to the jury to shew any other intention by the indorsement of Outrequin and Jauge than that which is expressed by the written indorsement itself, and that no evidence ought to be considered by the jury to alter the legal effect of the indorsement or add to its tenor; and further, that it was wrong to tell the jury that they ought to find a verdict for the defendant if they thought Outrequin and Jauge intended that Couto should have power to indorse the bills so long as he should be treasurer of the royal treasury under the government of Don Miguel, and no longer. The jury found a verdict for the defendants on the second and third issues, and for the plaintiff on the first issue, and those raised on the special pleads. The case was argued at length before us, and we are all of opinion that the direction was not correct in point of law, and that this exception was well founded; and that, consequently, there must be a venire de novo. Whoever was the treasurer of the royal treasury at the time of the indorsement by Outrequin and Jauge acquired a legal title in the bills; the indorsement to his order was in law an indorsement to him or his order, and the indorsement does not mean the mere act of writing the name on the bills, but the handing the bills over and the delivery of them to the indorsees also. No question can arise here as to the effect of the change of officers between the signature of the indorser and the transmission or delivery to the indorsee. When the actual delivery took place, as well as at the time of the making of the indorsement, Couto was treasurer; at both times he was in the same office, and in the same service, and consequently the legal title to the bills vested in him by the indorsement; and there is nothing in the form of the indorsement which can be construed to revest the title in the indorser, or to restrain the indorsee from indorsing anew in case he ceased to have the office; nor can parol evidence be allowed to engraft such a condition, if, indeed, such a condition or qualified power of indorsing should be allowed by the law of merchants, and no authority has been cited to shew us that it could. We think, therefore, the direction of the Lord Chief Justice was wrong in stating that the legal title to the bills in this case depended on the intention of Outrequin and Jauge in using the description of treasurer-general of the royal treasury, or upon their intention that the power of indorsing should depend upon a continuance in the same office. It was unnecessary to inquire, supposing we were competent to do so, as to their intention in indorsing the bills, for the bills were simply indorsed and delivered to the proper treasurer of the kingdom of Portugal, and no parol evidence could be allowed to defeat his title, or qualify his right to indorse. Indeed the stress of the argument for the plaintiff in error was not that the direction was right in point of law, but that the exception had not exactly pointed out the defect, and was itself unintelligible in parts, for it was said the Chief Justice ought not, as the exception stated he ought, to have told the jury that if Couto was treasurer-general at the time of the indorsement of the bill, it was insufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict upon both the second and third pleas, although it might be sufficient as to the second. We think this objection to the sufficiency of this exception ought not to prevail, even supposing it to be wrong as to the third issue, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to a verdict on that ground. We are of opinion the residue of the exception, at all events the two latter branches of it, was properly taken; but we also think that, on the third issue, the direction ought to have been in favour of the plaintiff, as stated in the exception, because the averment that the treasurer-general who indorsed, at the time he indorsed was not such treasurer-general as was designated and intended by Outrequin and Jauge, was not parcel of the issue, but was immaterial. We are therefore of opinion that there must be a venire de novo.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

Friday, June 27.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.)

Re WENHAM.

An insolvent who has been detained in custody upon an attachment for costs incurred previous to presenting his petition, but not issued until after, upon obtaining his final order for protection is entitled to be discharged as to such attachment.

Insolvent came up this day for his final order. The facts are stated in the report of the case (ante, p. 271), on the meeting for the interim order.

Cook (Dowse with him) contended that the Court had no power, even after the final order, to discharge the insolvent from custody as to this attachment for costs. The attachment was not issued until after the petition was filed. The 22nd section of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, enacts that the final order shall protect the person of the insolvent from all process in respect of the several debts due or claimed to be due at the time of filing the petition to the several persons named in the schedule as creditors. This section only applies to such debts as were due at the time of filing the petition. The next section gives the commissioner power, where an insolvent is detained in prison for any debt or claim in respect of which he is protected by his final order, to order him to be discharged from custody as to such debt or claim. Then comes the 26th section, which extends the protection under the final order given by the 22nd section to all process for any contempt of Court; for non-payment of money, or of costs or expenses in any such court; and also to all costs of such contempt, or on purging the same. The 26th section, therefore, which merely extends the benefit to be derived from the final order to some cases not included in the former section, must be read as a part of that section; and if so, then it must be construed subject to the limitation as to time contained in that section,—that is to say, the contempt for which the attachment was issued must have been incurred previous to the filing of the schedule. Here the contempt was not complete previous to filing the schedule. The contempt was for nonpayment of costs incurred on an interlocutory proceeding in an action not taxed until after the schedule filed. The contempt, therefore, could not have been committed previous to filing the schedule.

Sturgeon.—The costs for which the insolvent is now in contempt were incurred previous to filing the schedule, although not taxed until after. They were, therefore, a debt due at the time of filing the schedule.

His HONOUR.—I have had the advantage of consulting with Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque on this case, and we both agree in thinking that these costs, for the non-payment of which the insolvent is in contempt, were a debt previous to the filing of the schedule, and that the insolvent is entitled to his discharge. Ordered accordingly.

(Before Mr. Commissioner EVANS.)

Re STEWART.

Where an insolvent has omitted from his schedule certain property to which he was entitled, the Court will not allow the schedule to be amended.

Insolvent came up for his interim order for protection, and was about to be opposed by a creditor, when Hughes, on his behalf, applied for leave to amend the schedule by inserting certain property to which the insolvent was entitled, which was altogether omitted, but which he stated was in reality of no value, and on that account had been left out. The insolvent was not aware, the property being valueless, that there was any necessity to insert it; no fraud was intended.

His HONOUR.—I shall not permit you to amend. I never allow an amendment where property is wholly left out of a schedule. The petition must be dismissed.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Wednesday, June 25, and Tuesday, July 1.

Ex parte MOORE, Re WESTRUP and COCKSEDGE.

Right of proof—Costs of suit—Husband and wife—Commission to examine witnesses.

A husband, having instituted a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court against his wife for a divorce on the ground of adultery, became bankrupt pending the suit, and before any taxation, monition, decree, or order as to costs had been made. After the bankruptcy the husband declared, in the manner required by the Ecclesiastical Court, his intention not to proceed with the suit; it was held that the wife's proctor was entitled to prove under the bankruptcy for the amount of the costs incurred before the bankruptcy.

The execution of a commission to examine witnesses in Dublin commenced before the act of bankruptcy, but the commission was not returned to London until some days after the bankruptcy; and it was held that the execution of the commission was to be considered as one act, and that the whole costs in respect of it were proveable under the fiat.

This was a petition for liberty to prove under the circumstances stated in the judgment.

Swanston and Rolt for the petition.

Russell and Amphlett for the assignees.

The following cases were cited: Ex parte Crosse (2 M. Dea. & De G. 308); Shepherd v. Mackrell (3 Camp. 326); Turner v. Rooks (10 Adol. & Ell. 47, and 2 Perry & Dav. 294); Grindell v. Godmond (5 Ad. & Ell. 755, and 1 Nev. & P. 168); Cheale v. Cheale (1 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 374); Bird v. Bird (Lee's Eccl. Cases, 209); and Stones v. Cooke (7 Sim. 22).

Tuesday, July 1.—The CHIEF JUDGE.—In this case the petitioner, who is proctor, seeks to prove against the separate estate of one of the bankrupts for the amount of a bill of costs. The matter arose thus:—The bankrupt, Mr. Thomas Martin Cocksedge, sued his wife in the Consistory Court of London for a divorce, on the alleged ground of adultery. She appeared, and defended the suit by her proctor, the petitioner, and certain proceedings having taken place in the suit after her appearance, costs and expenses were thus incurred in it upon her part, the amount of which, had she been sui juris, would plainly have been a just debt from her to the proctor. As, however, she was not sui juris, it is to be assumed that the proctor, unless he had a demand for his expenses upon the husband, was not entitled to claim them from any other party. These costs and expenses have been, I consider, obviously occasioned by the husband's act, in this sense, that the cause in the Consistory Court was of his institution, and the wife was justly entitled to defend herself. At all events if she was innocent—and hitherto she has not been proved guilty—and, if entitled to defend herself, she is entitled, though not obliged, to do so by means of a proctor. The costs and expenses being incurred, the husband, pending the suit, becomes bankrupt, but, previously to the bankruptcy, there had not been any bill of costs, any taxation, monition, or decree of any kind in respect of the costs, so far as I understand. The petition now before the Court sets forth various particulars, and it will perhaps be better to give the circumstances as stated in the petition. The petition then stated "that in pursuance of the usual practice, your petitioner made out his bill of costs for the proceedings so taken by your petitioner on behalf of the said Ann Cocksedge in the said cause, down to the end of the month of October 1844, and procured the same to be taxed, and the same was duly taxed by the Right Hon. Stephen Lushington, the judge of the said court, at the sum of 348*l*. 9*s*. 5*d*., and your petitioner also obtained an order for a monition to issue for the payment thereof in the event of the said Thomas Martin Cocksedge failing to pay the said costs. That a monition had some time previously issued for the payment, to the said Ann Cocksedge, of certain alimony which had been decreed to her in the said suit, and the said Thomas Martin Cocksedge had failed to pay such alimony, pursuant to the tenor of the said monition; and thereupon your petitioner, as the proctor of the said Ann Cocksedge, prayed the said Court to pronounce the said Thomas Martin Cocksedge in contempt for non-payment of such alimony, and to issue the usual significavit for the purpose of enabling a writ de contumace capiendo to be taken out thereon; that thereupon the proctor for the said Thomas Martin Cocksedge alleged that he, the said T. M. Cocksedge, had been gazetted as a bankrupt, and that assignees of his estate had been appointed under his bankruptcy, and the said bankruptcy not being disputed, the said Court refused to pronounce the said T. M. Cocksedge in contempt, or to make any order for the issuing of a writ of significavit; that the said T. M. Cocksedge has been in fact duly found and declared a bankrupt under a fiat in bankruptcy, which was awarded and issued against him jointly with the said Walter Westrup on the 21st day of October, 1844, and Alfred Robinson, Henry Larchin, and Henry Price have been duly chosen and appointed creditors' assignees, and Wm. Bele has been duly appointed official assignee of the joint and separate estates of the said bankrupts under the said fiat; that the reason assigned by the said Consistory Court for refusing to pronounce the said T. M. Cocksedge in contempt, and to grant the said writ of significavit was, that as the law had, by vesting all the said T. M. Cocksedge's property in other persons, taken away his means of paying the amount of such alimony, it would not be right to make an order, which might have the effect of imprisoning him for non-payment of such alimony; that as the reason so assigned by the said Court would apply equally to an application for pronouncing the said T. M. Cocksedge in contempt, and for the issuing of a significavit for non-payment of the costs due to your petitioner as aforesaid, your petitioner has not applied to the said Court for that purpose; that the said T. M. Cocksedge has, since the said bankruptcy, duly authorized his proctor, by proxy under his hand and seal, to declare, and his said proctor has accordingly declared, that he, the said T. M. Cocksedge, would not proceed further with the said suit, and a minute of such declaration has been duly recorded in the acts or proceedings of the said Court; but the said Ann Cocksedge being entitled, according to the practice of the said Court, to have the said cause continued with a view to the vindication of her own conduct, has refused to allow the same to be abandoned, and she altogether denies the charges made against her by her said husband; that, under the circumstances aforesaid, your petitioner, on the 11th of April, 1845, tendered his proof under the said fiat, against the separate estate of the said T. M. Cocksedge, for the before-mentioned sum of 348*l*. 9*s*. 5*d*. the amount of his said taxed costs incurred previously to the bankruptcy of the said T. M. Cocksedge, and the consideration of such proof was adjourned till the next meeting under the said bankruptcy, and that at such next meeting, which was held on the 30th day of May, 1845, the Commissioner before whom the fiat is in prosecution refused to admit the said proof, and stated as his reason for so doing that, before he could decide whether the husband would have been liable, he must have enough before him to convince him that the wife had good grounds for defending the suit, which could not be done until the suit for a divorce was decided." The question raised by the petition is as to the correctness of the conclusion of the learned Commissioner. It seems to be admitted that, had the proctor chosen to be more active, he might have obtained from the Court, at any time after the wife's appearance, an order for the taxation of the costs for the time being in the suit, and a monition for them against the husband before the bankruptcy. There is no evidence that the wife had any separate property. This is a point, as to the materiality or immateriality of which upon the present petition I will say no more than that the absence of any such evidence cannot prejudice the case of the petitioner. There is no evidence that the wife has at any time confessed adultery, or that she has been guilty of it. For the present purpose, as between the petitioner and the assignees, who are strangers to the proceedings, the wife is to be presumed innocent, the suit not having been abandoned until after the bankruptcy. I am of opinion that it would be improper to consider the wife as having been otherwise than unjustly sued. She has, indeed, uniformly asserted her innocence. It must be taken, then, that an unjust suit, involving the wife's station in society, her honour, and her subsistence, was brought against her by her husband, who himself must be considered as having compelled her to defend the suit, or, by omitting all defence, to forego her claims upon his support, her continuance in society, to become, in effect, a pauper and an outcast. Was it reasonable and proper that she should defend such a suit? To that but one answer can be given. Was the defence necessary to her? It may be true, that to be slighted and shunned by society may be an evil, viewed variously, as of more or less weight in various cases, by various persons. But who can dispense with food and raiment? If these are necessary, is it less so that she should have the opportunity of resistance to the unjust obstruction of the means of obtaining them; or can that be deemed a matter of fancy or superfluity? Surely her defence of the suit was necessary, as well as reasonable and proper; and that she should employ a proctor for the purpose was equally reasonable, equally proper, and equally necessary; for although she might have been competent to defend the suit in person, she certainly was not bound to do so. Why, then, is it not to be considered that the husband was, at the time of the bankruptcy, legally indebted to the petitioner in the amount of his bill at that time? The bill appears to be as much for necessaries, properly furnished to the wife, as a bill for ordinary provisions, clothing, and medical attendance would have been. They were not less justly chargeable upon the husband than the costs of an attorney employed by her to defend herself against an indictment for a crime, if she had been falsely accused and her husband had refused to interfere. A man without cause turning his wife out of doors, sends her into the world with the power of obtaining credit against him for necessaries. All her tradesmen become the creditors of the husband. In like manner, it appears to me that, by causeless sending the wife into the Ecclesiastical Court to meet a charge of imputed adultery, the husband enables her to obtain credit in the same way, and the proctor employed by the wife becomes the husband's creditor. I do not think it material to decide, if I could, nor to consider whether, in all cases of costs such as that before me, the rule and practice of the courts of ecclesiastical jurisdiction afford the wife and the proctor, or either of them, a sufficient remedy and a complete protection; whether, in every case where reason and justice require that either of them should be assisted against the husband, and that assistance can be obtained, although the Ecclesiastical Court would interfere, the proceedings at common law, including the forms of execution which the law gives in actions, may not be substantially more convenient and advantageous than the process of order and monition of the ecclesiastical judge. I am not aware of any objection upon principle or authority which goes to shew that the remedies in each jurisdiction may not simultaneously exist in such cases. There may be possibly an objection to the simultaneous use of such remedies, or to resorting to one after having resorted to the other. No such thing has occurred, as I conceive, in the present instance. I cannot view in that light steps taken after the commission, by a bankrupt who has not applied for a certificate as to costs, nor again can it, in my judgment, be a sufficient answer to an action by a proctor against the husband, to say that the case is one in which the ecclesiastical judge had refused, or would, on account of the wife having separate property or otherwise, have refused to interfere against him. The common law right to sue a man for the value of necessaries furnished to his wife, or for a cause of action tantamount to that, cannot, I apprehend, be affected by the question whether the Consistorial Court would or would not have given, or could or could not give to the plaintiff a remedy and redress according to its forms. It is arguable, certainly, that there may be inconvenience in allowing actions to be brought from time to time by a proctor for his costs pending an adverse suit, that may be so; although the Ecclesiastical Court sometimes, indeed very often, I believe, makes the husband pay the costs of the wife step by step, or, as they say there, de die in diem. I do not, however, know that there can substantially be a greater difficulty or inconvenience belonging to such a case than to the ordinary case of attorney and client as to costs. In this instance the husband's bankruptcy happened pending the suit, but nothing can be more common than that a party to an action should become bankrupt pending the litigation. His attorney under such circumstances, at least if not guilty of neglect or misconduct before or afterwards, is surely entitled to prove under the bankruptcy for his costs incurred by the client before the bankruptcy, whether the cause do or do not proceed, or however it may have been proceeded with. No neglect, no collusion, no misconduct, no litigiousness, no vexation, has been imputed to the proctor in the present instance. The suit has been ended since the bankruptcy as far as it sought to criminate the wife, and ended by what is, I suppose, analogous to a nonsuit at law in her favour. But put the case of a defendant in an action becoming bankrupt, but not pleading or suggesting his bankruptcy, the action going on, the plaintiff nonsuited and being a beggar, is the successful defendant's attorney not to prove for the costs up to the bankruptcy against the estate of his client? I am quite aware that in the present instance the husband is not the client of his wife's proctor; but for the reasons to which I have referred, I see no difference between the two cases. For, setting bankruptcy out of view, an attorney or solicitor, though abandoning his client's cause during its progress, may, under certain circumstances, lose his right to demand the previous costs against the client; yet, not abandoning the cause, not ceasing to act, he may, during its progress, I suppose, from time to time demand from the client, and sue the client, for payment of his costs incurred for the time being, at least if this be not done in a vexatious and unreasonable manner. I am not aware of either authority or principle against the measure, but I find the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, in a case (Van Sandau v. Brown, 9 Bing. 407) in the year 1832, saying—"The objection, however, which has been raised to the plaintiff's recovery is, that an attorney cannot sue for his bill until the business which he has been retained in is terminated. It would be long before I should be induced to assent to such a proposition. Suppose the employer to become insolvent while the attorney is engaged in a long and difficult suit, it would be hard if he could not recede from such an engagement." There is another report of the same case (2 Moore & Scott, 556) in which the Lord Chief Justice is represented as saying—"The main objection to the plaintiff's right to recover, and the question for our consideration is, whether an attorney can bring an action against his client for business done during the progress of a cause, or whether he must wait till the suit has arrived at a final determination, viz. by a judgment at law, or a decree in equity, before he can sue. I should require a strong authority before I acceded to such a proposition; for if an attorney or solicitor is bound to wait till the final determination of a suit, he might in many cases be ruined." And Mr. Justice Bosanquet is mentioned as stating that he "could not agree to the extent of the proposition contended for by the defendant, that a defendant cannot sue his client for business done till the final determination of the suit." I may also add, that if proof of the wife's adultery, in an action by the proctor against the husband for her costs of defence to his suit against her, would defeat the action—a point as to which I say nothing—if that would be inconvenient, such an inconvenience is not of a new kind, it being clear that a husband suing for a divorce may, at the same time, be a defendant in an action, or in various actions by tradesmen as plaintiffs, for articles supplied to the wife, who may ultimately be proved to be, and be treated as, an adulteress. How this matter would have stood if the wife had been guilty, had the suit for a divorce been still in progress, or had she been the party suing, and not the party sued, in proceedings existing before the bankruptcy, it is unnecessary to say. Upon the facts of this case I think the proctor is entitled to prove, and I so decide. The point being of some importance, and specifically, so far as I am aware, new, I had doubts whether I ought to allow the proof, especially against the opinion of the learned Commissioner without affording the assignees an opportunity of trying the question in an action, which might probably be so framed as to try it satisfactorily; but, considering the amount of the sum in dispute, and that they may probably obtain the opinion of the Lord Chancellor before the long vacation, if they appeal speedily from my decision, I have thought it better for the present to act upon my own opinion, and to express it without further delay. In what I have said I have assumed that the amount of the bill is considered by the assignees as reasonable and fair, and that there is not any dispute as to what charges are anterior and what subsequent to the bankruptcy. If there is any difference between the parties on these points, or either of them, I will decide it myself, or put it in the course of investigation. Let the costs of the petition on each side come out of the estate.

Swanston mentioned one part of the bill of costs which might give rise to dispute. It was this: a commission to examine witnesses in Dublin issued some time before the bankruptcy; the execution of the commission commenced at Dublin on the 17th of October, and continued up to the 20th, on which day the act of bankruptcy was committed. The commission was sealed on the 21st, and the parties returned to London by the 23rd. A question might arise whether the costs of the execution of this commission should be apportioned.

The Chief Judge.—As at present advised, I think the execution of the commission was one act. The whole must be considered as a debt proveable under the commission.

Bedford, March 1845.

(Before Mr. Justice Patteson.)

Reg. v. Church.

Larceny—Indictment—Property.

Where lots of wood were sold by auction and paid for, but retained on the premises of the vendor, by the conditions of sale, until a future day, when they were to be removed on presenting a ticket specifying them in each case, and A, the purchaser of one lot, abstracts a pole from the lot of B, before the day on which the ticket could be obtained, and places it in his own lot,

Held, that on an indictment against A for felony, the property was well laid in B.

The indictment charged that the prisoner on, &c. at Woburn, in the county of Beds, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away two ash poles, the property of Joseph Brimley.

Gunning, for the prosecution, proved that there having been a sale of wood in Woburn Park, the seat of his Grace the Duke of Bedford, the prisoner bought one lot, and the prosecutor two. It further appeared, that according to the usual conditions on such occasions, the several lots, which were paid for when knocked down, were left on the ground where they had been exposed for sale, and that they could not be removed therefrom by the purchasers till a certain day, when tickets would be issued, and permission given to the bearers thereof to remove the lots specified therein. Before that day arrived, the prisoner was seen by a keeper in the park to go to the wood where the lots were lying, and to remove from each of the prosecutor's lots one pole, which he placed in his own lot.

Patteson, J.—In this state of things, I doubt whether the property in this indictment is well laid in the purchaser of the lots. Every felony includes a trespass, and trespass can only be brought by him who has the possession of the chattel, or the right to it. Here the wood, though sold to, and paid for by the purchaser, remained, in fact, in the actual possession of the vendor, the Duke of Bedford, and by the express conditions of the sale, the right to the possession of it was in him till a day not arrived at the time of the felonious removal by the prisoner. I question very much whether the purchaser could bring trover for the recovery of his lots till he had obtained his ticket for their removal, and perfected his title to them; not even if the Duke himself had removed them. It strikes me, therefore, that the property remained in the Duke, and that the indictment is wrong in that particular. There is certainly some difficulty in the case, which is not free from doubt in either view of it.

Gunning.—If the property in these poles had been otherwise laid than in the purchaser, the indictment would fail, for as all the lots, including those bought by the prosecutor and that by the prisoner, were in the possession of the Duke of Bedford, if the property had been laid in his Grace, there would not have been any such removal as would constitute a felony. If the property be in the vendor as regards the prosecutor's lots, so it is as regards that of the prisoner, so that the removal from the one to the other is not sufficient to support a charge of larceny. There would, in such a case, be but a mere change of possession, whatever the view of the prisoner might have been as to the future. The prosecutor has paid for this wood, and that passed the property in it to him sufficient to maintain felony and trespass, though the possession of it might by agreement remain in the vendor for a time, and as against a mere wrongdoer that is sufficient property in the purchaser.

Patteson, J.—The case is one of some difficulty, and I will consult my brother before I decide it.

His lordship having retired for a short time, intimated on his return that the indictment was sufficient, and the case proceeded.

Guilty—One week's imprisonment.

Bills in Progress.

A Bill intituled "An Act to render the Assignment of satisfied Terms unnecessary."

1. On 31st Dec. 1845 satisfied terms of years attendant on inheritance, &c. of land, to cease, except, &c.—Whereas the assignment of satisfied terms has been found to be attended with great difficulty, delay, and expense, and to operate in many cases to the prejudice of the persons justly entitled to the lands to which they relate, Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That every satisfied term of years which, either by express declaration or by construction of law, shall upon the 31st day of December, 1845, be attendant upon the inheritance or reversion of any land, shall on the 31st day of December, 1846, absolutely cease and determine as to the land upon the inheritance or reversion whereof such term shall be attendant as aforesaid, except that every such term of years which shall be so attendant as aforesaid by express declaration, although hereby made to cease and determine, shall afford to every person the same protection against every incumbrance, charge, estate, right, action, suit, claim, and demand as it would have afforded to him if it had continued to subsist, but had not been assigned or dealt with, after the said 31st day of December, 1845, and shall for the purpose of such protection be considered in every court of law and of equity to be a subsisting term.

2. Satisfied terms now subsisting, &c. to cease on becoming attendant upon inheritance, &c. of lands.—And be it enacted, That every term of years now subsisting or hereafter to be created, becoming satisfied after the said 31st day of December, 1845, and which, either by express declaration or by construction of law, shall after the said 31st day of December, 1845, become attendant upon the inheritance or reversion of any land, shall immediately upon the same becoming so attendant absolutely cease and determine as to the land upon the inheritance or reversion whereof such term shall become attendant as aforesaid.

3. Not to extend to Scotland.—And be it enacted, That this Act shall not extend to Scotland.

A Bill intituled "An Act for enabling Parties to be examined in the Trial of Civil Actions."

Plaintiffs, &c. in actions for damages or ejectment, subject to same rules and penalties as witnesses.—For the better enabling the truth to be ascertained by courts of law in the trial of civil actions, be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That, from and after the first of January, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, it shall be lawful for any person, being a plaintiff or defendant, or one of such plaintiffs or defendants, in any action or inquiry for assessing damages, or the lessor or one of the lessors of the plaintiff in any ejectment, to be tendered or to tender himself or herself in evidence, and to be examined before the Court touching the matter in question, subject to the same rules of evidence in respect of his or her examination, and liable to the same penalties and punishment in case of false deposition, as if he or she had been a witness in the cause, and subject to be proceeded against by summary commitment for prevarication by the Court, as well as to prosecution for false swearing or false affirmation.

2. Either party may be summoned as a witness upon due notice, &c.—And be it enacted and declared, That either party in any action or inquiry of damages shall, upon giving notice to any adverse party one month before the trial of such action or execution of such inquiry, and upon tender of the expenses of attending the trial, be entitled to call such adverse party as a witness; provided such party so calling the adverse party shall tender him or herself to be examined in the cause.

3. Committees of lunatics, &c. not entitled to be examined.—Provided always, and it is hereby enacted by the authority aforesaid, That nothing in this Act contained shall enable any party to be examined in any action or any inquiry brought by or against the next friend of any infant, or the committee of any lunatic, or any trustee or other person not himself or herself beneficially interested as the real party to the suit.

4. One party not allowed to be examined in the absence of the other.—Provided also, and it is hereby enacted by the authority aforesaid, That in case it shall be made to appear at the trial of any cause or execution of any writ of inquiry, when either party is tendered to be examined as aforesaid, that the adverse party, or any one of several adverse parties, is incapable of attending or being examined from sickness, incapacity, or extreme age, or absence on the public service, or any cause other than voluntary absence, then, and in such case, the party so tendered shall not be allowed to be examined; and if notice of such sickness, incapacity, or necessary absence be given to the opposite party before the cause is set down for trial, or notice is given of executing the writ of inquiry, such opposite party may apply to the Court to postpone the trial or inquiry, as in the case of absence of a material witness, which application shall be dealt with by the Court or Judge according to his discretion, in respect of granting the same, and likewise in respect of the terms on which it shall be granted.

5. Excepted cases, &c.—Provided always, and it is hereby enacted, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend to any prosecution or action for penalties at the suit of the Crown, and wherein there is no person suing as well for himself as for the Crown, nor to any suit or information by the Attorney or Solicitor-General on behalf of the Crown, nor to any suit in equity, nor before any consistorial or other ecclesiastical court, or any Court of Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty, or to proceedings before the Privy Council.

6. Act may be repealed, &c.—And be it enacted, That this Act may be repealed, altered, or annulled during the present Session of Parliament.

A Bill intituled, "An Act for furthering the Administration of Criminal Justice."

1. Her Majesty in Council may appoint Counties within which persons committed for certain offences may be tried.—For furthering the administration of criminal justice, be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That it shall and may be lawful for her Majesty in Council to appoint certain counties within which persons committed or who shall be committed for trial for any offences charged to have been committed in such other counties, to be called connected counties, as shall be named by her Majesty in Council, may be tried, as if the same had been committed or charged to be committed within the bodies of the counties respectively appointed by her Majesty in Council; and any justice or justices empowered by any commission of gaol delivery to try persons charged with offences in the counties so appointed and in the connected counties so named shall have power to try all such persons in the counties appointed, although such offence may not be charged to have been committed within such appointed counties, any law, statute, custom, or usage to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

2. Justice of assize may make order for payment of witnesses.—And be it enacted, That any person charged with any offence, and about to be tried in any of the counties appointed in which the offence is not charged to have been committed, may apply to one or other of the justices of assize for an order to have the expenses of bringing witnesses from the place where such witnesses reside to the nearest place in the county within which the offender is to be tried, and back from such nearest place to the place of their residence; and such justice is hereby authorized to make an order for the payment of such expenses upon the treasurer of the county, with which order the said treasurer is hereby authorized and required to comply.

3. Justices of gaol delivery to deliver the gaols as well of appointed counties as of counties where trials shall not be had.—And be it enacted, That all justices in the commission of the gaol delivery shall deliver the gaols as well of the counties in which the trial of offences shall be had, and which shall be appointed as aforesaid by her Majesty in Council, as of the connected counties so named as aforesaid by her Majesty in Council, and within which the trial of offences shall not be had, and that such gaol delivery shall take place in the counties so appointed, as if the commission of gaol delivery had been opened and executed within the bodies of the connected counties so named as aforesaid in which the trial shall not be had.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

ADMINISTRATION OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE.

MONDAY, July 7.—Lord BROUGHAM moved the second reading of the Bill for the Administration of Criminal Justice. By this measure it was proposed to fix upon certan places as assize-towns, at which, as at the Central Criminal Court, all prisoners within a certain circuit should be tried. The state of criminal justice was such that it was necessary either to adopt some such measure as the present, or to appoint a greater number of judges, which latter course would be attended with much inconvenience. Lord CAMPBELL thought a consolidation of the kind would be very beneficial, but that the matter should not be pressed forward this session. Great advantage would be derived from the appointment of a new commission with power to inquire into the whole subject, and to redivide the assize districts of England and Ireland. He begged also to suggest that an interchange on circuit of the English and Irish judges would be very desirable.—The LORD CHANCELLOR concurred in the necessity for a new commission; but, though he did not consider the Irish judges in any way inferior to their English brethren, he did not think they could administer justice so successfully in England. As the report of the late commission was unsatisfactory, he should feel it his duty to recommend the appointment of a new one with more extensive powers.—Lord DENMAN feared it would be long before a satisfactory report was presented. No one could doubt that more frequent gaol deliveries were needed, but he was averse to a permanent winter circuit, and thought such deliveries should only take place occasionally.—Lord BROUGHAM, after the declaration made by the Lord Chancellor, would not press the Bill any further. As regarded new circuits, he thought they should be permanent, not occasional; and though he entertained all respect for the Irish bench, he did not think they had such an acquaintance with the feelings and habits of the people in this country, as to enable them to discharge judicial functions in England. The Bill was then read a second time; several Bills were forwarded a stage, and their lordships adjourned.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE BILL.

THURSDAY, July 10.—On the motion for going into committee on this Bill, Lord BROUGHAM said the object of the Bill was to obviate certain anomalies that existed at present, and to authorize any person to produce documents, properly signed and sealed, as evidence in courts of justice, without proof of the seal or signature; but at the same time to make it a forgery, punishable with seven years' transportation, to forge or fabricate any such document, or to utter it knowing it to be forged or fabricated. As a proof of the necessity for such a measure, he would mention that in all the Railway Bills that had recently passed, there was an omission of all penalties for forgery, and as a furth proof how these parties should be looked after, that the Great Western Company recently introduced a Bill which provided, among other things, that the books of the company, which were evidence at law against them, should in certain cases be also evidence in their favour. It had been suggested to him by a noble friend opposite that it would be of great public utility if it were provided that the Journals of the House should also be taken as evidence in courts of justice; and he would therefore move that the Bill be committed pro formâ, in order that it might be printed with amendments, and re-committed.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said he approved of the Bill, and thought the proposed provision with respect to the Journals of the House would be of importance to the administration of justice.—Lord CAMPBELL said he highly approved of the Bill, thinking it would much simplify legal proceedings, save great expense, and prevent many lawsuits. The motion was then agreed to, and the Bill ordered to be reprinted.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

REMOVAL OF COURTS.

SATURDAY, July 5.—A select committee has been appointed by the House of Commons, on the motion of Mr. C. Buller, "to consider the expediency of erecting a building in the neighbourhood of the inns of court, for the sittings of the Courts of Law and Equity, in lieu of the courts adjoining to Westminster Hall, with a view to the more speedy, convenient, and effectual administration of justice."

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.—DROPPED MEASURES.

MONDAY, July 7.—In the House of Commons, Sir R. PEEL rose at five o'clock to state the measures which Government intended to pursue at this late period of the session, and informed the House, in the first place, that in the course of the present week either the Vice-President of the Board of Trade or himself would lay upon the table a minute from the Board of Trade suggesting that some alte- [illegible] charge in the last session. He proposed to render it imperative that all railway projects should be laid before the Board of Trade, to relieve it from the duty of deciding on the relative merits of conflicting plans. A minute for that object would shortly be laid upon the table of the House. Effect had also been given to the address moved the other night by Mr. Cobden; and commissioners had been appointed to report as to the propriety of adopting the broad or narrow gauge. Those commissioners were Sir F. Smith and Professors Barlow and Airey. There were at present fifty or sixty Bills before the House, of which many were of great interest, although they might not create much discussion. He regretted to find that the quantity of business required to be discharged was so great, that it would be advantageous to give an announcement of the Bills which the Government intend to press, and of those which it intended to withdraw. With respect to the Colleges (Ireland) Bill, he intended to conclude the discussion upon it before he proceeded to any further business, in order that it might be sent as early as possible to the Lords. The second reading of the Jewish Disabilities Removal Bill he would move on the earliest opportunity. Sir J. Graham wished to have one of his medical Bills reprinted for the purpose of introducing some modifications into it. If these met the assent of the House, he would proceed with it, otherwise not. Of the principle of the Charitable Trusts Bill the Government approved highly; but it was brought forward at so late a period of the session that it was not probable that it would be persevered with this session. The Ecclesiastical Courts Bill belonged to Lord John R[illegible]. He (Sir R. Peel) was inclined to assent to the second reading of it, but he could not grant to the noble lord a sufficient number of Government days for the discussion of it, and therefore could not make any engagement as to promoting the passing of it this session. Many important alterations ought to be made in the Customs Acts. It was now thirteen years since the last consolidation of them had been made; Government was prepared with a new Consolidation Act, and was anxious to pass it for the sake of the commercial and mercantile classes. If any obstruction were offered to it, Government could not carry it; but if Government were encouraged in its efforts to make that Bill law, he should certainly proceed with it.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL would have proceeded with the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill if Sir R. Peel would have given up to him a sufficient number of Government days; but, as he would not, it appeared to him that no good purpose would be answered by pressing the Bill this session to a second reading.

PRIVILEGE.

Sir J. Y. BULLER presented two petitions, one from Theodore Bryett, stating that he was the partner of Charles Edwards, of Totness, who had acted as solicitor for David Phillips in bringing the action against Mr. Parrott, stating that he knew nothing about the proceedings in it, and praying to be discharged from further attendance upon the House; and another from C. Edwards, solicitor at Totness, and from T. Baker, solicitor of Lime-street, London, stating that they had brought the action against Mr. Parrott at the instance of their client, David Phillips, for evidence given by him before a committee of the House of Commons, which they were informed was maliciously and wilfully false; that in so doing they did not conceive that they were guilty of any breach of privilege, as they believed that the House would give no further protection to its witnesses than that which was given to witnesses in the courts of law; and that, if they had been guilty of a breach of privilege, they had been guilty of it unintentionally; and praying that they too might be discharged from further attendance on the House.—On the motion of Mr. DIVETT, Mr. D. Phillips was then called in and examined. In the course of his examination he explained the circumstances under which he had brought this action. The substance of it was that Mr. Parrott had made a statement respecting him before the Committee on Medical Relief, which was not only false, but, as he believed, maliciously false. He had lost in consequence all his parish business; but he could not say how far he had suffered in his private practice. He had endeavoured to obtain redress both from the board of guardians at Totness and from the Poor Law Commissioners in London, but ineffectually. He had therefore brought this action for words spoken before the committee, coupled with words spoken by Mr. Parrott before the board of guardians at Totness. In so doing he had no intention to offend against the privileges of the House. He was sorry he had infringed them, and if he had done so he had done it unintentionally. He was now aware that he had been guilty of a breach of privilege, and was willing to let the House take such steps as it might think fitting for the protection of its character. He was sharply cross-examined, for the purpose of extracting from him an admission that the action was brought solely upon the words spoken before the committee, and the declaration was put into his hands for that purpose. The witness, however, either was or appeared ignorant of the legal effect of the declaration, which he admitted had been read over to him. A very long and desultory discussion respecting the course to be adopted for the vindication of the privileges of the House ensued, of which it would be useless to attempt a summary; and at last Mr. Phillips and his attorneys, having severally declared their contrition and promised to take no further steps in the prosecution of the action, were discharged from custody.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

WE scarcely know whether to congratulate or condole with the magistrates' clerks on the dropping of the bill for their "regulation." But the death of the Settlement Bill is a cause for rejoicing, and there is now little chance of a change in the law for many years to come.

THE SALT-HILL MURDER.—At a very full meeting of the Bucks county magistrates (upwards of thirty being present), held in the magistrates' chamber, at Aylesbury, on Thursday last, for the transaction of county business, Dr. Lee, one of the justices, inquired of the chairman, Sir T. D. Aubrey, if the confession signed by John Tawell a few hours before his execution, and placed in the hands of the Rev. Mr. Cox, had been given up by the chaplain of the county prison to the magistrates, especially after the general feeling which prevailed on the subject at the last quarter sessions held for the county? The chairman having replied that that document was still retained by Mr. Cox, it was resolved, on the motion of Dr. Lee, that a letter be addressed to the Rev. Mr. Cox, requesting that he would deliver up the written confession of John Tawell to the magistrates, at the next quarter sessions for the county of Bucks. It was the general opinion of those present at the meeting, that, after this resolution, no further opposition to the wishes of the magistrates would take place on the part of the chaplain.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

MANY important judgments in this day's LAW TIMES well deserve the reader's attentive perusal; and there are other matters among the Legal Intelligence, &c., that will interest him. So crowded are our columns with the various matters which, at this season, press for publication, that we must forbear comment upon any.

THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF PROCEEDING AGAINST A TRADER-DEBTOR,

(1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8.)

A trader-debtor, who is subject to the Bankrupt Laws in force at the time of passing this statute, is liable to be made a bankrupt if he shall not "pay, secure, or compound" for his debt within twenty-one days after his creditor shall have filed an affidavit of his debt, and made a demand of payment upon him in the form prescribed by the statute.

2. The first step to be taken by the creditor is to file an affidavit in the Court of Bankruptcy of the justness of his debt, and of such debtor being (to the best of his belief) such a trader as aforesaid, and to cause a copy of this affidavit to be served personally upon his debtor, with a notice in writing attached, requiring immediate payment of his debt. Then, if such debtor shall not, within twenty-one days after service of the affidavit and notice, pay or secure the debt to his creditor's satisfaction, or enter into a bond with two sufficient sureties, as a commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy shall approve to pay any sum which shall be recovered in any action which may be brought against him by his creditor for the recovery of his debt, together with the costs thereof, or render himself to the custody of the gaoler of the court in which the action shall have been brought, after judgment is recovered against him, according to the practice of the court, or within such time as the said Court, or any judge thereof, shall direct, such trader shall have been deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the twenty-second day after service of such affidavit and notice, provided that a fiat in bankruptcy shall be issued against him within two calendar months from the filing of the affidavit.

WHAT TRADERS ARE LIABLE.

3. All bankers, brokers, and persons using the trade or profession of a scrivener, receiving other men's moneys or estates into their trust or custody, and persons insuring ships or their freight, or other matters against perils of the sea; warehousemen, wharfingers, packers, builders, carpenters, shipwrights, victuallers, keepers of inns, taverns, hotels, or coffee-houses; dyers, printers, bleachers, fullers, calenderers, cattle or sheep salesmen, and all persons using the trade of merchandize by way of bargaining, exchange, bartering, commission, consignment, or otherwise, in gross or by retail, and all persons who, either for themselves, or as agents, or factors for others, seek their living by buying and selling, or by buying and letting for hire, or by the workmanship of goods or commodities, shall be deemed traders liable to become bankrupt, provided that no farmer, grazier, common labourer, or workman for hire, receiver-general of the taxes, or member of or subscriber to any incorporated, commercial, or trading companies, established by charter or Act of Parliament, shall be deemed as such a trader liable by virtue of this Act to become bankrupt. (6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 2.)

THE AMOUNT OF DEBT REQUIRED.

Any single creditor, or any two or more creditors, being partners, whose debt shall amount to 100*l*. or upwards, or any two creditors whose debts shall amount to 150*l*. or upwards, or any three or more creditors whose debts shall amount to 200*l*. or upwards, may proceed against a trader-debtor under the provisions of this statute. The debt must be one for which an action can be maintained. (Ex parte Johnson, 11 L. J. Reports, N. S.—Bankruptcy, 41.)

THE AFFIDAVIT AND NOTICE.

5. The creditor must "file an affidavit or affidavits in her Majesty's Court of Bankruptcy, that such debt or debts is or are justly due to him or them respectively, and that such debtor, as he or they verily believe, is such trader as aforesaid,(a) and shall cause him to be served personally with a copy of such affidavit or affidavits, and with a notice in writing, requiring immediate payment of such debt or debts." (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8.)

THE AFFIDAVIT BY WHOM TO BE MADE.

6. If the trader be a debtor to a firm consisting of several partners, the affidavit may be made by one of them. (Ex parte Whitby, 4 Dea. 139; Mont. & Ch. 671, S. C.) Where the affidavit was made by the wife of the creditor, as due to herself and her husband, but the husband alone made the demand, and gave the notice, the provisions of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8, were held to have been complied with. (Ex parte Wylde, 11 L. J. Rep. N. S.—Bankruptcy, 18.) The affidavit of debt must be made by the creditor himself, and cannot be filed if made by any other person. (Ex parte Jeremiah Clark, 5 Law T. 153.) It is presumed that, in the case of a surviving partner, executor, &c. the same rule would hold as in the proof of debts under a bankruptcy; for the law and various decisions on which the reader is referred to Archbold's Bankruptcy, 10th edition, title "Proof of Debts," p. 182, et seq.; and Montagu & Ayrton's Bankruptcy, 2nd edition, title "Proof of Debts," p. 174, et seq. The decisions themselves would be too numerous to insert in a short practical treatise of this description.

(a) Vide ante, as to what traders are liable. (6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 2.)

HOW SWORN.

7. By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 67, it is enacted "That all affidavits to be made or used in matters of bankruptcy, or under or by virtue of any statute relating to bankrupts, or of this Act, shall and may be sworn before the Court of Review, or before either of the subdivision courts in bankruptcy, or any commissioner, or the master or any registrar or deputy registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy, or master in ordinary or extraordinary of the High Court of Chancery, or in Scotland or Ireland before a magistrate of the county, city, town, or place where such affidavit shall be sworn, or elsewhere, before a magistrate and attested by a notary, or before a British minister, consul, or vice-consul. The provisions of this section of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, afford an increased facility in the swearing of affidavits in bankruptcy beyond those of the 13th section of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, which direct that affidavits shall be sworn before a "master ordinary or extraordinary in Chancery."

WHEN AND WHERE TO BE FILED.

8. The creditor must file his affidavit in the Court of Bankruptcy before he serves the notice requiring payment upon his debtor; and the affidavit cannot be taken off the file, unless strong reason be shewn for it, after it is once on. Where the debtor was served with the notice before the affidavit was actually filed (Ex parte Gibson, 3 Dea. 531; Mount. & Ch. 255), and where the debt sworn to had been satisfied, and the creditor consented to the application (Ex parte Ferreday, 1 M. D. & D. 172), the Court has refused to make an order that the affidavit should be taken off the file. In Ex parte Ferreday (suprà) Sir John Cross said, "We might, perhaps, permit the party who has made the affidavit to acknowledge on the back of it that he had received satisfaction for his debt, upon the principle of indorsing satisfaction on a judgment, or the creditor might make an affidavit stating that the debt had been satisfied." (See also Ex parte Cheese, 3 M. D. & D. 79.)

This seems to be a hard case upon the debtor, as the affidavit may possibly be used improperly by some other creditor, who is desirous of issuing a fiat against the debtor. It also operates against him, inasmuch as he must deal disadvantageously with his creditors, and cannot mortgage or sell his property on advantageous terms, until the expiration of two months from the time of filing the affidavit.

In a case where the affidavit was made for a debt of 100*l*. and a bond for that amount had been given and accepted, the creditor afterwards filed a second affidavit, in which he stated that his debt was in reality 3,612*l*. the Court refused to order this second affidavit to be taken off the file (Ex parte Rose, 4 Dea. 66; Mont. & Ch. 149); although it may be matter of doubt whether a fiat could be supported for neglect of payment, or giving security for the larger sum on the second affidavit and notice, as an act of bankruptcy. (Ex parte Rhodes, 4 Dea. 125; Mont. & Ch. 319.)

When a public company proceed under the Act, it must be proved that some person was duly authorized by them to demand the payment of the debt. (Ex parte Gratton, 2 M. D. & D. 401.)

The affidavit is to be looked upon as analogous to an affidavit to hold to bail, and as a substitute for it, and not as a process tending to a fiat. (Ex parte Hall, Mont. & Ch. 365.)

Form of Notice to Debtor to pay.

Take notice that I, A B, of , in the of , have filed an affidavit in her Majesty's Court of Bankruptcy, a copy of which is hereunto annexed, to the effect that you, E F, are justly and truly indebted to me, the said A B, in the sum of , and that the same is now justly due and owing to me, the said A B. And I, the said A B, hereby require of you, the said E F, the immediate payment of the said debt or sum of , together with interest on the said debt, to the time of payment.

Dated this day of , one thousand, eight hundred and forty .

(Signed) A B.

A form of notice from the creditor's attorney, instead of from the creditor himself, may easily be framed from the above.

THE COPY OF THE AFFIDAVIT AND THE NOTICE, HOW SERVED.

7. The service must be upon the debtor in person.

Where the notice was served before the affidavit was filed, but, upon discovering his mistake, the creditor withdrew his first notice, and served the debtor with a second notice, the Court allowed the first notice to be treated as a nullity, and refused to set aside the proceedings under the second notice, that having been served after the affidavit was filed. LEADING CASES.—No. IV.

CLOSE v. PHIPPS.

(8 Scott N. R. 382.)

Money had and received—Rule of law as to voluntary payments—What payments are not voluntary—Assumption, or excess, of legal authority—Duress—Money paid to obtain a legal right—Ignorance of law and of fact.

It has been again and again laid down in a variety of cases, that assumpsit for money had and received cannot be supported where a voluntary payment has been made with full knowledge of the facts (Bilbie v. Lumley, 2 East, 469; Milnes v. Duncan, 6 B. & C. 677; Wilson v. Ray, 10 A. & E. 82), but the knowledge is required to be a present knowledge, existing in the mind at the time of payment. Consequently it has been held, that where a plaintiff has bonâ fide forgotten the facts which disentitled the defendant to receive the money, the money so paid may be recovered back in that form of action (Kelly v. Solari, 9 M. & W. 54); in which case it was also laid down, that it is not sufficient to preclude a party from recovering money paid by him under a mistake of fact that he had the means of knowledge, unless he paid it intentionally, not choosing to investigate the matter. (See also Bell v. Gardner, 1 Dowl. N. S. 683; Pope v. Wray, 4 M. & W. 451.)

Such being the general rule of law as to the effect of voluntary payments, it becomes necessary to inquire when payments are considered to be voluntary; and as every payment made by a reasonable man may be presumed to be voluntary until the contrary is shewn, we shall be better able to come to a right conclusion upon this subject, by referring to some of the cases in which the payments made have been decided to be not voluntary. It is then, in the first place, obvious that payments made under compulsion of law are not voluntary payments, but to such payments the rule above stated does not hold. Though clearly not coming within the class of voluntary payments, money paid under legal process, in order to prevent endless litigation, cannot be recovered in an action for money had and received. (Marriott v. Hampton, 7 T. R. 269; Brown v. M'Kinally, 1 Esp. 279; Hamlet v. Richardson, 9 Bing. 644; Milnes v. Duncan, 6 B. & C. 679; Kist v. Atkinson, 2 Camp. 63; Gower v. Popkin, 2 Stark. 8; Knibbs v. Hall, 1 Esp. 84. See also Moses v. M'Farlane, 2 Bur. 1009, and Cobden v. Kendricke, 4 T. R. 432.) Money, however, obtained under colour of legal process by an excess of authority, may be recovered back, for in such a case the payment is not a voluntary payment, and the law has no interest in supporting a legal authority wrongly assumed. (Snowdon v. Davies, 1 Taun. 359.) Nor is the payment voluntary, nor the authority of the law properly exercised, where a broker who had distrained on a tenant for rent, was requested not to sell, and promised his charges in consideration of such forbearance, and time was given and the charges paid, but the tenant objected to the amount of the charges; and it was held that if the charges were irregular, they might be recovered back. (Hills v. Street, 5 Bing. 37.) And it has been laid down that the payment of illegal fees, generally, cannot be considered as voluntary. (Dew v. Parsons, 2 B. & Ald. 562; Morgan v. Palmer, 2 B. & C. 729.) These two cases were decided upon the principle, that to render a payment voluntary, the party paying and the party receiving must stand upon an equal footing. In Morgan v. Palmer, Abbott, C. J. says—"It has been well argued that, the payment having been voluntary, it cannot be recovered back in an action for money had and received. I agree that such a consequence would have followed, 'had the parties been upon equal terms.' But if the one party has the power of saying to the other, 'that which you require shall not be done except upon the conditions which I choose to impose,' no person can contend that they stand upon any thing like an equal footing." Dew v. Parsons (ubi supra) was an action by the sheriff of Hereford to recover from the defendant a fee to which he alleged a title upon a warrant issued by him. The defendant claimed to set off a sum which his clerk had paid to the sheriff upon some other warrants, under a misapprehension as to his legal liability. It was contended that the defendant could not set off a sum which he was not compellable to pay, but which with a full knowledge of all the facts he had paid under a mistake as to the law; and in support of this view the case of Brisbane v. Dacres (5 Taun. 153) was relied upon; but Best, J. said, "I am clearly of opinion that the defendant is entitled to set off what he has overpaid to the sheriff, for this is not, like Brisbane v. Dacres, the case of a voluntary payment. In that case both parties were equally cognizant of the situation in which they stood, but here that was not the case." (Ibid. p. 568; Payne v. Chapman, 4 A. & E. 364.) Upon the same principle of the parties standing upon an unequal footing is founded the right to recover money paid under duress of person or goods. A party wrongly detaining the goods of another, and by such detention compelling the payment of a sum of money, is like the person unduly assuming the authority of the law. The per-dealing with him is scarcely to be regarded free agent. In Astley v. Reynolds (2 Stra. 915), which is the leading case as to the duress of goods, the Court says, "The plaintiff might have had such an immediate want of his goods, that an action of trover would not do his business. Where the rule volenti non fit injuria is applied, it must be where the party had his freedom of exercising his will, which the plaintiff had not. We must take it he paid the money relying on his legal remedy to get it back again." (Ibid. 916.) In that case the defendant had refused to deliver up some plate which the plaintiff had pawned, without the payment of a sum considerably higher than legal interest, and the action was brought to recover the difference between the money paid and the money due by law. The payment in that case, and in similar cases founded upon it, was held to be not voluntary, and the money was consequently recovered. (See Atlee v. Backhouse, 3 M. & W. 633, per Parke, B.; Lindon v. Hooper, 1 Cowp. 414; Skeate v. Beale, 11 A. & E. 983; Ashmole v. Wainwright, 2 Q. B. 837; Smith v. Sleap, 12 M. & W. 585.) In Skeate v. Beale, above cited, the question was, whether a written agreement was void because made under duress of goods, and the Court held that the agreement was not void on that ground; but in the judgment the Court distinctly recognised the rule above stated. Lord Denman says (ibid. 990), "We consider the law to be clear, and founded on good reason, that an agreement is not void because made under duress of goods. There is no distinction in this respect between a deed and an agreement not under seal; and with regard to the former, the law is laid down in 2 Inst. 483, and Sheppard's Touchstone, p. 61, and the distinction pointed out between duress of or menace to the person, and duress of goods. The former is a constraining force, &c.; but the fear that goods may be taken or injured does not deprive any one of his free agency who possesses that ordinary firmness which the law requires all to exert. It is not necessary now to enter into the consideration of cases in which it has been held that money paid to redeem goods wrongfully seized, or to prevent their wrongful seizure, may be recovered back in an action for money had and received, for the distinction between those cases and the present, which must be taken to be that of an agreement, not compulsorily but voluntarily entered into, is obvious." In Ashmole v. Wainwright, the defendants, common carriers, refused to re-deliver plaintiff's goods which they had carried for him, except on payment of 5*l*. 5*s*. charges. He insisted that he was not liable to pay any thing, but ultimately, defendants having said that they would take nothing less than the whole sum, he paid the whole, in order to regain his goods, protesting that he was not liable to pay any thing, and that if he was liable, the charge was exorbitant. He had not tendered any smaller sum. Afterwards, without having demanded the return of any surplus, he brought assumpsit for money had and received, and on the trial the jury estimated the defendant's charges at 1*l*. 10*s*. The argument there mainly turns upon the necessity of a tender, and upon the mutual want of equity between the parties; the plaintiff in not having offered any sum, and the defendants having claimed a much larger sum than the jury found they were entitled to; but it was not disputed, as a general rule of law that an action would lie to recover money paid under a duress of goods. Patteson, J. says, "I should be sorry to throw any doubt upon the point that an action for money had and received will lie to recover money paid on the wrongful detainer of goods; it would be very dangerous to do so, the doctrine being in itself so reasonable, and supported by so many authorities." (2 Q. B. 845.) Coleridge, J. says, "I never doubted that an action for money had and received might be maintained to recover money paid upon a wrongful detainer of goods." (p. 846.) And the opinion of the whole Court was, that the action lay, without any tender being necessary. Parker v. The Great Western Railway (7 Scott, N. R. 835) is a recent case, founded upon a similar, but not exactly the same, principle. It was there held, that money paid to induce a defendant to do that which by law he is bound to do, is not a voluntary payment; and that decision seems to rest upon grounds very analogous to those upon which the cases of Dew v. Parsons and Morgan v. Palmer, above cited, were decided. The defendants, the Railway Company, having exacted from the plaintiff, a carrier, more than they charged to other carriers for the conveyance of goods for them by their carriages, in breach of their Acts of Parliament, it was held that the sums, thus obtained from the plaintiff, being payments made to induce the company to do that which they were bound to do without them, might be recovered. (See also Pickford v. The Grand Junction Railway Company, 8 M. & W. 377, 10 M. & W. 399; Ansell v. Waterhouse, 6 M. & S. 385; Smith v. Bromley, 2 Doug. 697, n.; Parsons v. Blandy, Wightwick, 22; Waterhouse v. Keen, 4 B. & C. 200.)

Following the case of Parker v. The Great Western Railway Company in time and in doctrine, we now come to Close v. Phipps, decided in the same court. In this case, which we have placed at the head of these remarks, the late husband of the plaintiff had mortgaged certain property at Balstonborough to one John Welch to secure a sum of 1,000*l*. and interest. In April 1813 the defendant, as the attorney of the mortgagee, gave notice to the plaintiff (who was administratrix cum testamento annexo of her deceased husband) that he would proceed to sell the property under the power given by the mortgage-deed, unless the sum due for principal and interest were immediately paid. The defendant advertised the property for sale on the 2nd of October. On the 20th of September one James, a solicitor, called upon the defendant, on behalf of the plaintiff, for the purpose of paying off the principal and interest, when the defendant refused to stop the sale or to deliver up the deeds without being paid a sum (in addition to the principal and interest, and his costs) for extra charges and expenses on the trial. Cresswell, J. held that the money having been extorted from the plaintiff under a species of duress, she was entitled to recover it back. A rule to enter a nonsuit having been obtained, it was discharged by the Court, upon the authority of Parker v. The Great Western Railway Company, without the least hesitation. Tindal, C. J. says, "I think this is quite as strong a case as that last referred to. The interest of the plaintiff to prevent the sale by submitting to the demand was so great that it may well be said the payment was made under what the law calls a species of duress." (8 Scott, 384.) A similar decision, founded upon very similar facts, was pronounced almost contemporaneously by the Court of Queen's Bench, in the case of Wakefield v. Newbon (13 Law J. N.S. Q.B. 258).

Such are some of the more important grounds on which payments are held not voluntary, but a payment of money made in ignorance of the law, but with a knowledge of the facts, is regarded as a voluntary payment, and cannot be recovered, in accordance with the maxim of the civil law, ignorantia juris excusat neminem; but ignorance as to the state of facts alters the character of the payment, and it may be recovered. See the cases of Bilbie v. Lumley (ubi sup.); Lowry v. Bordieu (Dougl. 467); Lothian v. Henderson (3 B. & P. 420); Gomery v. Bond (3 M. & S. 378); Skyring v. Greenwood (4 B. & C. 281); Shaw v. Picton (4 B. & C. 715); and the cases collected in the learned note of Mr. Smith to the case of Marriott v. Hampton (2 Smith's Leading Cases, 238). We cannot better conclude these remarks than by quoting Lord Mansfield's true and eloquent description of the action for money had and received, which is the form of action in which money paid under the circumstances above stated is recoverable. "This kind of equitable action," said his lordship, "to recover back money which ought not in justice to be kept, is very beneficial, and therefore much encouraged. It lies only for money which, ex æquo et bono, the defendant ought to refund. It does not lie for money paid by the plaintiff, which is claimed of him as payable in point of honour and honesty, although it could not have been recovered from him in any course of law, as in payment of a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations, or contracted during his infancy, or to the extent of principal and legal interest upon an usurious contract, or for money fairly lost at play; because in all these cases the defendant may retain it with a safe conscience, though, by positive law, he was barred from recovering; but it lies for money paid by mistake, or upon a consideration which happens to fail, or for money got through imposition, extortion, or oppression, or an undue advantage taken of a party's situation, contrary to laws made for the protection of persons under those circumstances." (2 Burr. 1012.)

JUDGE'S CHAMBERS.—IMPORTANT NOTICE.—On Thursday Mr. Justice Wightman, the judge appointed to remain in town and dispose of the business in the whole of the common-law courts cognisable by a single judge, in consequence of the crowded state of the chambers, arising from the immense accumulation of applications before him in causes the venues of which are for one or other of the counties in which the assizes are about to commence; as also interlocutory matters in cases that parties are being sued in London and Middlesex, where there are no sittings until November next, made an order for the regulation of business to be brought before him, and during the day the following notice was posted in his chambers:—" Notice.—Queen's Bench Chambers, July 10, 1845. The following regulations for transacting the business at these chambers will be strictly observed until further notice. Original summonses only to be placed on the file. Summonses adjourned by the judge will be heard at ten o'clock precisely, according to number. The summonses of the day will be called at five minutes past ten, numbered and heard by the judge in their regular order; if the parties are not ready they will be passed over. One summons only to be attended in the judge's room at a time. There will be a waiting-room for counsel and their clients, who will be admitted at two o'clock, according to their numbers on the counsel file, if ready; if not ready, they will be passed over. Affidavits upon ex parte applications for the judge's order (except orders to hold to bail) to be left the day before the orders are applied for, and such affidavits to be properly indorsed with the names of the parties, the nature of the application, and the names of the attorneys. All affidavits produced before the judge must be indorsed and filed."

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE NEW SOLICITOR-GENERAL.—Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, the new Solicitor-general, is a member and bencher of Lincoln's-inn, and first entered as a student in 1818, as pupil to Mr. Thomas Abraham, whom he left, and became the pupil of Mr. Wilkinson, of Pump-court, Mr. Crowder, Queen's Counsel, being a pupil of that gentleman at the time. He afterwards took out his certificate, and acted as a special pleader until the 7th of May, 1824, Trinity Term, when he was called to the bar. The late Sir William Webb Follett had been entered of the Inner Temple in the same year with Mr. Kelly (1818). They were constant readers together, and were called to the Bar in the same term. Mr. Kelly and Sir William Follett soon obtained a firm position at the Bar, and were rival juniors, each being engaged in most of the principal and important causes brought before the Court, being separated only by the circuits; the one (Mr. Kelly) having chosen the Norfolk, and Sir W. Follett the Western circuit. In 1835, on the occasion of Sir Robert Peel coming into power, Mr. Kelly received the honour of a silk gown, with Sir W. Follett, preparatory to the latter being appointed Solicitor-general. Mr. Kelly first took his seat in Parliament in that year, for Ipswich, but was, on petition, unseated, and remained out until 1837, when, at the election — having been defeated, with Mr. R. Wason, by Messrs. Milner Gibson and Tuffnell, by a small majority—he succeeded, on petition, in ousting Mr. Tuffnell, and took his seat for Ipswich. At the general election, 1841, he was defeated; and although his opponents were unseated, and the election declared void, he declined to risk another contest, and again remained out of Parliament until 1843, when Sir Alexander Grant having accepted the Chiltern Hundreds, and a vacancy being thereby occasioned, he was, after a severe struggle, elected for Cambridge. The closeness with which Mr. Kelly has trod upon the heels of the late Attorney-general is somewhat curious. Both entered as students the same year, read together, were called to the Bar the same term, received silk gowns together, and after the remains of Sir W. Follett were conveyed to the tomb, Mr. Kelly was appointed Solicitor-general.—Globe.

Absconding of an Official Assignee.—Considerable excitement was caused in the Manchester District Bankruptcy Court on Monday morning last, by the report that Mr. John Holt Stanway, one of the four official assignees appointed by the Lord Chancellor in connection with this Court, had absconded. Various rumours were in circulation as to the cause of this strange step; but we believe that the following may be relied on as tolerably correct. Mr. Stanway was the trustee of the late Mr. Robert Scarr, of the firm of Scarr, Petty, and Coulborn, of this town; and we understand for some time past he has been repeatedly called upon to render an account of the trust funds in his hands. Ultimately, after much pressure, he furnished an account about a fortnight ago, and it was then ascertained that there were sums for which he could not account to the amount of upwards of 6,000*l.* He was called on to explain this deficit, and it is supposed that he was unable to do so satisfactorily, and therefore determined to quit the country. As considerable alarm may exist with respect to moneys or property under his control, as the official assignee of various bankrupts' estates, we have great pleasure in stating that, so far as has yet been ascertained, after a careful investigation, there is no reason to suppose that any defalcation whatever will be found in connection with his official assigneeship. He left this town, we understand, on Friday last, and it is believed that he sailed from Liverpool on Saturday morning, in the Great Western steamer, for New York, taking with him his wife and four children. It is stated that he left behind him his resignation of his office, addressed to the Lord Chancellor. Of course his resignation will leave a vacancy, which the Lord Chancellor will doubtless fill up ere long. It seems probable that Mr. Stanway had been applying the trust moneys in his hands to the liquidation of some old demands upon him, in connection with the embarrassments of the late firm of John Holt Stanway and Brother, about six years ago, and that this course has led to his present flight.—Manchester Guardian.

Will of General Sir Charles Wale, G.C.B.—The will of this officer has just been proved. Lady Wale enjoys the life interest, under settlement, of 11,000*l.* stock, which, by the will, testator has apportioned to the children at her decease; the better half of the plate is left to her, as well as the personal estate, sworn under 2,000*l.* Certain freeholds and copyholds to be sold for the absolute benefit of his son, Charles Brent Wale. The produce of the sale and other freeholds is to be applied to raise portions of 1,500*l.* for each of his sons, and 900*l.* for each of his daughters, beyond their interest in the property under settlement. The residue of the freehold he has devised to his son, Charles Brent Wale; and his other son, the Rev. Alex. M. Wale, succeeds also to a life interest in a large portion of the freehold property. His executors are the Hon. N. Fellowes, Samuel Prest, and Sherlock Willis. Sir Charles had married three times, each wife the daughter of a clergyman—viz. Miss Sherrard, Miss Johnson, and Miss Brent, and has left a large family.

Will of Colonel Willard.—The will of this officer, who was a magistrate for Sussex, has been proved. He bequeaths the whole of his real and personal estate, the latter sworn under 3,000*l.* to his widow, Mrs. Charlotte Willard. He was 74 when he died.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Udall and Miller, Assignees of Innes, a Bankrupt, v. Walton and Others.

Sir,—I find by the report of the business of the week in the Court of Exchequer, in No. 116 of the Law Times, that you report the rule herein as being made absolute: the contrary was the fact; it was discharged.

Believing the case to be of considerable importance to the Profession, I am induced to give you the facts as well as the results of the case. Should, you, however, be of opinion that the case is not of sufficient practical importance to justify your publication of this letter, I beg you will suppress it.

The facts of the case, so far as they are of importance, were as follow:—The bankrupt, on the 20th July, 1844, wrote to the defendants, stating several acts had been committed; but from the tenor of the letter, the words "of bankruptcy" were clearly implied. On the 1st August, 1844, an adverse execution, at the suit of defendants, was levied on the bankrupt's goods and chattels; on the 6th August a fiat issued, which was opened on the 8th August. Notice was given to the sheriff of acts of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt prior to the seizure. The sheriff thereupon applied for and obtained an order under the Interpleader Act, on which an issue was directed, the claimants, as assignees, being plaintiffs, and the execution creditors defendants (the bankrupt, therefore, not being a party to the record), the question to be tried being whether, at the time of levying and seizing the bankrupt's goods and chattels by the execution creditors (the defendants), they had notice of any prior acts of bankruptcy by the bankrupt committed.

The case was tried at the last Gloucester Assizes, before the Chief Baron, when the bankrupt (who was put into the witness-box) proved he wrote the letter of the 20th July, 1844, giving the execution-creditors notice of several acts of bankruptcy by him committed, and that he gave such letter, with a penny, to a servant woman [called] to post; he also proved telling defendant's attorney in a conversation prior to the seizure, he had committed acts of bankruptcy. The bankrupt also proved giving instructions to his maid-servant [called] to deny him to a creditor, which denial was long prior to the 20th July, 1844; he also proved [bills of exchange admitted, which the bankrupt accepted in favour of the petitioning creditor to upwards of 200*l.* being put in] that a debt of upwards of 50*l.* was due from him to the petitioning-creditor at and prior to the date of the acts of bankruptcy proved. The date of fiat was also proved—the posting the letter by the servant-woman—the denial to a creditor by the servant-girl, and the course of the post by a clerk from the Post-office, shewing when a letter posted at Cheltenham would reach Wolverhampton. These facts being established, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs, with liberty for the defendant to move for a nonsuit—1st, on the ground that general notice of an act of bankruptcy was insufficient; that notice of a specific act of bankruptcy was required under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, and that both the letter and conversation of the bankrupt only gave a general notice of an act of bankruptcy; 2nd, for liberty to move for a new trial, on the ground that the bankrupt was an inadmissible witness under Lord Denman's Act. The Chief Baron, it should be observed, admitted the bankrupt, considering him a competent witness to prove collateral facts, the bankruptcy being admitted not to be in issue by counsel on both sides, but that he, the bankrupt, was an inadmissible witness to prove the constituents of bankruptcy, his rejection arising not on the ground of "interest," but that of public policy.

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd, last Easter Term, as counsel for defendants, obtained a rule on both points, and which was argued on the 9th June inst. Mr. Keating and Mr. Dowdeswell shewing cause against the rule, and the result (the facts, however, being altogether erroneously stated) was reported in the Times of the 9th June, the judgment of the Court being as follows:—

"There was no doubt that the bankrupt could not be called to support his commission or defeat it; but the object of his testimony was quite collateral to that issue. His bankruptcy had been proved aliunde, and he was only wanted to prove that the plaintiff had notice of an act of bankruptcy previously committed by him, and for that purpose he was clearly competent. It was next objected that the proof of notice was not sufficient, for it was too vague, and not so precise as it ought to have been. The Court thought, however, that nothing more was necessary under the Act than was here proved by the bankrupt; nothing could be more precise than the information from a man that he had committed several acts of bankruptcy, and it is quite unnecessary to require the specific acts to be mentioned under such circumstances."

It is thought this is the first case in which the bankrupt's testimony has been admitted under Lord Denman's Act; at all events I have not heard of or seen any reported case in which his evidence has been held admissible. In Miller v. Mullings, also heard before the Chief Baron, I understand the bankrupt's evidence was rejected; but he was there called to prove the petitioning creditor's debt, and the bankruptcy was in question; this, therefore, induces me to think this communication may have interest for my professional brethren, and has caused me to trouble you with these details.

On the point whether general or specific notice of an act of bankruptcy is sufficient to comply with the statute 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, it is well known there has been most conflicting opinions; and it will be seen by the judgment, that the Court of Exchequer has decided this point in conformity with the dictum of Baron Parke in Ramsey v. Eaton (10 M. & W. 22), and the expressed opinion of Lord Abinger and the same judge in Hocking and Others v. Acraman (12 M. & W. 170), and is also in conformity with the decision of Lord Denman in Arthur v. Whitworth (6 Jur. 323), which, although not decided upon the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, yet is an authority for the position that general notice of an act of bankruptcy is sufficient. That case was decided upon the 82nd section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, which, in its proviso, will be found, on examination, to be almost identical in its terms with the proviso to the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29. The expression of the bankrupt there was—"It will be of no use to you; I have committed acts of bankruptcy;" and, according to the report, Lord Denman said, "It is impossible to say general notice is not sufficient." The point of notice was discussed in the case of Bird v. Bass (6 M. & G.), in which Maule and Coltman, JJ. held that notice meant "knowledge;" and your readers will remember the recent case of Conway and Others v. Nall, in the Common Pleas, reported in 5 Law T. No. 111, in which the point as to notice was also very much commented upon, but it was not decided, because in that case there was notice specifically of an act which did not amount to an act of bankruptcy, the act of which notice was given not being completed.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.
H. Stiles,
Solicitor to the assignees.

LAW CLUB.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—A strong feeling has been for some time entertained by many members of our profession that a Club in London, the members of which shall be the attorneys and solicitors from the country, exclusive of those practising in London, would be a source of immense comfort and advantage to its members. It is however difficult to ascertain the general opinion of my professional brethren through any other medium than that of your excellent paper. May I therefore hope you will be good enough to make public this intimation, and to solicit as general as possible an expression of opinion upon it.

Having made inquiries as to the probable expenses attending a scheme of this nature, I shall be most happy to enter into communication with any gentleman who may be desirous of furthering the project.

Yours truly,
A Country Solicitor.

London, 27th June, 1845.

P. S. I send you my name and present address in town, for the purpose of any communication that may be requisite.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

H. B. has transmitted the following comments on the Real Property Amendment Act:—

It is to be hoped that the Lord Chancellor's Bill to Amend the Law of Real Property, a copy of which appears in your journal of the 5th inst. will not, like its predecessor, be hurried through Parliament without that consideration which so important an enactment deserves, lest the confusion created in the practice of conveyancing by the late Act be rendered worse confounded by an ill-digested attempt at amendment.

The first section of the present Bill seems to promise a radical amendment by totally repealing an Act which, after much doubt and confusion of opinion, has for the most part been treated as a nullity. Many of its provisions have, however, been re-enacted in somewhat different words, and it appears to have been intended with a somewhat more extensive application. Thus the 2nd section of the late Act applied only to such freeholds as might previously have been conveyed by lease and release, whilst the 2nd section of the present Bill declares, "That all corporeal tenements and hereditaments shall, as regards the conveyance of the immediate freehold thereof, be deemed to lie in grant as well as in livery." Now, there are some "corporeal tenements and hereditaments" which could not have been conveyed by lease and release, but which must clearly be included under the very comprehensive term "all" in this Bill; for instance, the freehold possessions of ecclesiastical corporations, whereof the "immediate freehold" is, in the majority of instances, conveyed by them to lessees for three lives by lease, with livery of seizin, which lease is exempt from ad valorem stamp duty. As the rendering of livery of seizin unnecessary is one of the objects intended to be effected, it would certainly seem that a grant by an ecclesiastical corporation without livery may, under this Act, be substituted for the present lease with it: but the section goes on to render "every deed" operating as a grant under that Act, chargeable with the same stamp duty as if it had been a release founded on a lease for a year, and also with the stamp duty with which such lease for a year would have been chargeable. Therefore, although, since the conveyance by feoffment has fallen almost into disuse, ecclesiastical leases form the greater number of instances in which the delivery of seizin is necessary, and although the property, the subject of such leases, is declared to be in "grant as well as in livery," yet would a grant thereof without livery be either chargeable with ad valorem lease for a year, and progressive duties, as if it had been a conveyance by lease and release, or be altogether void, on the argument that as the lease and release were never applicable to the case, so neither is the present Bill. But surely it was not contemplated by the framers of the Bill to exclude from its operation the cases I have alluded to, which are of daily occurrence in many parts of the kingdom.

Again: this section renders every deed, operating as a grant and made in pursuance of this section, chargeable not only with the stamp duty with which it would have been chargeable had it been a release founded on a lease for a year, but also with the stamp duty with which such lease for a year would have been chargeable, "exclusive of progressive duty;" so that in every case where the lease for a year, if prepared, would have been chargeable with progressive duty, every deed made in pursuance of this section must be chargeable with progressive duty on its own folios and with progressive duty on the folios of which the imaginary lease for a year might have consisted if it had been prepared and ingrossed. If this section passes as it at present stands, we must, in examining a deed made in pursuance of this Act, see that sufficient stamps are impressed to carry the number of folios which would have been contained in the lease for a year had such a thing been still in existence; a no very easy or pleasing duty in examining a lengthy title. In such cases it would be well to resort to the old mode of conveyance by feoffment.

The whole Bill requires strict examination and much consideration, and as it will doubtless receive these from yourself and others more competent than I am to comment on it, I shall not be justified in occupying your valuable space with any addition to my foregoing rather hasty observations, on what appears to be objectionable in the 2nd section, and which you will deal with as in your better judgment you may think they deserve. I would, however, in conclusion, beg your attention and that of your readers to section 9, the intention and effect of which appears very obscure.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1845.

TO THE SUBSCRIBERS TO THE LAW TIMES.

AN unexpected influx of advertisements at the last moment, and since the succeeding remarks were in type, compels us to devote to them a large portion of our added columns. Under such circumstances, the charge for a single number only will be made for this double number, whose additional pages are presented gratuitously to the reader.

TO READERS.

WE regret that it should be necessary to present another double number, not merely as being attended with such a heavy sacrifice on our own part, but as imposing additional cost to such of our subscribers as do not choose to avail themselves of the advantage of pre-payment, which gives to them all the supplements and double numbers without charge. But so heavy and numerous have been the judgments of the two last Terms, that we must provide this added space for them, or abandon the plan of presenting verbatim reports of all the written judgments, which has given so great satisfaction to the Profession, and enabled them to preserve a complete record of all the deliberately framed decisions of the Courts of Law. We trust that we have not erred in the conclusion that the readers of the LAW TIMES would rather incur the two or three shillings of cost to procure this series of judgments than that it should be broken by omissions or curtailments, without which they could not be compressed into the regular sheet. If we have erred in this supposition, we shall be obliged by a candid statement to that effect, that we may revert to the old system of brief notes instead of verbatim reports of judgments.

For the same reason the judgments are in arrear. So numerous have they been (in the whole upwards of a hundred written ones having been delivered in the common law courts since the close of Easter Term) that no diligence of reporter, short-hand writer, or printer, could keep pace with them. During the last week alone, twenty-five, some of them very long, were delivered by the Queen's Bench and the Exchequer. These, of themselves, will fill two or three of our papers. Our readers will therefore acknowledge, we trust, the impossibility of bringing them out, as is our wont with the regular business of the Term, within a few days after their delivery. They must wait their turn, and we must pray the patience of readers until that turn comes. All practicable speed shall be made, and perhaps another double number may help to bring up the arrear; but even with such appliances some time must elapse before the unprecedented business of these laborious Terms can be finally cleared off.

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.

IT is announced by the Government, that this is one of the measures intended to be passed during the present session. We are glad of it; but at the same time we must express our regret that the Bill should be passing with all the imperfections that have been so ably pointed out by the many experienced members of the Profession who have commented upon it through the LAW TIMES. And still there is the mischievous clause that throws open all courts of Insolvency and Bankruptcy to the Sham Lawyers, giving the sanction of the law to a race of harpies whom, to this moment, it has been the wise policy of the law to discourage.

But if the Profession will not bestir itself to ward off this threatened blow before it falls, and while yet it may with ease be parried, no blame can attach to the LAW TIMES. It has done its duty of timely warning: it can do no more.

MR. CARUS WILSON.

IN our last number but one, our readers will perceive that the attention of the Legal Profession has been drawn to the recent important case of Mr. CARUS WILSON, by an advertisement issuing from his friends. The Jersey authorities distinctly shewed by their conduct a consciousness of the oppressiveness and injustice of their proceedings towards that gentleman, by the unprecedented course of compelling a reluctant prisoner to quit the gaol to which they had consigned him for eight months! Eight long, tedious winter months in a felon's c for the contempt of protesting against the jurisdiction of their court, after they had been challenged according to law, and for protesting also against the injustice of allowing the proceedings to be conducted in a foreign and unintelligible tongue. We do not wish to argue the questions raised on the recent applications to the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer, but we certainly quite agree with the remarks of our quarterly cotemporary, the Law Magazine, in the May number, that if the "alleged facts in relation to Mr. WILSON'S committal be true, some supervision should be established to secure a more judicial performance of the functions of the Court Royal than has been displayed in this case." And we also think that Mr. WILSON should have the means afforded him of procuring legal redress and pecuniary compensation for the wrongs done him, if his imprisonment was illegal and unnecessarily severe. We therefore hope the application to the Legal Profession will be successful, and that a sufficient amount may be raised by subscription to enable the battle to be fairly fought. Mr. WILSON has already established one important point of constitutional law, the superintendence of the superior courts of Westminster-hall over the Jersey tribunals by the writ of habeas corpus. He is now seeking to reform the system of administering justice in the Channel Islands; a system we cannot but think singularly absurd and cumbrous, and inapplicable to the times in which we live. Mr. WILSON wishes thoroughly to introduce the Trial by Jury, and to make all causes, where Englishmen are concerned, be conducted in the English tongue. He also wishes to destroy the constitution of a tribunal by which the judges are not necessarily lawyers, but are elected by the rate-payers, like a parish vestry! These seem to us, we confess, very clear improvements, and in the establishment of which Mr. WILSON deserves success. How absurd that, in a part of the Queen's dominions only a few hours' sail from Southampton, a barbarous jargon should be the language of the courts, and tradesmen and farmers the presiding judges! No wonder Sir JAMES GRAHAM has thought it right to appoint a commission of inquiry into the subject. We wish to know what has been done about this same commission. We hope some M.P. will interrogate the Right Hon. Baronet on the subject. The good intentions of the Home-office should not be allowed to remain torpid. We understand that an action has been brought by Mr. WILSON, and the declaration served, against the gaoler of Jersey, for not delivering to that gentleman a copy of the warrant under which he was detained, till several days after the demand, for which the fifth section of the Habeas Corpus Act gives the party grieved the sum of 100*l.*; and unless these highly remedial provisions of that great statute are to remain a dead letter, we presume Mr. WILSON must succeed in his action. But that action leaves the great question between him and the Jersey authorities at large; and, we repeat, we consider that Mr. WILSON ought to have a fair and fair opportunity of obtaining redress for an imprisonment which they who inflicted it have, by their conduct, admitted to have been severe and unreasonable, at least, if not absolutely illegal.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

SOLICITORS AND AUCTIONEERS.

IT was with surprise, that gave place to indignation, that we received the following printed circular:—

On the Transfer of Property by Public Auction and Private Contract: the Reciprocity or Allowance System, &c.

Mr. Rainy respectfully begs leave to solicit the attendance in this Gallery, on Tuesday, July 8th, at two o'clock precisely, of noblemen and gentlemen interested in the transfer of property by public auction or private contract.

The purpose of the proposed meeting is to consider the adoption of some means of counteracting and abolishing the unfair system at present pursued by very many Solicitors and other intermediate persons, or middle men, of secretly trafficking for gain with the patronage of their employers; a system which, while it is subversive of fair dealing, independence, and honourable competition among men of business, operates greatly and manifestly to the prejudice of the interests of the principals.

Mr. Rainy will on this occasion enter into explanations of proceedings connected with sales of property, which he trusts will not be deemed irrelevant or uninteresting, or be considered as in any degree personal, or as a betrayal of private confidence. He hop also, that he shall not be thought obtrusive or presumptuous in his endeavours to induce others to oppose on principle (as he has invariably done during a professional career of upwards of twenty years) lerogatory compacts between Solicitors and Auctioneers, &c. in reference to any transaction whatever.

As his statement will involve an exposition of the varied practices of auctioneers and persons designating themselves estate and house agents, together with information relative to scales of commission, and other charges, Mr. Rainy particularly requests the attendance of Solicitors, and also that of Mr. George Robins, Messrs. Christie and Manson, Mr. Alderman Farebrother, Mr. Charles Smith, Mr. W. W. Simpson, and the members of the Select Society of Auctioneers.

14, Regent-street, July 2nd, 1845.

Whether this circular was prompted by an honest conviction of an existing wrong and a chivalrous resolve to sacrifice himself for the sake of justice; or whether, as some might be ill-natured enough to suspect, Mr. RAINY has resorted to this contrivance as a sort of indirect advertisement whereby to bring himself before the public, it contains matter of too serious a character not to claim special notice in this place.

Mr. RAINY has preferred a very grave charge against the Solicitors, a charge so seriously affecting their character, that it must be met either with indignant denial or with an investigation into the names and acts of the guilty parties who have reflected such disgrace upon the Profession.

Mr. RAINY has invited a meeting of the owners of property for the avowed purpose of preferring against the Solicitors a charge no less serious than that "of secretly trafficking for gain with the patronage of their employers." This, according to Mr. RAINY, is not an infrequent crime committed by a few exceptions to the strict rules of professional honour, but the practice of "very many solicitors"—a practice which he further denounces as being "subversive of fair dealing," and as operating "to the prejudice of the interests of the principals."

And Mr. RAINY concludes these sweeping charges with a scrap in the "holier-than-thou" strain. He expresses anxiety that others should adopt the principle "he has invariably done during a professional career of upwards of twenty years," (the puff indirect!) and that they, like himself, (good Mr. RAINY!) will be induced to avoid for ever hereafter "all derogatory compacts between Solicitors and Auctioneers."

Lest silence under such accusations should be construed into acquiescence, we must view them seriously, and at once meet Mr. RAINY'S charges with an emphatic and indignant denial.

We deny that such practices are sanctioned by the Profession, that any number of Solicitors are guilty of them—even if they exist at all, which we much doubt; and with equal emphasis do we assert, that if any Solicitors were to attempt them, they would find no concurrence from any respectable Auctioneer.

Mr. RAINY'S charges are general, and therefore they can be met only by a general contradiction. He has accused "very many Solicitors" of cheating their employers, and disgracing their profession by practices which are not merely unprofessional, but dishonest. He has accused the Auctioneers of participating in these frauds. On behalf of both of the Professions thus publicly insulted, we demand NAMES and PROOFS, that, if the charge be true, the guilty may be punished, and the innocent released from the imputation now cast indiscriminately upon all; and that, if it be false, the accused may have an opportunity of boldly meeting and answering it.

This grave matter cannot rest where it is; and, therefore, we shall return to it again.

AUCTIONEERS' COMMISSION.

THE LAW TIMES reporting only decisions on points of law, and not trials at Nisi Prius, we had made no arrangement for reporting specially a case of very great interest, affecting the practice of auctions, which was tried on Saturday at Guildhall, before the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer and a special jury. Consequently, we are compelled to extract the best report we could find, which was that in the Times, and which appears below.

But brief as is this report, it is sufficient for the only purpose for which it will interest our readers, namely, the settlement of the much-disputed question as to the charges of auctioneers and estate-agents, which is in substance, whether, after an estate is placed in the hands of an auctioneer or agent for sale, at the usual commission, such commission may be claimed, even though the estate were sold by the vendor or some other agent, and not through the intervention of such original auctioneer or agent.

Most of the eminent auctioneers in London were called to prove the custom of the trade, and the jury, under the direction of the learned judge, immediately returned a verdict for the plaintiff, thus establishing the right of agents selling on commission to that commission, although the estate was sold without their intervention.

In other words, that a vendor shall not defraud an auctioneer of the fruit of his exertions y anticipating him in the sale; for such, in plain terms, is the meaning of this most righteous decision.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.
Saturday, July 5.
(Sittings at Nisi Prius, before Sir F. POLLOCK, Chief Baron, and a special jury, at Guildhall.)
ROBINS v. BURKE and ANOTHER.
Auctioneer's charges—Important decision.

Jervis, Q. C. and Ogle were counsel for the plaintiff; Cockburn, Q. C. and Bovill appeared for the defendants.

The plaintiff is Mr. George Robins, the celebrated auctioneer, and this was an action in which he claimed the sum of 644*l.* being the amount of commission alleged to be due to him from the defendants as the vendors of an estate in Bucks, which they had placed in his hands in May 1841. On the part of the defendants the sum of 300*l.* was paid into court; and the question now to be decided was, whether the plaintiff was entitled to any thing beyond that sum.

It appears that the defendants are the trustees under the will of a Mr. Grath, who died possessed of a considerable estate in the county of Bucks. Being directed to sell the property, the defendants offered it to the Duke of Buckingham for 60,000*l.* but without effect, as his Grace, having had the estate surveyed, did not feel inclined to give more than 51,000*l.* for it. Before this the plaintiff was applied to by the defendant to know on what terms he would undertake to "knock down" the property. The plaintiff replied, that he should expect twenty guineas for preliminary expenses and one per cent. commission for an actual sale, but that in the event of the property being bought in, he should only claim fifty guineas and all disbursements, these latter being included, of course in the one per cent. commission on a sale. These terms were assented to, and the plaintiff took his measures to dispose of the estate on the 31st of August. Before that day the defendants renewed their treaty with the Duke, who, on the 30th, concluded it by becoming the purchaser at the price originally named by the trustees. This took place without the privity of the plaintiff, who, when acquainted with the matter, put in his claim to the one per cent. commission, and now called several eminent auctioneers on his behalf, to prove that by the custom of the trade the full amount was payable under the circumstances of the case.

On the part of the defendants, the Duke of Buckingham was called to prove that he had not bought the estate through the plaintiff's intervention, and that he had not been influenced by his advertisements to accede to the terms proposed by the defendants, the fact being that his inducement to purchase the estate arose from its propinquity to other lands belonging to him in the same county.

The Chief Baron, at the close of the plaintiff's reply, summed up the case to the jury, leaving it to them to say whether, although the plaintiff might have had nothing to do with the actual sale to the Duke of Buckingham, he was not fairly entitled to his full commission on the purchase-money paid by his Grace, as though he had "knocked down the estate" to him.

The jury at once returned a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Friday, June 27.

Re SPLBY, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Form of order where sale of part of a lunatic's estate made under a decree in Chancery—Lunatic trustee.

Rolt supported a petition to confirm a report of the Master, which found that the lunatic was a trustee within the Act 1 Wm. 4, c. 60, and which prayed that the co-trustees of the lunatic trustee might be directed to execute the conveyance to the purchaser, and also that a prospective order might be made that they should so execute the conveyances of other properties about to be sold under the same decree, and under circumstances precisely similar. The order of reference to the Master to inquire whether the lunatic was a trustee within the Act, had been made in the cause, and not in lunacy. The petitioners were the plaintiffs in the cause, who were entitled to the produce of the estates when sold, and who, until the completion of the sales, had a lien upon the estates for the unpaid purchase money. They were, therefore, persons interested in the estates within the meaning of the Act.

The order of reference, although entitled in the cause and lunacy, and also in the matter of the Act 1 Wm. 4, c. 60, was pronounced by the Lord Chancellor, not as being intrusted by virtue of the Queen's sign manual, as directed by the Act of Parliament, but as judge in the cause, the petition having been presented in the first instance by mistake at the office of the principal secretary, instead of the secretary of lunatics, and the order thereon drawn up by the registrar of the Court of Chancery.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The order should have been made in lunacy. All the materials necessary must be on this side of the court, within the Chancellor's jurisdiction in lunacy. The petition prays that the co trustees of the lunatic may convey in the place of the lunatic; but it is not usual to direct more than one person to convey. Neither can there be a prospective order, for the lunatic may be of sound mind before the rest of the estates have been sold. Every time a sale is made there must be an application. Let the petition be handed into the Secretary of Lunatics, and if it can be so modelled as to make it suit the proceedings in lunacy, an order may be made.

Saturday, July 12.

WINTHORPE v. WINTHORPE.

Construction of the words "legally declared to be incapable of managing her own affairs"—Commission of lunacy.

In this case the only question was as to the construction of the words "legally incapable," and by leave it was heard in this court as an original cause. By his will, dated in Dec. 1844, the Rev. Wm. Winthorpe bequeathed the sum of 28,000*l.* to certain trustees upon trust to pay the dividends thereof to his widow, whom he mentions to be residing in a private lunatic asylum, until such time as she should, at the cost of the said trust fund, be legally declared to be incapable of managing her own affairs; and in the event of her being so declared, she was to receive an income of 500*l.* per annum only. The only question in the cause was, in what way this lady's incapacity should be legally declared.

Cooper, Wood, Rolt, and Freeling appeared for the different parties, and submitted the point.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The only way in which a person can be legally declared incapable of managing his own affairs, is by issuing a commission of lunacy, and the finding of a jury that the party is insane. No reference to the Master, or any other proceeding in the Court of Chancery, can authorize me to make such a declaration. All I can do therefore is to give the trustees leave to present a petition in lunacy to the great seal, for a commission of lunacy to inquire into the lady's state of mind.

Re GAITSKELL.

Practice on petitions under the Attorney and Solicitors Act—Amending petition on appeal—Construction of Act—What a proceeding in a court of common law—Form of order at the Rolls to tax solicitors after a month from delivery.

Where an appeal is made from a decision of the Master of the Rolls under the Attorney and Solicitors Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), the petition on which the order was made may be amended before the hearing of the appeal.

The entry of satisfaction, on the lord of an accountant to the Crown, with the senior master of the Court of Common Pleas, is not such a proceeding in a court of law as will take jurisdiction over a conveyancing bill from the Court of Chancery.

Where the solicitor retains the amount of his bill out of a balance in his hands belonging to his client, that is not a payment within the Act.

The Master of the Rolls has power under the Act to make a general order that all orders to refer bills for taxation, after they have been delivered a month, shall contain a direction that the report shall be signed within a month.

This was an appeal from a decision by the Master of the Rolls, upon a petition by Mr Gaitskell, a solicitor, to discharge an order of course for a reference to tax a bill of costs, made more than a month after it had been delivered.

Mr. Burr had employed Mr Gaitskell to sell various real estates, in the course of which costs had been incurred amounting to upwards of 2,000*l.* Since the order to refer the bill to taxation had been made by the Master of the Rolls, and the appeal, the petition had been amended, but his lordship held that this was mere rehearing of the petition, and the petitioner was at liberty to introduce new matter.

Cooper and Miller, for the petitioner.—Mr Gaitskell made the following points. First, whether an order of course could be made by the Master of the Rolls to refer the bill to be taxed without a special application in each case, and whether such an order could properly contain a condition that the Master's report must be obtained within a month, unless the Master should certify a longer time was necessary. Secondly, that the bill delivered had not been signed. Thirdly, that the bill had been paid before the date of the order for taxation, and finally, that part of the business having been done in the Common Pleas, the Master of the Rolls had no jurisdiction under the Act to make the order. The solicitor wished to amend his bill, and alleged that the bills sent to the client were mere sketches. The accounts and bills sent had been accompanied by a letter, and the second point was, therefore, given up. They said that, in the course of former transactions between the respondent and Mr Gaitskell, he had no expectation that his bills would be taxed, and the bills delivered therefore, had been mere estimates.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—A solicitor has no right to anticipate that his bills will not be taxed.

Miller.—The Master of the Rolls gave Mr Gaitskell leave to present a petition to satisfy the Court that there ought to have been a special application. Without hearing the party, special "directions" and "conditions," as contemplated by the 37th section cannot be inserted in the order of reference. (Blake v. Flower, 5 Beavan, 406.)

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What the Master of the Rolls there said is consistent with the present judgment.

The officer of Rolls Court said the form of the order had been settled within a month after the Act passed, and had been in use ever since.

Miller.—Re Lees (5 Beavan, 410). Some part of the business for which charges were contained in the bill consisted of proceedings in the Court of Common Pleas. By an Act of Geo. 2, the Crown had a lien upon all the real estates of accountants to the Crown, and it was provided that the Court of Common Pleas might enter satisfaction for the accountants, on a quietus having been obtained from the Pipe-office. The Pipe-office having been abolished, in Ex parte Fleetwood (5 Scott, N. R.) an application was made to the Court of Common Pleas for an order that the senior master of the Court should enter satisfaction on a maltster's bond in the way usually done on judgments, and Chief Justice Tindal said that the Act of Parliament gave no power to the Court to make that order, but he would authorize the Master to make the entry for as much as it was worth. In this case a summons had been obtained before a judge at chambers to make a similar entry, which had been made. That was a proceeding in a court of law.

Walker and Willcock, for the respondent.

The following cases were cited and referred to:—Ex parte Branson (4 Scott, 539); Winter v. Payne (6 Term Rep. 645); Ex parte Prickett (1 New Rep. 666); Sandom v. Bowen (4 Campbell); Burton v. Chatterton (3 Barn. & Adl. 486); Wood v. Griffith (1 Mcilvale, 35), Const v. Barr (2 Russell, 161); Ex parte Rue (4 Scott, 417); Ex parte Dann (9 Ves. 547), Hullock on Costs; Wilson v. Gutheridge (3 Bing & Cres 157); Wild v. Crawford (2 Starkie, 538), Re Barker (6 Sim. 476); Collins v. Nicholson (2 Term Rep. 322).

Cooper, in reply

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Every word of the Chief Justice in Re Branston applies to this case. He said, "Though the deed is required to be recorded in this court, it is not a proceeding in the court, but merely a mode of conveyance." That applies to this case, it was not the intention of the legislature to alter the law in that respect. It meant that a bill for conveyancing business only should be taxed, and in this court I must construe this Act as the old Act of 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, was construed. There must be some proceeding in the course of some proceedings, at law or in equity, or in preparation for some such proceedings. In the case of the maltster, the Pipe-office having been abolished, leave was given to enter satisfaction with the senior Master of the Common Pleas, as in the case of a judgment. The Court said it had no authority to order such an entry, but allowed it to be made by the officer valeat quantum. That was not a judgment, but merely a bond.

Cooper.—That decides three of the points against the petitioner. The only other question is whether such a general order as that adopted at the Rolls can be an order of course under the Act, after the expiration of a month.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think the order is sufficient. The Court may make such a general form of order. No injustice is done, because the solicitor had an opportunity of applying to the Court upon the particular circumstances. I am therefore of opinion that the order of the Master of the Rolls must be affirmed.

Re CLEATOR, a Lunatic.

Carriage of petition, where the contest was between an intimate friend, but not a relation, of the lunatic, and the relations, who had kept up no communication with the lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Attendance at the execution of the commission.

In this case there were two petitions presented for a commission of lunacy; one was by Major Woodgate, who had been for many years an intimate friend of the lunatic, but the only family connection between them was that an uncle of the lunatic had married the petitioner Woodgate's aunt. The other petition was by Mrs Gibbons who was the sole heir-at-law, and one of the two next of kin of the lunatic. The last petitioner was in humble circumstances, and was quite unknown to the lunatic, who had lived in a distant part of the country, and was in a different station of life. The sole question was to who in the carriage of the commission should be given. The lunacy was admitted.

Heathfield, for Major Woodgate's petition.

Kenyon for the heiress at-law, stated that the lunatic had lived in a part of the country remote from her relations, and had much secluded herself; that her insanity partook a good deal of sullenness.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Major Woodgate seems to be a meritorious party, and, under the circumstances, ought to have the carriage of the commission. The other party may have leave to attend the execution of the commission, and to adduce evidence as she thinks proper, in order to carry back the lunacy as far as may be possible. The costs of both parties will come out of the estate.

BAILEY v. PARRY.

Setting down cause—Certificate by Clerk of Records and Writs—Pleading—Original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill against defendants who have not answered the original bill—Statement of suit—Bill of revivor.

Where the suit abates by the death of a co plaintiff before some of the defendants have appeared to the original bill, and a bill of revivor and supplement is filed against all the defendants, such a bill as against the defendants who have not answered will be an original bill, yet it must contain such a reference to the original, or so much of its contents, that the defendants who have not answered may be fully aware of the objects of the original suit.

Ellis applied for an order upon his lordship's secretary to set down this cause, in which a difficulty had arisen. An original bill had been filed by the plaintiffs against the Attorney-General and several other defendants, and the principal defendants had appeared and answered, but before the Attorney-General and another defendant, H. Waple, had appeared, the suit abated by the death of one of the plaintiffs. A bill of revivor and supplement had been filed to continue the suit, which, as regarded the Attorney-General and the other defendant who had not answered, was an original bill. The Attorney-General and the other defendant, Waple, had appeared and answered the second bill, only stating they were ignorant of the contents of the first bill. On the usual certificate by the Record and Writs Clerk being applied for, that officer objected that he could not grant the certificate in the ordinary form, but proposed to grant a certificate to the effect that certain of the defendants had answered the original bill and bill of revivor and supplement; but that no answer, plea, or demurrer had been filed by the Attorney-General and J. H. Waple to the original bill, although they were respectively required to answer the same. In Crowfoot v. Mander (9 Sim. 396), the Vice-Chancellor of England had held in such a case as the present, that it was a settled rule that the bill would be an original bill as far as respected the defendant who had not answered, but a supplemental bill in respect of the suit. An application had been made to the Vice-Chancellor to direct the Record and Writs Clerk to grant the certificate in the usual form, but his Honour said he could not direct that officer to certify contrary to his conscience if he thought it irregular, though the Vice-Chancellor intimated that in his own opinion the pleadings were regular in point of form.

Mr. Berry, the senior Clerk of Records and Writs, then stated what he conceived to be objections to the form of the proceedings.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What does the supplemental bill contain? Does it reiterate all that was contained in the original bill?

Ellis.—The supplemental bill contains all that was in the original bill which relates to the defendants who have not answered.

July 3.—The LORD CHANCELLOR, after stating the circumstances, said:—The supplemental bill ought to have contained all the matter which was in the original bill, otherwise the defendants, who had not appeared to the original bill had no means of knowing what was contained in the original bill. They take copies of the supplemental bill in the regular way, and what answer are they able to give? The Attorney-General and the defendant Waple answer merely what is stated in the supplemental bill, and they say that they know nothing of the matters contained and referred to in the original bill. As the record now stands, they are not bound by the original bill, which is only referred to in the supplemental bill. I consider this to be an original bill, and if all are bound by it, that the record is incorrect, and that the officer is right in his objection. The question is, how is it to be set right? It may be done in one of two ways; either by setting forth all the facts by supplemental bill, or by serving the Attorney-General and the other defendant, Waple, with a copy of the original bill, and those defendants may then, by leave of the Court, put in amended answers. It will be for the parties to consider which plan they will adopt.

Ellis suggested that the original bill was referred to in the supplemental bill.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The defendants are interrogated whether all the statements and charges in the original bill are true; and they say in answer they don't know what those charges and statements are. The note at the foot of the supplemental bill requires them to answer all the matters which are contained in the original bill. The plaintiffs may amend the supplemental bill by embodying in it all the statements of the original bill.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Easter Term, 1845.

SLOMAN v. THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

Jurisdiction of court of equity—Forgery on the Bank of England—11 Geo. 4, c. 13.

Certain stock was standing in the books of the governor and company of the Bank of England in the joint names of H. and P. (trustees for S.) P. by means of a forged power of attorney from H. sold out the whole amount of stock, but continued to account to S. for the dividends. Some time elapsed before it was discovered by H. and S. that the stock no longer stood in the joint names of H. and P. but that, under the forged power of attorney, P. had sold out the whole amount. P. was in England at the time when the discovery was made, and for several days afterwards, but was represented to H. and S. as being unable to be seen from a dangerous illness. No notice was given to the Bank of the forgery until the fifth day from its discovery; and on that day P. escaped from the country. A bill was filed against the governors and company of the Bank of England by S. and H. for the purpose of compelling them to replace the stock which had been so sold out, together with the accruing dividend. This the defendants refused to do, on the ground that due notice had not been given by H. and S. of the forgery; but that they had delayed doing so for the purpose of conniving at P.'s escape; and that if the plaintiffs had any right at all, it was by an action at law. Held, in the first place, that upon the true construction of the above-mentioned statute the proper remedy was in equity, the Bank of England being the public bookkeepers of the stockholders; secondly, that the moment the stock was improperly sold out the right to have it replaced or reinstated arose; but without destroying the principle of the obligation which devolves on the parties seeking equity to do equity, by making known to the Bank the forgery as soon as it arose.

This was a bill filed by John Sloman and Louisa his wife, and Robert Hillman, against the governor and company of the Bank of England and Christopher Picard, out of the jurisdiction of the Court.

Upon the marriage of the plaintiff John Sloman and Louisa his wife, formerly Louisa Hillman, a sum of 6,250*l*. New 4 per Cent. Reduced Bank Annuities was transferred into the joint names of the defendant, C. Pickard, and the plaintiff, R. Hillman, as trustees of an indenture of settlement, dated 16th Nov. 1827, made upon the said marriage.

It appears that the plaintiff, Robert Hillman, is the brother of the plaintiff, Louisa Sloman, and that the defendant, Picard, had married a sister of Sloman.

The whole transaction, in all its details, is too lengthy to be inserted; they, however, sufficiently appear in his Honour's judgment. It will therefore be necessary only to state that on the 4th June, 1839, Picard, by a forged power of attorney, sold out and transferred in his own name, and as the attorney of Hillman, 2,250*l*. part of the stock, and on the 10th July, 1839, he, in the same manner, sold out and transferred 4,000*l*. the residue of the stock. Some correspondence having taken place between Picard and Sloman on the subject of the purchase of land, in which Sloman proposed to invest the trust fund, Picard postponed the affair in various ways, which, in addition to the circumstance of one of Picard's cheques having been dishonoured, alarmed Sloman. Early in the morning of February, 1841, Picard effected his escape from England by a Hamburgh steamer. Some correspondence ensued between Hillman and the Bank of England, which ended by Mr. and Mrs. Sloman and Hillman, on the 12th April, 1842, filing their bill against the governor and company of the Bank of England to compel them to replace or reinvest the stock, and pay the dividends which would have become due since the 5th January, 1841, and all future dividends. The Bank of England defended the suit upon the ground that both Hillman and Sloman had purposely delayed giving them information of the forgery to favour Picard's escape, and filed their cross bill of discovery. This the defendants to the cross bill denied.

Bethell, Koe, and S. B. Follett, for the plaintiffs, cited Davis v. The Bank of England (2 Bing. 293); The Bank of England v. Davis (5 B. & C. 185); Coles v. The Bank of England (10 Adol. & E. 437); Ex parte Bolland, re Marsh (Mont. & Mac. 315); Hume v. Bolland (Ryan & Mood. 371); Stone v. Marsh (6 B. & C. 557).

J. Parker and R. Palmer, for the Bank, cited Hammond v. Messenger (9 Sim. 327); Ashby v. Blackwell (Eden, 299; S. C. Amb. 503); Crosby v. Long (12 East, 409); Stone v. Marsh (6 B. & C. 557); Ex parte Bolland (1 Mont. & Mac. 396).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Having heard this case at considerable length, I cannot say that I have the slightest doubt as to the situation in which the Bank of England is now placed. It seems to me that the liability of the Bank is constituted by the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 13; and, without travelling through the formal words of the different sections, it appears that the result of the statute is this, that when the government had determined to reduce the 4 per Cents into Three-and-a-half per Cents. certain enactments were in the first place made, the effect of which was to give an option to the different parties; and then, by the 10th section of the Act, it was directed that books should be kept wherein the names of the different owners of the stock should appear. This was the first thing. Then, by section 6th a particular provision was made, which in itself made it part of the law, that moneys sufficient for the payment of the dividends should be applied by the Bank, and which I notice no further than with reference to that singular point which was brought forward when the case of Davis v. Bank of England was heard in error, when it was held, as I understand, by the Court of Queen's Bench (for it was not an appeal upon error to the House of Lords), that inasmuch as it had not been alleged that moneys were supplied by the Government, therefore there was no liability on the part of the Bank; because it seems to me that every court of law ought to take for granted that whatever the government of the country says by its law ought to be done, is done. However, the court of error satisfied itself, in getting quit of any difficulty in that case, by embracing that objection. Then comes the 13th section of the Act, and, as I understand that section, it is this: that it has created a duty upon the Bank of England to keep an account, in books to be provided for the purpose, which shall shew each transfer and assignment of stock made by parties who appear to be interested in the funds in question. They are thus constituted, if I may be allowed to use the expression, the parliamentary book-keepers of this fund, whose duty it is at all times, for all persons who may have any interest in the stock, so to keep the account as that it may distinctly appear what transfers and assignments had been made. And it appeared to me that if there had at any time been stock standing in the name of A, and afterwards (it matters not from whatever cause) that stock did not appear to be standing in the name of A, A would have a primâ facie right to say, "Let the account stand as it did on a given day;" but if it can be satisfactorily shewn that A himself had made the transfer, that is an answer; but, primâ facie, the bank account ought to be kept in such a manner with regard to any individual who appeared to be a stock proprietor as to shew what the account really is. Now, if such be the case, it strikes me, as a matter of course, that relief may at once be obtained in a court of equity, because the plaintiff in equity has to allege against the Bank, "You are bound by law to be my book-keeper in regard to the stock, and shew me the true account of it; and if I can prove that, upon a given day, there was stock standing in my name, and can now shew that it does not stand in my name, and I have not authorized the transfer, you are responsible—that is to say, you are bound to make the account stand as it ought to have stood."

Now this really appears to me to be the true state of the case; and, according to this view, there would be a direct right in every person who was interested in the funds in question to file his bill against the Bank of England, and have any error occasioned by the Bank set right; as an example, it is observable that an action only gives a remedy circuitously, because all that you could recover in a court of law would be a certain amount of money, with which, after you had obtained it, you might or might not be able to purchase a fund to replace the stock, and it rather appears to me that the proper view of the case is that which I have taken, which results from the simple view of the Act of Parliament. And it seems to me (for this case has been argued with great ingenuity both by Mr. Parker and Mr. Palmer, who have done their utmost in favour of their clients) that the very view that I have taken of the matter is a complete answer to that species of objection that was attempted to be set up by Mr. Parker, viz. that where the account is standing in the names of two they are joint tenants, and each of them may transfer a moiety. Now, if I may use the expression civilly, the absolute nonsense is apparent from this, namely, if that proposition be correct, and if the right of the joint tenant is to transfer a moiety;—as an instance, suppose that 1,000*l*. of the stock stands in the names of A and B jointly; then A is to transfer a moiety; he does so;—what is the consequence? Five hundred pounds appears to remain in the names of A and B, and A has still his right to transfer his moiety of that which remains; and thus he may go on, transferring moiety after moiety of every sum which remains, until, as the expression is, the remainder will be less than any assignable quantity. He will, therefore, virtually have the power of assigning the whole fund, and this will be the consequence of the doctrine that a joint tenant has himself a right to make a transfer of the moiety; and it would be utterly impossible for the Bank to be continually keeping a check account against the right of a particular individual, whose name stands conjointly with others, to transfer only a certain portion up to his limited right by law in the mere view of a joint tenancy. It seems to me to be palpable, on the plain language of the Act of Parliament, that the transfers of stock were to be made by the parties in whose names the stock was standing, which was to be made the subject of transfer or assignment. Then, in reference to this particular case, the very view of the law which I take was, in fact, bowed to by the Bank of England, seeing that no transfer was permitted to be made unless on the production of that which was apparently on the face of it an authority of two; and it turns out that in reality it was not the authority of two, and my opinion, therefore, upon this statute is that it was nothing. And the Bank of England having authorized a transfer to be made, which they ought not to have sanctioned, are themselves now liable in a court of equity to replace to the plaintiffs the stock as it stood on the very day of the transfer, and immediately before such transfer. I mention this because the pleadings are rather singular in their form, and it struck me that there existed some sort of difficulty as to the manner in which the relief should be given. However, my opinion is, that if the stock is decreed to be replaced the parties have only to ask for the dividends from the time when they were last received, and there would be an end of the matter.

The next question was this, namely, whether there has been a sufficient case of defence made out on behalf of the Bank of England? Now, of course, I only regard it in a general point of view, and mappi-nion most certainly is, that the Bank do act meritoriously where, in a case in which they have any ground whatever to suspect that there has been unfair proceedings, they so manage the matter as to produce a fair investigation of the question. Not that it really could amount to much by way of defence, because, provided the stock had been improperly transferred (that is, by the act of the Bank itself, placed in a situation wherein it ought not to have been as against the plaintiff), I should like to ascertain what subsequent misconduct of the plaintiff could deprive him of his antecedent civil right. By a species of defence it is assumed that the plaintiffs have lost their right by some subsequent supposed misconduct, whereas their right to have the stock existed at the very instant when the stock itself was improperly transferred. How their subsequent misconduct, even two or three years afterwards, when it became a question to what extent they had or had not discovered the improper act which had been practised against them—in what manner that should affect their civil right is to me quite a mystery. Still, however, I cannot but think that in a fair case the Bank act a meritorious part towards the public in having the circumstances investigated; because it is quite obvious that fair and open dealing at least requires that as soon as the fraud is discovered notification thereof ought to be made to the Bank. Well, but what is the effect of its application to this particular case? It really does appear to me that there has been no improper conduct on the part of Mr. Sloman or of Mr. Hillman. Mrs. Sloman herself seems to have had nothing whatever to do with the transaction. On the morning of the Thursday, Mr. Sloman came back with Mr. Hillman to London. He was desirous of seeing Mr. Taylor, the stockbroker, but by reason of that gentleman being engaged as a juryman on some trial at Guildhall he could not be seen till after the Bank was closed. There is then an interview. It had been suggested, that possibly the stock might have been replaced; and it really appears to me that it was a kind of moral duty in Messrs. Hillman and Sloman to ascertain whether the fact were really as suggested; because, if the stock had been replaced, every proper feeling would have dictated that they ought not to divulge the crime that had been committed, but be satisfied to let the whole affair remain with the restitution of the property that had been established, and not make an exposure which could not have any other effect than that of hunting a person who had made all the reparation which the case required.

Then again it appears (it must be confessed a remarkable thing) that, as Mr. Taylor represents it, at about ten o'clock the next morning Mr. Taylor, the stockbroker, a person who had been employed throughout in the transaction, and who to a certain extent, as I understand the matter, is really the servant of the Bank, or, at any rate, an accredited agent of the Bank, goes early on Friday morning and makes the search, and then it is ascertained that the stock has not been restored. What then takes place? Mr. Hillman says he shall go and consult his London agent, and he is the professional man; and he was the person, strictly speaking, upon whom, in the eye of the law, the forgery had been committed; he goes to Mr. Tooke and represents the case to him. What exactly passed between him and Mr. Tooke does not clearly appear; but it would seem that this gentleman advised that a certain notice, or letter, as it was called, should be drawn in his office, and be served upon the Bank the next day. Now it is a very remarkable thing that, when the next day arrived, Mr. Taylor, who stood in the situation of the stockbroker from beginning to end of the transaction, and who could not but have known what the real facts were, does not conceive it to be necessary to go at ten o'clock, although he had gone at that hour the day before, in order to see whether the stock was reinvested, but, according to his own statement, he goes at eleven o'clock. I mention this merely because, if hours are to make it an affair of so much importance, of how little importance did Mr. Taylor think the hour was. This last-named gentleman goes, and there is some conversation about the form of the letter to be taken to the Bank; at last it is taken there, and there the information is given. Ought these gentlemen to have run in a frantic manner to the Bank, and there make a story, which perhaps would have been unintelligible, that the forgery had been committed? On the contrary, were they not to do it in a manner which would at once give full and clear information to the Bank? How they could properly have done it otherwise than they did, I really am at a loss to conceive. Then there is not one particle of evidence which goes to shew that either of them had any communication with Picard to force the conclusion that either of them were privy to, or assisting in his escape. The whole of that appears to have been adopted by Mr. Andrews, who was himself the person, in the language of the law, with respect to an accessary after the fact, who received, relieved, assisted, and comforted the felon. From all that, however, these gentlemen are entirely free. But with regard to this particular point of misprision of felony, as it is called, it is observable that all the steps that Hillman and Sloman took were steps directed to the object of ascer- [illegible] to the actual forgery that was supposed to have been committed. As to any restitution which might have rendered any further prosecution of the matter quite unnecessary, even were I to think in the view of the Bank of England, and with respect to making the disclosure in a proper form—and it appears that when the disclosure had been made the Bank did act upon it—it seems to me that in a case of this nature there ought to be something broad and strong, and striking, and that the Court ought not to be occupied hour after hour in sifting minute points which, after all, when this mosaic work has been put together in the most ingenious manner, and has received, if I may use the expression, the finest polish which argument and reasoning can suggest, literally amounts to no more than that by some possibility there is a ground for suspicion, but that the fact is not made out. I must say, for one, I have not received the least suspicion in my mind, upon the whole of the argument in this case, that there was any fair ground of suspicion as to the conduct of Mr. Hillman and Mr. Sloman, and therefore it appears to me that in point of equity the case is clear, and that the defence totally fails; and my opinion is, that there ought to be a decree. I am saying this now, subject to any thing which may be mentioned as to the matter of form, and that the Bank of England ought to be decreed to replace it; and I see that it is asked that it may be replaced in the name of Hillman only, or that there may be another trustee. It appears to me that this is quite optional with the plaintiff, and the Bank cannot have any difficulty as to that; and I do not think that even the Bank will say that Mr. Picard ought to be continued a trustee, and therefore I think that if the decree is that the Bank do forthwith replace in the name of Hillman the sum of 6,500*l.* Three-and-a-Half per Cents., and also be liable to account to the plaintiff for all the dividends received since January 1841, that that will be all that is necessary, for this reason, because, upon the mere restitution of the stock, a right would be given in law to Mr. Hillman to receive the dividends from the time the stock was abstracted; but then, as I am able to collect from the case, the dividends intermediately of course were paid by Mr. Picard, for otherwise the thing would have been known long before, and, therefore, if I say the stock should be transferred, and that the Bank shall be liable to account for the dividends which would have been received on the fund subsequently to the 5th January, 1841, that will be all that can be done in the way of relief, and I must say that, if it be a question whether the Bank shall pay the costs, my opinion is that it ought. Decree for plaintiff, with costs.

Monday, June 23.

GREENWOOD v. CHURCHILL.

Practice—Affidavit as to no under-bargain in case of a substituted purchaser.

Kindersley applied in this cause to substitute Mr. Risley as purchaser in the room of purchasers of two several lots, the one sale being in 1834 and the other in 1839, and to extend the time for payment into court of the purchase-money. He produced an affidavit by Mr. Risley that he took the lots at the same price as the other purchasers, and that there was no under-bargain.

Stinton opposed the motion as to the extension of the time.

The MASTER of the ROLLS thought the affidavit not sufficiently full, as, though there might be no under-bargain, there might be collusion. But the affidavit might be amended after inquiry as to the proper form, as to which the books gave little assistance. The costs of the application must be paid by Mr. Risley, together with interest on the purchase-money, which must, if the affidavit be satisfactory, be paid in before the 20th of July next.

April 24 and June 23.

THOMAS v. GWYNN.

Practice—Service of an order—Attachment.

Where an order is made that in a certain time after personal service thereof on an infant, he shall execute a deed, and on his neglecting to do so, an attachment is moved for, the affidavit in support of the motion must state not only that a true copy of the order was served on the infant, with notice that disobedience would be a contempt, but the original must be produced and shewn at the same time.

This was a creditors' suit, and a sale having been made under a decree of the Court, the conveyance was ordered to be made to the purchaser; but John Thomas, one of the defendants, whose execution thereof was necessary, being an infant tenant in tail of the estate, and being ordered to execute the deed within fourteen days after personal service thereof, Piggott, on a former day, applied for substituted service on the infant by leaving notice at the house where his mother Eleanor Thomas lived, on the ground that she had taken him away, no one knew where, to evade service; but the application was not granted, because there was nothing to shew that there was any prospect of the notice reaching the infant or his mother. In the meantime service had been effected by John B. Jeffries, of Carnarvon, solicitor to the plaintiff, who in his affidavit stated that on the 26th May last he personally served John Thomas, the infant, with a true copy of the order, but did not add that he produced and shewed him the original at the same time. He then asked the infant to sign the deed of conveyance, but he refused; and no application had since been made on the part of the infant for that purpose. The fourteen days after service having expired, and the order not being complied with, an attachment was now moved for.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The affidavit does not state whether the original was produced and shewn at the time of the service of the copy, and is therefore defective. A fresh affidavit must be made before an attachment can be granted. Every thing must be quite regular.

GARDLER v. GARDLER.

Practice—Partnership—Production of papers.

Schomberg moved for the production by the defendant of only a particular lease, though the notice was general. The bill was filed for an account of a partnership concern between the defendant and his deceased brother, Isaac Gardler, as farmers. The partnership, which was denied by the defendant to have existed, was attempted to be made out by circumstances, such as the names of the two brothers being upon the farming carts, bills being sent in to them jointly, &c. The defendant said the bills were unimportant, and sent in by persons who supposed them partners because they lived together. He admitted the lease in question was granted to them as joint tenants, and then stated that the plaintiff was a trustee for him, which it was alleged he could not be unless he was a partner. The production of this lease was therefore sought as a means of shewing partnership.

White, contrà, insisted there was no case made for production. The bill atttempted to make out a partnership, and the defendant absolutely denies it. The defendant held several farms besides that demised by the lease in question, which was for a term, at 8*l.* 10*s.* rent. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Is there no relief prayed as to that particular deed, nor any charge respecting it?] Not any.

Schomberg, in reply, admitted in ordinary cases, he would not be entitled to an order, but the defence set up here was such as to make the case an exception, as the document asked might prove the partnership. At all events, let costs be costs in the cause.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I must dismiss the motion with costs.

CORRY v. CURLEWIS.

Production of documents—Practice where the aid of Chancery is required.

Where documents can only be got at by the aid of equity, they will not be ordered to be produced at a trial at law, without the answer of which they are a part.

Shebbeare applied for the production of documents in this cause at a trial at law between the same parties.

Prior did not object to the order, with the modification that the answer of the defendant should also be produced along with the documents. (Brown v. Thornton, 1 Myl. & Cr. 243.)

Shebbeare objected to this, and stated that the cases in which the answer was produced were cases of discovery, not relief. If obliged to take the order so modified, he would only take the common order to inspect.

The MASTER of the ROLLS thought he could not have the production of the one without the other.

WARD v. WARD.

Motion to dismiss for want of prosecution—Time.

The bill in this case was filed in 1841, and the answer of the defendants put in in 1842. Various motions to dismiss had been made, and time had always been given. There was no complaint as to the costs, which had been paid, but the delay was great.

Selwyn again moved to dismiss for want of prosecution, the time within which the plaintiff should have proceeded having long since expired.

Addis, contrà.—The suit was about to be brought to a hearing, when it became defective by the bankruptcy of one of the parties, and, though frequently applied to, the assignees of the bankrupt have not signified what they intend to do. Besides, the application should have been to bring the cause to a hearing, and make good the defect in the suit, within a given time; and if not, then to dismiss, but not to dismiss absolutely in the first instance.

The MASTER of the ROLLS made the order for the plaintiff to make good the defect in the suit within a given time, or that it be then dismissed.

Re DALBY.

Taxation—Personal and representative character—Orders separate—Lien—Delivery up of papers.

Where a solicitor does business for the executors of a testator by whom he had also been employed, he will not be required to refer for taxation bills for business done for the former, without those for business done for the latter, nor to deliver up papers, &c. till all his bills are paid.

The petitioners are the executors of one Harrison, who died in June 1825. His will was proved in July following, and Dalby was employed by them in the matter, and on handing them the proctor's bill was paid the amount. One Mee owed the testator 200*l.* and, being unable to pay, the executors took a mortgage security from him, which Dalby prepared. This security, the title-deeds of the estate, and the probate Dalby retained in his possession. Several applications were made to him by the executors for the delivery of those papers, but he refused. Meantime, however, he made out six bills of costs, which, on the 21st of April, 1844, he delivered. Of these, four were headed "Harrison, debtor to Dalby," two of them being entirely confined to business done in the lifetime of Harrison, and the other two being for business both in his lifetime and after his death. A fifth was headed "Messrs. Mee and Harrison, debtors, and the late Mr. Harrison and his executors, in account with Dalby;" and the sixth was for the mortgage. It appeared also that Dalby was indebted, on notes of hand, to the estate of the testator.

Metcalfe now moved that Dalby should deliver only his bills of costs to the executors for business done for them, and that he should deliver up the documents on his possession, on payment of what was found due.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—You are asking to tax part of his demand. There ought to be an ordinary order to tax the bills for business done in Harrison's lifetime, and another to tax those for business done on the retainer of the executors. There must be two orders.

Leach.—Mr. Dalby has a general lien for all his demand on all the papers, the business being connected. There was no application for the delivery of separate bills. The business commenced in 1810, and Mr. Dalby has received nothing yet.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—If Mr. Dalby consents, I will make the order to tax on the petition; if he does not, I will dismiss it with costs. It is a storm in a slop-basin.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Friday, June 6.

BADDELEY v. CURWEN.

Practice—Demurrer—38th order of August 1841

A bill for administration of assets filed against an executor and an agent who was employed by him in collecting the assets of the testator, and had retained a portion of them, with the consent of the executor, in payment of a debt due to him from the executor, but which did not charge any fraud or collusion between the defendants, is demurrable as to the agent.

The 38th order of August 1841 does not apply to a case where interrogatories are objected to only on the ground that a demurrer to the whole bill, if filed in time, would have been sustainable.

An important question upon the 38th order of August 1841 arose in this case, which was heard upon exceptions to the Master's report. The bill was filed by Mr. and Mrs. Baddeley, who were entitled to a legacy under the will of Mr. Curwen, for an administration of the assets, against John Curwen, the executor and residuary legatee, and John Halford. The bill stated the will, dated the 27th of March, 1834, and the death of the testator in 1836, that John Curwen received and possessed himself of assets of the testator to a large amount, and more than sufficient to pay the debts and legacies; that he paid all the legacies excepting the plaintiff's; that Halford acted and interfered in the administration of the effects, and possessed himself of a considerable part of the assets, and rendered an account of his proceedings to Curwen in 1839; that Halford retained and applied moneys of the testator to his own use, knowing that the plaintiff's legacy was not paid or invested; that Halford pretended that he was employed by, and settled with, Curwen for what he had received, and that Curwen was insolvent; but there was no charge of fraud or collusion between the defendants. To this bill the defendant Halford answered two interrogatories, and "declined to answer any of the interrogatories contained in the said bill of complaint further or otherwise than as thereinbefore answered, and claimed the benefit of that his answer in like manner as if he had demurred to the relief sought by the said bill, and to the discovery sought by such of the interrogatories contained in the said bill as were not thereinbefore answered." To this answer the plaintiff filed exceptions for insufficiency, and the Master having reported it insufficient, the defendant Halford excepted to the Master's report.

Wigram and Metcalfe, for the defendants, alluded to the 38th order of August 1841, contending that the bill was clearly demurrable.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he should wish the question of a demurrer lying to the bill to be first argued.

Russell and Cameron, for the bill, cited Wilson v. Moore (1 Myl. & Keen, 337); and Consett v. Bell (1 Y. & C. C.C. 569).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR then intimated his opinion that the bill was clearly demurrable, and that the question upon the 38th order must be argued.

Wigram and Metcalfe cited Tipping v. Clarke (2 Hare, 383); Drake v. Drake (2 Hare, 647); and Fairthorne v. Weston (3 Hare, 387).

Russell and Cameron cited Redesdale on Pleading, 307; and Lancaster v. Evors, before the Lord Chancellor.

Wigram, in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I have already intimated my opinion to be that this bill is so insufficient in its allegations as far as Halford is concerned, that if a demurrer had been filed by him in proper time, that demurrer must have been sustained. He did not take that course, and the question is whether, because he might have taken that course and did not do so, he is now to be excused from answering the bill. That depends upon the true construction of the 38th order, and whether the construction for which Mr. Halford's counsel contends is or is not one substantially inconsistent with other subsisting orders, as to the construction of which there is neither doubt nor difficulty, a point which I do not decide. It is, in my opinion, a construction of so inconvenient a nature as to be unfit for adoption, and I do not decide it. I think there is no necessity, but I think that, according to its true interpretation, it does not extend to a case where interrogatories are objected to only on the ground that a demurrer to the whole bill, if filed in time, would have been sustainable. According to the defendant's construction, the order might and ought to have ended with the word "bill." The subsequent words, however, do not form the only reason upon which I am of opinion (assuming the bill to have been open to a general demurrer) that the answer is insufficient and must be so treated. I may observe, too, that the argument to which the 36th order refers is an argument before the Court, and not before the Master, and so it appears by the 37th order; but the defendant's construction of the 38th order seems to throw upon the Master the obligation of deciding whether a bill is or is not open to a general demurrer—an obligation which, as it seems to me, ought not to belong to his office. Therefore let the defendant answer the bill. I do not say that he is bound to answer every question, and every part of every question; I do not mean to decide that. I only decide that you must answer the questions, or some of the questions, which hitherto you have not answered. It is an exceedingly difficult question, and I wish you would take it to the Lord Chancellor.

Note.—Mr. Cameron did not draw the bill.

Monday, June 9.

COUNTESS DE ZICHY v. EARL OF LONSDALE.

Practice—Parties.

Circumstances under which it was held necessary that that a residuary legatee should be a party to a suit for payment of a legacy instituted by the legatee against the executors.

This was a bill filed by a legatee under the will of the late Marquis of Hertford, for payment of the legacy, against the executors, and it was objected by them that the residuary legatee was not a party to the suit.

It appeared that the present marquis, who was the residuary legatee, had instituted an amicable suit against the executors for the administration of the estate. The plaintiff in this suit applied to the executors for payment of the legacy, but was told that the legacy had been adeemed by payments made to the plaintiff in the testator's lifetime. The marquis carried into the Master's office a state of facts as to the ademption, and the Master reported against the ademption. Exceptions being taken to the Master's report, the Master of the Rolls directed them to stand over, stating that there was no jurisdiction to decide the question of ademption in that suit. The personal estate was admitted not to be deficient, but it was alleged that by the codicil by which the legacy was given to the plaintiff, the legacy was charged upon real estates, which passed to the present marquis.

Swanston and Tripp, for the plaintiff.

Follett, for the executors, cited Galle v. Greenhill (Finch, 202).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—If it is a reasonably arguable question whether, according to the true construction of the codicil of the 26th of April, 1839, the real estate in Warwickshire, except that in Birmingham, is the only fund or the first fund for payment of the legacy in dispute, Lord Hertford, as heir or devisee, ought to be a party. How that question ought to be decided I give no opinion. It is sufficient for me to say that the objection is not in its nature absurd. Probably what I have said is enough to dispose of the question. If not, the proceedings in the Master of the Rolls' Court, the evidence that has been gone into, whether usable or not in any other cause, the existence of a cause recently instituted by Lord Hertford against all the legatees, and the fact of the assent as to the residuary personal estate, which is mentioned in the answer in this cause, form together grounds amply sufficient, if the executors insist upon the point, that Lord Hertford ought to be a party to this suit. Reserve the costs.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. SEVERNE.

In this case, in which a question arose upon the 23rd section of the 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, and which is reported ante, vol. 3, p. 279, sufficient evidence having been produced to prove that the license for the marriage was procured upon the false oath of the wife, the Court declared the forfeiture by her of all estate, right, title, or interest in any property which had accrued or should accrue to her by force of the marriage, &c.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

WINTERBOTTOM v. INGHAM.

A purchaser of property, who, pending the completion of the title, is let into possession by the vendor, is not liable in use and occupation if, from the vendor's inability to make a title, the purchase is not completed.

This was an action for use and occupation, the defendant having been let into possession pending the completion of the title, which was subsequently not made out, and the sale consequently not made. By one of the conditions of sale, a deposit of 10 per cent. was to be paid upon the purchase-money, provided that the purchaser should not enter until the completion of the contract. He, however, did enter. The title was incomplete, and a bill filed by the plaintiff for specific performance was dismissed with costs. At the trial, Tindal, C. J. nonsuited the plaintiff. Whitehurst, Q. C. had obtained a rule for a new trial, against which Humfrey, Q. C. shewed cause, citing Hearn v. Tomlin (Peake's N.P.C. 192); Kulland v. Pounsett (2 Taunt. 145); Howard v. Shaw (8 M. & W. 118).

Whitehurst, Q.C. in support of the rule, endeavoured to distinguish these cases, as here the jury had been asked, and had expressly found that the occupation was beneficial to the defendant.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This is a case of considerable importance, and likely to be of frequent occurrence—whether one who contracts for the purchase of landed property, but is prevented altogether from completing the purchase, by the vendor's failing to make a good title, is liable to the latter in an action for use and occupation in respect to the time of his holding, on the understanding that such good title would be made and the purchase would be completed. Several cases were cited for the defendant, but none of a very decisive character beyond that of Hearne v. Tomlin (Peake, 192). Lord Kenyon denied there was a right in the vendor to recover under such circumstances; but he expressly observed that the occupation had caused loss, not benefit; and it is open to the plaintiff to argue, if the occupation had appeared, as it did at the trial of this case, to be a beneficial one, the plaintiff then would have been permitted to recover against the defendant. Again, in Howard v. Shaw (8 M. & W. 118), Lord Abinger held that use and occupation would lie for holding over after the contract of purchase had been rescinded; and Parke, B. in expressing his opinion on it, takes the opportunity of laying down that it would have been otherwise during the pendency of the contract, because the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between those parties, the contract itself stipulating that the defendant should hold the premises rent-free. This stipulation is the reason assigned by Lord Abinger for coinciding in the opinion of Parke, B. It was open, therefore, in like manner, for the plaintiff to argue that without the stipulation he would have been entitled to maintain his action. On the other hand, the plaintiff relied on the judgment in 6 Price, 157 (Hall v. Vaughan), not so much for the circumstances, which were very peculiar, as for the reasons by which the Court justified the setting aside the nonsuit directed by Holroyd, J. The defendant had contracted to sell the property to one Best, who agreed to sell part to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff entered into possession of that part; a suit in equity for specific performance was instituted by the purchaser Best, who succeeded in it. Pending the suit, the defendant obtained possession in the manner set forth in the statement of facts. The defendant was sued for use and occupation, and the learned judge there held the action could not be maintained, being brought by one who had no title to the land against another who had, the purchase-money not having been paid—that was the expression of the learned judge at nisi prius—the purchase-money not having been paid. The Lord Chief Baron Richards held a person equitably entitled to an estate is to be considered the owner from the time of making the contract, if specific performance was afterwards decreed; and held that entering into possession by his permission, if not, indeed, by practising a fraud upon him, the defendant was answerable to him in an action for use and occupation. Wood, B. considered the plaintiff as the real owner of the estate, on the principle that the defendant, who had entered and enjoyed the property without any right to it, was liable to him in that action. Graham, B. expressed doubt, but did not differ from that opinion; and Garrow, B. merely acquiesced. We consider the real question there determined to have been simply this: that an equitable owner can maintain use and occupation under the circumstances stated. The Chief Justice (Tindal) was therefore left free at the assizes to act on his own view of the law, and he thought this action could not be maintained, because the relation of landlord and tenant was never contemplated between the parties. Upon the facts in this case, the plaintiff's counsel contended that, by the consent of all, the defendant was not to be let into possession until the purchase-money had been paid, and his entry therefore could not be referable to that contract, and his occupation was not merely as a purchaser; and he relied upon a distinct contract arising from ordinary implication, and involving ordinary consequences as to the payment of compensation, but he admitted that the entry was because he was the contractor for the purchase, and that if the contract had been completed, so long as the suit was pending, this action could not have been maintained. It seems to us the more correct view to take of the facts, to say that the entry and possession was not upon an understanding that any compensation was to be paid in the event which has arisen. The defendant was certainly considered the purchaser, by himself as well as by the plaintiff, and not a tenant, and the plaintiff cannot convert him into an occupier liable to pay for his occupation by his own wrongful act in not completing the contract of sale. The jury have indeed found that the occupation was beneficial; but this statement is not without ambiguity. It may have been beneficial, supposing he actually had become the owner, by making a fair return of profit on the outlay; but it may also have been a very losing concern, as a balance struck between the outlay and amount of the proceeds during the time of the actual holding; on the other hand, he may have expended in improvements a sum much larger than the reasonable rent. How is this account to be taken, or balances to be struck? A court of equity may have the power of doing justice in such respect between the parties—our courts certainly have none. Therefore, although admitting the defendant's occupation on the plaintiff's permission to occupy, still we must say the defendant had not promised to pay, because both the defendant and the plaintiff understood he made no such promise; and parties may easily secure themselves on occasions like this, by stipulating for matters in the event of the purchase going off. This appears to be the Chief Justice's view, and we think that view is right, and the rule must therefore be discharged.

Rule discharged.

REG. v. TITHE COMMISSIONERS OF ENGLAND AND WALES, Re DENT BOUNDARIES.

An award under the 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69, must shew upon the face of it that the tithes of the parish had not been commuted before the application to the commissioners.

It must also shew that the parochial meeting at which the requisition was signed was called according to the provisions of the Act.

The 2nd section of 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69, and the 34th section of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, can both have an independent operation.

The Court of Queen's Bench is not deprived of its jurisdiction to examine the form of the proceedings when brought up by a certiorari, notwithstanding the Court has the additional power given to it of deciding upon the merits under 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69.

An award had been made by Mr. Matthew, appointed for that purpose by the Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales, which was now brought up by certiorari to be quashed. It was as follows:—"Whereas a request in writing, signed by upwards of two-thirds in value of the owners of lands within the township of Dent, at a meeting called for that purpose, having been duly forwarded to the Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales, requesting them to inquire into and ascertain and set out the boundaries of the said township of Dent, so far as the said boundaries abut upon the Higher Division of Newby lordship, in the township of Ingleton, in the parish of Bentham, in the said county; the township of Middleton, in the parish of Kirkby Lonsdale, in the county of Westmoreland; and the township of Barton, in the parish of Kirkby Lonsdale aforesaid; I, J. Matthew, by an instrument in writing, under the hand and seal of the Tithe Commissioners, in pursuance of the power to that effect given to them under and by virtue of an Act, &c. (setting out the title of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, and 1 Vict. c. 69), was duly appointed to make such inquiry and set out such boundary as aforesaid. And whereas I have caused to be served all such notices, to be inserted all such advertisements as are by the said Act of Parliament, and have held divers meetings and duly examined upon oath all such witnesses as were then produced, and entered into a full investigation of all matters and things relating to the line of boundaries so in dispute as aforesaid, I adjudge and determine that the boundary line commences" [here followed a full description of the boundary lines].

To this award seventeen objections had been made. From the seventh to the thirteenth were directed against the award, if made under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62; but it was admitted that it would only be upheld under the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, and 1 Vict. c. 69. The last, as to the conduct of the arbitrator, was waived. The others are stated seriatim in the argument in support of the award.

The Solicitor-General (with whom was C. Buller) shewed cause in support of the award.—The substance of several objections is, that the power of the assistant commissioner does not appear upon the award; but his authority depends upon the existence of circumstances, which sufficiently appear. There must be a dispute about boundaries of a particular district, of which the tithes are not commuted, and a request by two-thirds of the landowners must have been made to the commissioners. All this appears, for it will be presumed that the appointment was proper. The first specific objection is that the township of Dent is not shewn to be a district contemplated by the Act. But sec. 12 of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, is an answer to this objection, and there is not an affidavit to the contrary. The third objection is, that it is not stated that the tithes were about to be commuted. The words of the Act are, "are to be commuted." That means all except those which have been commuted. It will be assumed here, as the request and appointment are duly set forth, that the commissioners had jurisdiction. There is no affidavit that the tithes have been commuted. The fourth objection is, that it does not shew that there was any dispute about the tithes. But there is a request shewn, and an appointment, and the award is as to the boundaries so in dispute as aforesaid. The fifth is, that it does not appear that the meeting was a "parochial meeting." A request by two-thirds of the landowners of the township is shewn, and this will be presumed to have been made at a parochial meeting. The sixth is, that there is no request to the commissioners to inquire into and settle. The words used are, "inquire into, ascertain, and set out." The objection is quite frivolous. The thirteenth objection is, that the said award is bad, because the boundary line of the township of Dent, so far as it abuts upon Newby, is also the boundary of the customary land of Newby, and that no consent of the lords of the manor of Newby has been given; and the fourteenth objection is, that part of the boundary of Dent was part of the boundary of Yorkshire. It does appear that the customary boundary is interfered with, but not the county boundary. The question is, whether 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, s. 34, applies. The 45th sect. of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, gives power to the commissioners, in case of any dispute as to the boundaries of any lands, to inquire into and settle the same, which is necessary for the proper apportionment of the rent-charge. The 1 Vict. c. 69, s. 2, gives power over the boundaries of parishes and districts, but not to set out a new boundary altogether, which power is given by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, and the proviso there added applies only to new boundaries. The intention and object is clear, to limit the new powers given by that section. If this objection is good, all proceedings might be stopped by the refusal of any single landowner. The case of Ystradyglass, in 13 Law J. 287, is distinguishable, for it was not under 1 Vict. c. 61; but here it is. Upon the fifteenth objection, that no sufficient requisition was sent to the tithe commissioners, nothing was said by the Court.

Cowling, for the township of Dent.—The writ of certiorari here given is a peculiar one, and no question of form can be entertained. [PATTESON, J.—That would be a strange anomaly.] Sec. 3 of 1 Vict. c. 69, gives a power of appeal to the party interested. He also argued that by sec. 2, a description in writing of the boundaries was alone essential to the award.

Watson, Q. C. in support of the rule.—This award is bad upon the face of it for not shewing jurisdiction; and great strictness is required where statutory powers are given. (Christie v. Unwin, 11 A. & E. 373; Reg. v. Manchester and Leeds Company, 8 A. & E. 413.) Then how does it appear? The tithes may consistently have been commuted before the application to the commissioners. And it must have been a "parochial meeting;" a meeting duly held means nothing. (Evans v. Paterson, 7 Taunt.) The certiorari is a matter of right, and can only be destroyed by Act of Parliament. The 95th sec. of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, only applies to proceedings under that Act; and 1 Vict. c. 69, s. 3, does not give a certiorari, but limits the operation of the former clause. It may give jurisdiction to decide even upon the merits also; but this does not exclude the Court from considering the questions of form.(a)

At the sittings after Trinity Term (June 27) judgment was delivered by Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The 34th section of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, does not in terms refer to any preceding enactment. And the proviso at the end, taking away the power where the boundaries of parishes are also boundaries of counties, extends only by its very words to the power given by that clause, for the words are, "nothing in this proviso contained." It is true that the 37th section incorporates the former Act, and the question therefore is whether, assuming the whole to be one Act, the 2nd sec. of 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69, and the 34th sec. of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, can both be in operation separately and independently. Now the alteration made by the 28th sec. of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 15, is expressly confined to the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, s. 34, and does not affect the 2nd sec. of 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69; and this is material to the case, for 2 & 3 Vict. wanted alteration in regard to its requiring the assent of both parishes; but the 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 69, did not require such assent, and wanted no alteration in that respect; but if the legislature had intended to incorporate the sections of the 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. and of the 2 & 3 Vict. so as to make them one enactment, surely they would have noticed both sections in the 28th section of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 15, for they both would have wanted alteration, unless indeed it be taken that the 34th sec. of 2 & 3 Vict. (although it contains no words of repeal) necessarily repeals altogether the 2nd sec. of 7 Wm. 4, & 1 Vict. which is hardly contended for. Now, we think that both sections may be in operation separately and independently, even if taken as parts of one Act. The 2nd sec. of 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. will apply to cases where the parish wish only to ascertain and set out the old and existing boundary; the 34th sec. of the 2 & 3 Vict. will apply to cases where the parish wishes to give the commissioner the option of ascertaining and setting out the old existing boundary, or of drawing and defining a new boundary, as they shall think fit. In the former case, notice is to be given to the adjoining parish, but they are not required to join in an application, nor is any provision made for their dissenting and stopping proceedings, is any restriction imposed in regard to the boundaries of counties and manors. In the latter case, where a new boundary may be drawn and defined, although the adjoining parishes are not required to join in the application, yet, if they dissent within twenty-one days after notice, the proceedings are stopped, and the restrictions respecting boundaries of counties and manors are introduced. Perhaps the distinction as to ascertaining and setting out the old existing boundaries and drawing and defining new boundaries may be, in many instances, of little importance, but in others it may be far otherwise. The legislature appears to have made the distinction upon which we ought to act; added to which, if the two sections are entirely blended together, it would seem the commissioners might, in their discretion, set out a new boundary, although the parishes may not have requested them to do so, which could hardly have been intended.

Has, then, the commissioner, in the present case, drawn a new line of boundary? If he has, it is clear the award is without jurisdiction as regards the parts where county boundaries and manor boundaries join. But the commissioner has sworn positively that he had no intention of drawing or defining a new boundary, and that he has ascertained and set out the old one according to the evidence to the best of his judgment. The award professes to proceed entirely on the 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. to which Act alone it refers by the year and by its title. That of 2 & 3 Vict. having a different title, the commissioner, by the very language of the award, ascertains an existing boundary, not defining a new one, for he says,—"I adjudge and determine that the boundary line commences" so and so; all in the present tense, not using the words "shall henceforth," nor any word of merely future signification. We think this must be considered to be an award under 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. and that the objection as to the county and manor boundaries cannot prevail. We were referred to the case of the Ystradinglass Commutation, in the 13th Law Journal, in which, undoubtedly, the view we now take of the statute was not suggested in the argument, nor did it occur to the Court; the judgment proceeded upon a contrary view. We think that view wrong; but it is to be observed that there was another objection in that case, namely, that it appeared that the tithe of both parishes had been commuted before the application was made to the commissioner. It was therefore not a case within 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. where the words are, "to be commuted." And as the award could not stand under the 2 & 3 Vict. the judgment in that case, in the result, was right. It remains to dispose of the other objections made in the present case, on the supposition that the award is under the 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. Those who support the award contend, however, this objection cannot be entertained by the Court, inasmuch as the writ of certiorari is taken away by the original Act, the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, and is given by the 3rd section of 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. only where a party interested is dissatisfied with the judgment or determination of the commissioner as to the boundary; that is, as to the proper boundary having been set out, and that the Court can only enter into the merits, and give a decision upon the evidence, and cannot consider any defect upon the face of the award. The practice of this Court is directly the reverse in all writs of certiorari, and although we see plainly that the legislature has in this statute given a further effect to the writ of certiorari, and made us a court of appeal upon the merits, yet we do not see any words which take away the proper jurisdiction which we have when the writ of certiorari lies, namely, to examine the proceedings below, and decide whether they be good or bad upon the face of them. We think, therefore, we must consider any defect said to appear upon the face of the award.

(a) On a subsequent day, May 26, another argument was heard as to this award; the Solicitor-General and C. Buller on behalf of the commissioners, and Dundas, Q.C. for other parties, supported the award, and Martin, Q.C. contrà. The objections were the same, with an additional one, that the whole of the boundary line of Barbour was not set out. The decision in the first case of course disposes of this also.

The first objection is, that it does not appear that the township of Dent was a parish or district within the statute. The interpretation clause, sec. 12, 6 & 7 Wm. 4, and 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. is a sufficient answer: it enacts that the word "parish" shall include township. The second objection is, that it does not appear that the tithes were "to be commuted;" but, consistently with all that appears on the face of the award, the tithes may have been commuted before the application made by the parish respecting the boundaries, in which case the commissioner would have no jurisdiction. We feel ourselves obliged to yield to this objection. The power given by the 2nd section of 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. seems manifestly to have been given with a view to facilitate the final settlement of tithes in each parish, and to have been intended to be exercised before the tithes are commuted: the words are, "of which the tithes are to be commuted." It is therefore necessary for the jurisdiction of the commissioner to shew on the face of the award that the tithes remained to be commuted; and this is the more necessary under the section in question, because the adjoining parishes and townships, which now object, have no right to stop the proceedings, as they have under 3 & 4 Vict. The third objection is, that it does not appear that any dispute about the boundaries had arisen. This we think quite frivolous. It does appear on the face of the whole award. The fourth objection is, that it does not appear that the meeting at which the request was signed was a parochial meeting, called according to the provisions of the Act, the 6 & 7 Wm. 4. This appears to us to be a fatal objection. The second section expressly requires that such meeting should be so called, but the award alleges only that the requisition was signed by upwards of two-thirds in value of the owners of lands in the township of Dent, at a meeting called for THAT purpose. How called does not appear. The fifth objection is, that it does not appear that the request to the commissioner was to inquire into and settle the boundary. This we think frivolous. The second section indeed says, the request shall be to inquire into and settle the boundaries; but it goes on to enact, that thereupon the commissioner shall inquire into, ascertain, and set out the boundaries, manifestly meaning the same thing; and the request is to inquire into and ascertain, and set out, that is; to do the very thing which the Act of Parliament says the commissioners shall be appointed to do. Upon the whole, we are of opinion that this award must be quashed upon the second and fourth grounds of objection.

Ejectment—Defective execution of power, right of defendants to particulars of.

Where an ejectment is brought for defect in the execution of the power under which defendants claim, the Court will compel the lessors of the plaintiff to give particulars of the defects relied upon.

M. Smith shewed cause against a rule obtained by the defendants for particulars of the defects of the power upon which the lessors of the plaintiff relied, and for a stay of proceedings until the same were delivered to the defendants. He submitted that the rule must be discharged. The lessors of the plaintiff claimed as reversioners, upon the ground that the lease under which the defendants claimed was not in accordance with the power of leasing given to the appointor. This was, therefore, in effect an application to compel the lessors to disclose their title and upon this ground Rolfe, B. had refused an order for particulars at chambers. A bill of discovery could not be sustained for any such purpose. He further submitted that the Court would not interfere, because the matter had not only been before Rolfe, B. but also twice previously before Williams, J. at chambers, and there had subsequently been unnecessary delay in bringing the matter before the Court.

Prideaux, contrà, submitted that the rule should be absolute. The defendants were bonâ fide lessees, the only objection to their title relied upon being a mere defect in the execution of the power under which the lease was granted; the particulars of this defect could only be known to the lessors of the plaintiff, and it was evident that the defendants could not tell how to act, unless the necessary information was given them. The application was not open to the objection insisted upon on the other side, that it called upon the lessors of the plaintiffs to disclose their title; it raised a totally different and collateral question. With regard to this question having been several times considered at chambers, it appeared that this application to the Court had the sanction of Williams, J. and was fairly to be inferred from the language used by Rolfe, B. on refusing the order, that the real point had not been sufficiently brought under his notice. Then the delay was sufficiently accounted for by the circumstances mentioned in the affidavits, and it must not be forgotten that several similar orders had been made by learned judges at chambers upon other ejectments brought by Lord Egremont.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We think this rule should be made absolute. Orders for a similar purpose have several times been made by judges at chambers, and it seems reasonable that the defendants should be furnished with the required information. Until they obtain it, they cannot tell how to act; whereas, when it is furnished them, they may possibly be induced to abandon all further resistance to the action.

Rule absolute.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

THOMSON v. HARDINGE, Bart. and OTHERS.

In an action of trespass on a close which was part of the customary estates of a manor of which one of the defendants was lord, evidence was given that the customary estates of the manor passed by lease and release and admittance. Held, that the evidence supported a plea of liberum tenementum in the lord, as, in such a case, the freehold was in the lord and not the tenant.

Trespass for entering a close of the plaintiff called Spring Plat. The defendants, among other pleas, pleaded that the said close in the declaration mentioned, and in which, &c. is and at the said several times when, &c. was the close, soil, and freehold of the defendant, Sir Charles Hardinge, wherefore, &c.

Verification. To which plea the plaintiff replied that the said close in the declaration mentioned, in which, &c. is not and at the said several times when, &c. was not the close, soil, and freehold of the defendant, Sir Charles Hardinge, in manner and form, &c.

At the trial before Lord Denman, at the last Kent Spring Assizes, the defendants gave evidence that Spring Plat was part of the customary tenement of the manor of which Sir Charles Hardinge was the lord. It appeared that the tenure was not at the will of the lord, neither did the customary tenements pass by surrender and admittance at the lord's court, as in the ordinary case of copyholds, but that they passed by the common-law assurances of lease and release, together with admittance, though in the case of mortgages it was not usual for the mortgagees to be admitted, and on that account, in the present instance, neither the plaintiff nor the party who had conveyed to him had ever been admitted. It was proved, also, that a quit rent of 1s. 6d. and a relief of sometimes 6d. and sometimes 8d. were payable to the lord in respect of the customary tenements. The case went to the jury on the sufficiency or not of the evidence as to admittance at the lord's court being requisite for the passing of these estates. The jury found that it was; and under the direction of the learned judge a verdict was found for the defendants on the plea of liberum tenementum, the plaintiff obtaining a verdict on the other issues. In Easter Term last, Channell, Serjt. obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and in the following Term

Shee, Serjt. (Peacock with him) shewed cause.—It is submitted that the evidence sufficiently made out that the freehold was in the lord of the manor to prove the plea of liberum tenementum. (Burton on Real Property, 424.) In Stephenson v. Hill (3 Burr. 1278), Lord Mansfield held that the freehold of estates called customary freeholds was in the lord. This was confirmed in Doe d. Reay v. Huntington (4 East. 271); and the same was also held in Doe v. Danvers (7 East, 299). It is true there the estates passed by surrender and admittance; but Lord Ellenborough, in giving the judgment of the Court, said that "it appears to us, whether holden at the will of the lord or not, the freehold is in the lord and not in the tenant." The same doctrine was held also in Burrell v. Dodd (3 Bos. & Pull. 378). On the other hand, Sir W. Blackstone, in his law tracts entitled "Considerations on Copyholders," comes to the conclusion that though the tenures are only a superior kind of copyhold, and the tenants have not a freehold tenure, yet they may have a freehold interest. [MAULE, J. referred to Bingham v. Woodgate (1 Russ. & Myl. 32.) All that that case decided was, that the union of the fee of the customary tenements with the estate for life of the lord, was a suspension of the seigniory during the life of the lord. It was immaterial and unnecessary in that case to determine whether the freehold was in the lord or the tenant, and at most it only shews a distinction between freehold interest and tenure. Then as to the necessity of the defendant proving a right to the immediate possession to support this plea according to the case of Doe v. Wright (10 A. & E. 763), it is submitted that this is not so, unless the right to the possession is shewn not to exist. The plea means that the defendant has the present freehold, but not that he is entitled to the immediate possession. [CRESSWELL, J.—You must shew your estate is such as to give you the right to the possession.] It is clear that in the case of a chattel interest the plaintiff must reply; if so, it is submitted he must in a case of copyhold, and a customary freehold is not per se a freehold, but in the nature of a copyhold tenementum.

Channell, Serjt. (Bovill with him) contrà.—Copyhold estates may be by surrender and admittance to be held according to the will of the lord, or according to the custom of the manor; and it is admitted that the mere distinction in the tenure of holding according to the will or the custom is not alone sufficient; but in the present case the tenure is not by surrender at all; it is a customary freehold of this nature, that the estates pass by common-law conveyances. This differs essentially from a chattel interest, because in the case of a tenant for years his estate is consistent with the freehold in possession being in another, and therefore his derivation and subordinate title must be replied. In Stephenson v. Hill it is to be observed the custom is not stated whether the lands passed by surrender or conveyance; and the same remark applies to Burrell v. Dodd. Doe v. Danvers is clearly distinguishable, as the lands were there transferred by surrender and admittance. Bingham v. Woodgate is a strong case in favour of the plaintiff. There, Sir John Leach, M.R. said, "The custom of a manor requiring a bargain and sale, as well as a surrender and admittance, to pass the customary tenements, they are plainly freehold; and St. Paul v. Lord Dudley and Ward, and Doe v. Danvers, have therefore no application." Hussey v. Grills (Ambler, 301), and Willan v. Lancaster (3 Russ. 108), seem to shew the freehold is in the tenant.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

COLTMAN, J.—This was an action of trespass on a close called Spring Plat, to which the defendants pleaded various pleas, on which no question arises, and also pleaded a plea of liberum tenementum in Sir Charles Hardinge, on which issue was joined, and which gives rise to the present question. It appeared in evidence that the Spring Plat was a customary tenement of the manor of which Sir Charles Hardinge was the lord, and it was proved by the steward of the manor that the customary tenement of the manor passed by lease and release and admittance. No further proof was given from which any conclusion could be drawn, whether the freehold in the customary tenement held of the manor was in the lord or the tenant. The counsel for the plaintiff, at the trial, contended that the evidence did not shew satisfactorily that admission was necessary, and addressed the jury upon that point, arguing that if admission was not necessary, there could be no ground for holding the freehold to be in the lord. It appears, by the learned judge's report, the case was left to the jury, who found on the plea of liberum tenementum for the defendants. A motion was afterwards made on the ground that the customary estates of this manor passing by lease, release, and admittance, the freehold must necessarily be in the tenant, or, if there was a freehold in the lord, there was a freehold interest in the tenant, which needed not have been replied to a plea of liberum tenementum. The case came before my brothers Maule, Cresswell, and myself, and we are of opinion that the freehold is in the lord, and the tenant's interest must be subordinate, and this must be replied on the same principle on which a term of years must be pleaded in answer to a plea of liberum tenementum, as appears from the cases of Doe v. Huntington (4 East, 271); and Doe v. Danvers (7 East. 299). The freehold in a case of customary estates of this nature is in general in the lord, and it does not appear that the nature of the tenure of this manor was so far gone into on the present occasion as to shew that the verdict was wrong. As, however, this verdict would bind a right, we think the plaintiff ought to be at liberty to try the case over again if he thinks he can make out a freehold in himself, and if it is worth his while to attempt it; but as we do not see there was any miscarriage by the judge, it must be on the usual terms of paying the costs.

Rule accordingly.

DAWSON v. CROPP.

A landlord cannot make a second distress for the same rent when the goods taken under the first distress were of sufficient value to satisfy the rent, unless there was a good cause for abandoning the first distress, although the rent may have remained unsatisfied.

*It is, therefore, a good replication to a plea justifying the taking of goods as a distress for rent, to allege that the defendant took under a former distress for the same rent goods sufficient in value to satisfy the same, and then might and ought to have fully paid and satisfied the rent; "yet the defendant wrongfully and vexatiously, and without any cause or excuse, refused and neglected so to do." A rejoinder, alleging that the defendant afterwards lawfully abandoned and put an end to the first distress, and that the rent was still unsatisfied, is bad, for not shewing any lawful ground for relinquishing the first distress.

This case was argued in Easter Term last by Talfourd, Serjt. for the defendant, and Gaselee, Serjt. for the plaintiff; but the pleadings and arguments are so fully detailed in the judgment, that it is unnecessary here to set them out.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court:—This was an action on the case; the last count of the declaration was in trover for a quantity of household furniture and other goods and chattels. The defendant pleaded several pleas, the last of which stated that the plaintiff was tenant to the defendant of a certain messuage, with the appurtenances, under a demise made to the plaintiff, at a yearly rent of 50*l.* payable quarterly, on the 25th of January, the 24th of March, the 24th of June, the 29th of September, and the 25th of December; that on the 24th of June, 1844, 28*l.* of the rent aforesaid, for half-a-year, ending on that day, became due and payable from the plaintiff to the defendant, and continued due and in arrear, and then justified the taking the goods by distress. To this the plaintiff replied, that after the arrears of rent in the last plea mentioned had become due and payable, and before the committing of the grievance in the last count of the declaration mentioned, and before the taking or distraining of the goods, as in the last plea mentioned, to wit, on the 25th June, 1844, the defendant took and distrained the chattels of the plaintiff other than those in the last count mentioned, as a distress for the said arrears of rent, the said last-mentioned goods being then in and upon the said messuage with the appurtenances, and there being subject and liable to distress for the said arrears of rent, of a sufficient value to satisfy the said arrears of rent, and the defendant then could, and might, and ought to have fully paid and satisfied the said arrears of rent, and the costs out of and by the said goods and chattels, yet the defendant wrongfully and vexatiously, and without any cause or excuse, refused and neglected so to do, and after making the said distress in this replication mentioned, for the said arrears of rent in the said last-count mentioned, and at the time when, &c. of his own wrong, vexatiously seized and took the goods and chattels in the last count mentioned, and converted them to his own use. Rejoinder, that the goods and chattels taken and distrained in the replication mentioned, before the making of the distress in the last plea mentioned, were not of sufficient value to satisfy the arrears of rent, and the defendant afterwards, and before the making of the distress in the last plea mentioned, lawfully abandoned and put an end to the distress in the said replication mentioned, and withdrew from the possession of the goods and chattels taken and distrained under the same, and did not sell or dispose of them under the said distress, and the rent so distrained for, as in the last plea mentioned, at the time of making the distress in the last plea mentioned, remained and was wholly unpaid and satisfied. Surrejoinder, that the goods and chattels taken and distrained as in the replication mentioned were of sufficient value to satisfy the arrears of rent as in the replication alleged. To that surrejoinder the defendant demurred specially on the ground that it took issue on an immaterial matter, and did not traverse, and confess and avoid the material allegations in the rejoinder, namely, that the defendant lawfully abandoned the first distress, and withdrew from the possession, and did not sell the same, and that the rent remained due. On the argument before us in Easter Term, it was contended, in support of the demurrer, that a distress taken and abandoned without sale did not satisfy the rent, and that consequently the landlord was not liable to be sued in trover for making the second distress, and that it was not material whether the goods first distrained were or were not of a sufficient value to satisfy the arrears of rent if the distress was abandoned before sale, and the rent remained still due. The cases of Lear v. Edmonds (1 B. & A. 157), and Lingham v. Warren (2 Brod. & Bing. 36), and Hudd v. Ravenor (2 Brod. & Bing. 662), were cited as authorities for these positions. On the other hand, it was contended if the landlord distrained for rent in arrear more goods than were sufficient to satisfy the rent, and unlawfully abandoned the distress, the question of the rent being due is immaterial; and though it may have been due, yet that, for the second distress, he may be sued in trespass or trover; consequently, if the defendant's rejoinder was good, it could only be on the ground that the sufficiency of the first distress was material, and then the surrejoinder would be good also. The case of Smith v. Goodwin (4 B. & Ad. 413), and some other cases, were relied upon. (Wallis v. Saville, 2 Lutw. 1532; and Lear v. Caldecott, 4 Q. B. 123.) When the case was argued, it appeared somewhat difficult to reconcile all the decisions that were brought to our notice; we therefore took time to look into the case, and now we are of opinion on this pleading our judgment must be for the plaintiff. The replication is a good answer to the plea; for, assuming that the rent remained due, it not having been satisfied by the first distress—and the case of Lear v. Edmonds (1 B. & A. 157) certainly has not gone beyond that—still the landlord could not, under the circumstances stated in the replication, make the second distress. In Comyn's Digest, Distress (A. 1), it is laid down,—"So, a man cannot take two distresses for the same rent, for it was his folly that he did not take sufficient at first." In that passage it is assumed he might have taken sufficient at first, and in the replication it is averred that he did take sufficient at first. The Chief Baron Comyns refers to Moore, p. 7, and Lut. 1532. The case of Moore is at least an authority for the present plaintiff. It is thus:—a man distrained for 10*l.* rent due at Michaelmas, according to reservation, certain sheep that were only of the value of 40*s.* and he afterwards distrained for the residue, and the tenant made several replevins. The question was, if he could make an avowry. Montague, Hinde, and Harris—"He cannot, for the distress is not good, and it is the folly of the lessor that he would so distrain in the first instance." Montague—"Reception lies for the second distress" Brown—" If a man have arrear of rent for several days, and take a distress for one day at one time, and for another day at another time, he may; but it is otherwise in the case at bar." The case of Wallis v. Saville, in Lutwy is an authority for this position, that a man cannot make a second distress for the same rent when he might have taken sufficient at first. We shall not, by acting on these authorities, overrule Lingham v. Warren and Hudd v. Ravenor. In the former, the plaintiff declared in replevin; there was an avowry for rent in arrear; the plaintiff pleaded in bar, that the defendant distrained for the same rent, and distrained goods and chattels of sufficient value to satisfy; and on demurrer thereto it was held to be a bad plea, on the ground that many cases are supportable in which the taking a sufficient distress might not produce a satisfaction of the rents, which is undoubtedly true, as in one of the cases: the declaration was in replevin, and there was an avowry for rent in arrear; the plea in bar alleged a former distress for the same rent, and that the defendant might thereby have paid himself the rent, but that he neglected and omitted so to do, and wrongfully and vexatiously made a second distress for the same rent. That plea was held bad on the authority of Lear v. Edmonds; and the judgment of Richardson, J. shews clearly that the ground of the decision implied that the former distress might have been relinquished in kindness to the defendant, and that no issue could have been taken on the words "neglected and omitted." In the present case the replication goes much further, and says that he vexatiously, and without any cause or excuse, refused to satisfy the arrears of rent by means of the first distress. We therefore do not impugn those cases by holding that this replication is good. It remains to be considered whether the rejoinder gives a sufficient answer to it. The rejoinder alleges that the goods distrained in the first instance were not of sufficient value to satisfy the arrears of rent, and that the defendant afterwards lawfully abandoned and put an end to the distress. If it can be read so as to make an insufficiency of the goods distrained the ground for the abandoning, and the averment of sufficiency is material, then the rejoinder averring it is good; but if it is not so to be read, the rejoinder is bad, by reason of its not shewing any lawful ground for relinquishing the first distress, so as to be an answer to the matter alleged in the replication. On these grounds we hold the plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

Judgment for plaintiff.

SITTINGS AFTER TRINITY TERM.

CHANTER v. JOHNSON.

To a declaration containing an indebitatus count for the license and permission of the plaintiff to the defendants, granted to use a certain patent invention of the plaintiff, the defendants pleaded the general issue. At the trial, the plaintiff, having proved an order in writing by the defendants in the following terms,—"Send us a license to use one of Chanter and Company's patent furnaces, for which we agree to pay Mr. John Chanter the terms of printed list, &c."—went on to prove that, after the date of this order, one of the furnaces was actually put up and used on the defendants' premises, under the superintendence of the plaintiff. The plaintiff offered in evidence a license in writing, which was rejected by the judge, on the ground that it was unstamped.

Held, that without the written license there was no evidence to go to the jury. Held also, that a license under seal to use a patent is not a deed, and does not require a deed stamp.

Semble, that a document, which would be a deed if properly executed as such, if it has a seal attached to it, but merely purports to be under hand, is not a deed.

Assumpsit.—The declaration contained an indebitatus count for the license and permission of the plaintiff to the defendants, before then granted at their request, to use a certain patent invention of the plaintiff, under and by virtue of which license and permission the said patent invention was by them used and enjoyed.

Pleas.—Non assumpsit, and other pleas, the issues upon which were found for the plaintiff at the trial, and which were not material to the question decided by the Court.

The plaintiff, at the trial, before Wightman, J. at the last assizes at Liverpool, proved the following order, signed by the defendants:

"To Mr. Chanter.

"Send us a license to use one of Chanter & Company's patent furnaces, to be applied to a steam-engine boiler, to which add your moveable fire-bars, 30-horses power; for which we agree to pay Mr. John Chanter, or his order, as a patent right, 22*s.* per horse for furnace.

"Signature,— Wm. Johnson & Co.

"Place,— Wood Street Mill.

"Date,—Feb. 15th, 1844.

"Licenses will be issued, on the order being presented and accepted; payment for the same, due in cash, on delivery, without a special agreement in writing."

It was also proved that, after the date of the order, the patent furnace mentioned in it was put up by the defendants upon their premises, under the superintendence of the plaintiff, and was used by them for some time.

The plaintiff then offered in evidence the following license, and proved that it had been delivered to the defendants:—

"I, John Chanter, in behalf of myself and Company, of Wine Office-court, Fleet-street, in the city of London, county of Middlesex, patentee and proprietor of the inventions known as 'Chanter and Co.'s,' and other patents for improvements in furnaces, boilers, moveable fire-bars, condensers, &c. &c. by virtue of the King's letters patent, under the great seal of Great Britain, bearing date July 1834, September 1834, April 1835, May 1835, November 1835, February 1837, and also her present Majesty's great seal, bearing date September 1839, August 1839, and October 1840, for improvements in furnaces, boilers, moveable fire-bars, condensers, &c. &c. do hereby, in consideration of the sum of thirty-three pounds to me paid by Messrs. Wm. Johnson and Co. (as by receipt hereunto annexed), give and grant to the said Messrs. Wm. Johnson and Co. full and free license, consent, and permission to erect and use upon or at the premises situate at Wood Street Mill, Wigan, but not elsewhere, say one patent furnace to a 30-horse steam-boiler, of the same or similar construction with the said inventions referred to above, for which the said letters patent have been granted; as witness my hand, at London, this nineteenth day of February, 1844.

"JOHN CHANTER." L.S.

One of the witnesses stated, that after Mr. Chanter signed the document, he had affixed a seal to it by the plaintiff's orders.

This document was objected to by the defendants' counsel, upon the ground that, being under seal, it was a deed, and required a deed-stamp, and the learned judge being of that opinion, rejected it. It was then contended that, without that document there was no case to go to the jury. The plaintiff's counsel argued, that, the order having been proved, the subsequent use of the patent by the defendants was evidence that they had the license and permission of the plaintiff, without which they would have been acting illegally in using the patent.

The learned judge inclined to the contrary opinion, but thought the best course was to enter a verdict for the plaintiff, reserving leave for the defendants to move to enter a verdict for them, if the Court should be of opinion that there was no evidence to support the declaration without the license.

Martin, Q.C. obtained a rule accordingly last Easter Term.

Knowles, Q.C. for the plaintiff, also moved for a new trial, upon the ground that the license had been improperly rejected, and he obtained leave to take the point upon the argument on the defendants' rule.

C. Saunders and Aspinall now shewed cause against the rule for a nonsuit. First, there was a case to go to the jury without the license. The declaration contains the word "permission" as well as license. Permission to use a patent may be given by parol. [ALDERSON, B.—Is it not clear that the words "send us a license" refer to something on paper, something capable of being sent?] The case stands now for this purpose as if the deed had never been offered; and in that case there was evidence for the jury that the license in writing had been dispensed with, and the parol permission accepted instead. [ALDERSON, B.—Where is there any evidence of a contract to pay any thing except for the written license?] At all events the plaintiff is entitled to a new trial. The license ought to have been received: it is not a deed. It does not appear on the face of it to have been delivered, and there is no evidence of any delivery; but even if there were, it would not be a deed. It contains nothing upon which covenant could be maintained. There are many documents which are usually, and some of them necessarily, under seal, but which are certainly not deeds; as for instance an award, or a magistrate's warrant, and many others.

Cowling, contrà, contended that the document required a deed-stamp, and was properly rejected, and that there was no case without it.

ALDERSON, B.—We are all of opinion that there was no case for the jury without the license. The contract was clearly for a license in writing, and the cause of action was not complete till the license was delivered. We think, however, that the license was wrongly rejected. The analogy between a document of this sort and an award or justice's warrant seems to us to be good. But at all events, the paper before us does not appear to have been delivered. Although there is a seal upon it, it only purports to be under hand, and there is no evidence of a delivery, but rather the contrary. As this point does not seem to have been reserved, the rule must be absolute for a new trial. Rule absolute for a new trial.

Wednesday, June 18.

HARMER v. JOHNSON.

Judgment was signed on the 3rd of December, 1841. After the expiration of a year, a judge's order was obtained to issue execution without a sci. fa. A fi. fa. issued in the new form, and was returned nulla bona on 29th of December, 1842. On 23rd of April, 1845, an alias fi. fa. was issued, under which levy was made. Held, that such execution was regular, and that alias writs need not be tested on the day of the return of preceding writs, nor within any particular time afterwards: the rule as to process being returnable on the following Term not being applicable to final process.

The facts and arguments on this case are so fully stated in the judgment, that it is unnecessary to repeat them.

JUDGMENT.

PARKE, B. now delivered the judgment of the Court. In this case a rule nisi had been obtained by Mr. Henderson to set aside an execution on a judgment on a warrant of attorney with a defeazance. The judgment, it appears, was signed on the 3rd of December, 1841, and after the expiration of the year a judge's order was obtained to issue execution on the judgment, without a scire facias. A fi. fa. was accordingly issued in the new form, which was returnable on the 14th of September, 1842, but was returned nulla bona on the 29th December, 1842, and on the 23rd of April, 1845, an alias fi. fa. was issued, under which a levy took place. The defendant became bankrupt, and the application to set aside the execution was made by his assignee. The principal ground for the application was, that the first execution issued without a scire facias to revive the judgment; but that objection appears to have been removed by the judge's order by consent. Mr. Henderson relied upon two others; the first of which was, that the judge's order by consent, although it was valid between the parties, was void as against the assignees, according to 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, which makes warrants of attorney void against the assignees, unless registered, and expressly enacts that those upon which defeazance or conditions have not been indorsed shall be void to all intents and purposes; thus the Court of Queen's Bench in Bennett v. Daniel (10 B. & C. 500) held that a warrant of attorney, subject to a defeazance, not written on the same paper or parchment, is not void between the parties, but against the assignees. It was argued by Mr. Henderson that the stipulation, if no fi. fa. should be necessary, not being part of the defeazance indorsed on the warrant of attorney, was altogether void as against his client. This objection I am of opinion ought not to prevail, because the agreement to waive the necessity of the scire fac[illegible] in fact no part of the defeazance or condition, even supposing that term to embrace all the contemporaneous stipulations; for it was made at a subsequent time, and indeed was nothing more than a waiver of the suing out of a scire facias, which the plaintiff was about to do, in order to warrant an execution on his judgment, and which was consented to for the purpose of saving expense. The next objection was, that the alias fi. fa. was irregular, because it was not properly executed with the first fi. fa.; nor could any continuances be entered on the roll to cure the defect, because, if continuances were entered, it would be necessary to amend the fi. fa. by converting it into a pluries; and such amendment, although it would be allowed against the original defendant, could not be permitted as against his assignee. This objection is founded upon the supposition that process in the new form must be continued in a similar manner to that in the old form, and it seems to me that this is unnecessary. In the old form, each subsequent suit of mesne process was tested on the return day, quarto die post, where the proceedings were by original writs; and, in the case of final process, on the return day of the preceding writ. The writ might be sued out, tested of a prior date, and there was never any difference in connecting one writ with another process on the return day of the prior writ; but in the new process, the writs must be tested or bear date in accordance with the 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, s. 12, on the day they are sued out, and writs of capias ad respondendum are returnable on execution. Those of ca. sa. have no fixed return day, they are returnable on execution only; and, if not executed, are not properly returnable at all; the judge's order, in case of writ of execution, being rather a mode of obliging the sheriff to notify to the Court what has been done under the writ, than of creating a new tested return day for the writ, instead of the former one expressed in the body of the writ itself, that has reference to it. (Kent v. Hislop, 1 M. & W. 63.) And the old mode of continuing, by entering on the record fictitious writs, with a teste of the return day of the former writ, cannot now be adopted with respect to this description of writ, for there is no such return day; and if a judge's order has the effect of making a return day for the writ, or the writ, when returned in obedience to it, would be spent and determined, as doubtless it would, so that a new writ might issue, founded on the return, I do not think the Court would sanction the entry on the record of a fictitious judge's order to return a writ, in order to make proper continuances; and if one writ was actually returned by virtue of a judge's order, another writ, which must be tested on the very day it issues, could not be a proper writ in continuation, unless it actually issued on the very day of the former return, a course so inconvenient that it would very rarely be adopted and projected. There would be no available mode of continuing such a writ, and the old principle which, although a fiction, is one that must have our consent, and exclude any presumption of the satisfaction of the debt arising from intermediate delay. What, then, is to be done when a writ of execution issued within the year after the judgment or its revival, and the plaintiff wishes to avoid the necessity of a sci. fa.? Must the plaintiff issue process in the old form, with fixed return days, which he has the option of doing? The stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 67, is not obligatory. Or may he adopt a new form, without any continuance, if the Legislature did not intend that the processes in the new form should be connected together in any way? And then it would follow that, if the plaintiff meant to avoid the necessity of a scire facias, he must adopt the old form of the process and the old form of continuance. Or if the Legislature intended that the new process should be connected by the issuing one writ on the precise day that the other was returned, that course must be adopted. It is highly probable that all the consequences of the change introduced by the statute 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, and 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 67, were not foreseen. But I think that the Legislature must be taken to have intended the process in the new form should be connected, and that the only mark of connection should be the description of one writ being an alias or pluries writ. With respect to mesne process, it is clear that the intention of the Legislature was that the writ should be connected, for it is expressly provided by 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, s. 10, that every writ of summons and capias may be continued by an alias or pluries. It is unnecessary that one writ of mesne process in continuation of another should be issued on the very return day of a former writ; for when the operation of the Statute of Limitations is to be defeated (when the object is not to favour the connection of the writ with another), it may be sued out within the month. It would seem from these considerations, the writ might be sued out at a greater interval in ordinary cases, and it has been so held with respect to a capias ad respondendum, and even where it was issued over the period of four months, during which the first writ operates (see the case of Nichols v. Leman, Dowling, P. C. 296); nor need the first writ be returned (Gregory v. Desaruges, 5 Dow. 193). What then is to be the interval during which a writ may be issued in continuation of another, or mesne process? There appears to be none but the limitation of twelve months, after which the case was out of court, on the second statute for the amendment of the former. The 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 67, enables a plaintiff to sue out writs of execution in the new form. I think it must be intended that such writs have similar properties with writs of mesne process, and consequently that succeeding writs need not be tested on the day of the return of the preceding writs, nor within any particular time afterwards; for the limitation of twelve months does not apply after judgment, nor will any practical inconvenience to the defendant follow, for a writ of execution may now be sued out with a long interval between the teste and the return. The rule as to the process being returnable in the following term not being applicable to final process, when there is no proceeding in the court, nor if the writ be continued on the record, does the defendant derive any real advantage; if the amount of the judgment has really been paid before an alias or pluries writ has issued, the defendant would be relieved on motion, or audita querela. For these reasons I think the execution regular, and the rule must be discharged, but without costs.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

Wednesday, June 25.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.)

Re MAY.

Where a meeting has been fixed, and duly advertised, for shewing cause against a bankrupt's certificate, the Court will, under certain circumstances, upon the application of a creditor, without hearing the bankrupt, adjourn the meeting.

Under a separate fiat against one of two joint traders, the joint creditors have a right to be heard against the granting of the certificate.

This bankrupt having passed his last examination, applied in the usual course for a meeting, to take into consideration the granting of his certificate. A meeting was appointed and advertised in the usual way, and every thing required by the bankrupt to be done previous to the meeting was done regularly. The hour appointed for the meeting was one o'clock. At twelve o'clock of the day appointed for the meeting, a solicitor, who had opposed the passing of the bankrupt's last examination on behalf of several creditors, applied to the Court to adjourn the meeting, on the ground that the solicitor for the assignees, whom he stated was also solicitor for the bankrupt (but which turned out not to be correct), in writing to him at his request to apprize him of the meeting, had stated that the meeting was to be held at eleven instead of one o'clock, which was the proper hour; that he had attended accordingly, and that his other arrangements prevented his being present at one o'clock. Upon this statement, his Honour adjourned the meeting to a future day.

At one o'clock the solicitor for the assignees appeared in court; the bankrupt also appeared in court, and the matter being called on, Sturgeon, for the bankrupt, was about to proceed, when

His HONOUR stated that he had adjourned the meeting under the foregoing circumstances.

Sturgeon urged the hardship of such a proceeding to his client, who was in no way to blame.

His HONOUR said the Court had full power to adjourn any meeting when it thought proper to do so, but, as the fault was not with the bankrupt, his expenses caused by the adjournment should be paid out of the estate.

This being the day named for the adjourned meeting, Sturgeon objected to any creditors being heard against the bankrupt's certificate. This was not a regular meeting for that purpose. Even if the Court had the power to adjourn any such meeting, it should not have done so upon the mere statement of a party. There should, at least, have been an affidavit filed with the proceedings upon which to found the adjournment.

The day for opposing the certificate had passed. The 62nd sec. of the 6 Geo. 4, cap. 16, says, at such sitting any creditor may oppose; which means the sitting advertised for the purpose; not at such sitting or any adjournment thereof, which are the words used where it is intended to give the Court the power of adjourning. The practice in the Court of Chancery is never to adjourn the certificate on the ground of the opposing creditors not being prepared. Ex parte Cundell (1 Glyn & Jamieson); Ex parte Curtis (1 Rose, 274), are authorities on this point. The creditors might still oppose the confirmation of the certificate before the Court of Review, but there is no appeal given to the bankrupt against the decision of this Court, when it refuses a bankrupt his certificate.

Further, the parties now wishing to oppose, being joint creditors, are not entitled to do so under this, which is a separate fiat. Under the 6 Geo. 4, joint creditors are entitled to prove against the separate estate for the purpose only of voting in the choice of assignees, and for assenting to or dissenting from the certificate. Now the 5 & 6 Vict. cap. 122, has deprived the creditor of any voice in the granting of the certificate; a joint creditor, therefore, is now only entitled to prove for the purpose of voting in the choice of assignees.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.—Every adjournment of a sitting is the same sitting. Your argument would go the length of saying that this Court, a court of record, has not power to adjourn its sittings. I have no doubt but that the Court has power to adjourn. As to your argument that there is nothing on the file of the Court upon which to ground the adjournment, there is a memorandum which I embodied in the order, stating the reason for the adjournment. As to the last objection, the 39th section of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, says, any of the creditors of the bankrupt may be heard against the allowance of the certificate—are not these parties creditors of the bankrupt? Certainly they are; they are creditors of the firm, and have proved under the separate estate, and their debts are not disputed; then, if creditors, they are entitled to be heard against the certificate. Who is more likely to be injured by the granting of the certificate than they?

SUBDIVISION COURT.
Tuesday, July 8.
(Before Commissioners FONBLANQUE and GOULBURN. HOLROYD, the third Commissioner, did not attend.)

Re THOMAS EASTWOOD.
Lien—Commitment.

An attorney who has been summoned to produce a deed of assignment executed by a trader to certain trustees for the purpose of establishing an act of bankruptcy against such trader, cannot refuse to produce such deed on the ground that he has a lien thereon against the trustees, his clients, for the costs of preparing the deed.

Where an attorney, under the foregoing circumstances, refuses to produce a deed, the Commissioner will commit him to the custody of the messenger to be brought up before a subdivision court.

Bennett, an attorney, carrying on business at Brighton, had been summoned under a commission issued against Eastwood, to produce before Mr. Commissioner Goulburn a deed of assignment, alleged to have been executed by Eastwood to certain trustees for the benefit of his creditors (which deed Bennett had prepared as attorney for the trustees, and which was in his possession), and also to be examined touching the execution of the deed by Eastwood. The execution of the deed by Eastwood was the act of bankruptcy intended to be relied on in support of the commission. Bennett was not required to part with the custody of the deed, but merely to produce it to the Court, and prove the execution. Bennett stated he had prepared the deed not as solicitor for the bankrupt, but for the trustees. It was the deed of the trustees, and he had a lien on it for the costs of preparing it, and he therefore declined to produce it until his costs were paid. He further stated that he had a case a short time since precisely similar before Mr. Commissioner Evans, who had decided that he was entitled to be paid his costs before he produced the deed.(a)

Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.—That might be where the attorney had been employed by the bankrupt, but in this case he was employed by the trustees.

Mr. Bennett still refusing to produce the deed,

His HONOUR committed him to the custody of the messenger, to be brought up before a subdivision Court on the following day, at the same time saying he would recommend the messenger to take Mr. Bennett's word for his appearance.

Sturgeon, for Bennett, now contended that his client had a right to retain the deed, and was justified in not producing it to the Court until his costs were paid. If the production of the deed would prove the act of bankruptcy as alleged, then the extracting such information from the deed would render it good for nothing, and his client's lien would, in effect, be destroyed.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.—I pointed out to Mr. Bennett yesterday the distinction between the case of an attorney setting up a lien against his own client, or against third parties, and I felt convinced that when he referred to the case alluded to before Mr. Commissioner Evans, he would find that it was a case between attorney and client.

Sturgeon.—The Court of Bankruptcy sits as a court of equity, and the question is, whether the Court is not bound to look at the equities of the case. My client only says, before you make this deed a worthless piece of paper, he ought in equity and justice to have his costs paid.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.—Pay him for what he has done for another party, and to whom he has to look for payment?

Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE.—It would be strange equity to make the bankrupt pay other people's debts when he cannot pay his own. To make a deed secret and keep it out of Court, it would only be necessary, according to your argument, to omit to pay the solicitor's bill.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.—In the case of Furlong v. Howard (2 Schoales & Lefroy), Lord Redesdale, Chancellor, said, "Though a solicitor may have a lien on a deed, yet if his client is bound to produce it for the benefit of a third person, so also must the solicitor." This right is only as between his client and him. The 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 14, empowers the commissioners to summon parties to produce documents necessary to establish the trading and act of bankruptcy. This deed is necessary to establish the act of bankruptcy, and the creditors being third parties, Mr. Bennett is bound to produce it without being paid his costs. I have taken the opinion of Mr. Commissioner Holroyd, who concurs in this view of the case.

Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE. — I entirely agree with the opinion of my brother commissioners. About a year and a half ago I committed a country attorney for a similar offence.

Mr. Bennett then produced the deed.

(a) On a subsequent day, Mr. Commissioner Goulburn stated he had since seen Mr. Commissioner Evans, who requested him to state that he could not have decided any such point as alleged by Mr. Bennett, as he perfectly agreed with the decision of the Court on the point.

Thursday, July 17.
(Before Mr. Commissioner FANE.)

Re BELLSON.

Where an insolvent, who has not a lease of his premises and is indebted to his landlord for rent, refuses to give up possession, the Court will not grant him his final order.

This was the day named for granting the insolvent his final order, which was opposed by Sturgeon for the landlord of the insolvent, on the ground that the insolvent was indebted to him for rent and refused to give up possession. The insolvent had not any lease of the premises. He stated it was the invariable practice in the Insolvent Court, where an insolvent refused to give up possession, to send him back until he did.

On behalf of the insolvent it was contended that the refusal of the insolvent to give up possession of the premises was not mentioned in the Act among the grounds for refusing an insolvent the protection of the Court.

His HONOUR.—I named a day for the insolvent to come up for his final order, as I was obliged to do under the 24th sect. of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96; none of the reasons mentioned in that section for not naming a day having occurred in this case, or, at all events, not having been brought under the notice of the Court. But when the insolvent comes up for his final order, the Court is authorized to adjourn the consideration thereof sine die. The Court, in this section, is not tied down to the reasons mentioned in the 24th section, but may inquire into the general conduct of the insolvent. I think the insolvent ought to give up possession; if he does not, I shall adjourn the final order sine die.

The insolvent having subsequently agreed to give up possession in one month, the final order was adjourned for that time.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.
HANTS SUMMER ASSIZES, 1845.
Winchester, Saturday, July 12.
(Before Mr. Justice ERLE.)

DOE dem. MARRYAT v. MAIDMENT.

A solicitor to one of the parties to a suit may be called by the opposite party and asked respecting the possession of documents connected with an estate, which he had received in professional confidence; and, for the purpose of identifying such documents, the date and names of the parties to them may be given.

In this case the defendant called an attorney as a witness, who had been the solicitor of the party under whom the lessor of the plaintiff claimed. He was asked if he had not certain documents and papers in his hands, at such a time, appertaining to the land, for the recovery of which this ejectment was brought. He replied, that he had such documents and papers, but had received them as the solicitor for the party to whom the estate then belonged. He was then asked if he had not a certain document of such a date, between certain parties (naming them).

Rawlinson, for the plaintiff, objected to the question. The papers received by the witness, he argued, were received as the solicitor of the party to whom the estate then belonged, and the witness, therefore, could not divulge their contents, or any thing in reference to them.

Crowder, for the defendant, observed that the question proposed was not for the purpose of obtaining a knowledge of the contents of the document, but simply for the purpose of shewing its possession by the plaintiff, so as to give secondary evidence of it if it should not be produced in obedience to the notice given to the plaintiff for that purpose.

Rawlinson submitted that the question could not be put for this purpose. A witness who is solicitor, and protected by the rule respecting professional confidence, could not by such means be made to divulge what deeds his client might or might not have respecting his estate. If such a course could be pursued, it might be used for the purpose of ascertaining whether the client had any deeds to his estate, or perhaps some one particular deed upon which it was known the title depended; and the most ruinous consequence to such client might be the result.

ERLE, J.—I think Mr. Crowder has a right to shew this deed in the possession of the plaintiff, and might do so by the evidence of this witness if he can. For this purpose, I think he is justified in so far referring to the deed as is necessary for the purpose of identifying it. But he cannot carry his question beyond that.

Rawlinson and M. Smith, for the lessor of the plaintiff.

Crowder and Barstow, for the defendant.

Monday, July 14.
(Before Mr. Baron PLATT.)

REG. v. DERMODY.

A witness may be asked generally whether he had ever said [whatever the statement might be], without excepting the evidence he gave before the magistrate.

The prisoner was indicted for cutting and wounding, with intent to murder.

A witness was called who had been before the committing magistrate, and made a deposition in the usual manner. In giving his evidence in court he varied somewhat from the statement made before the magistrate, as that statement appeared in the deposition returned.

Missing, for the prisoner, on cross-examination, put a general question, as to whether he had ever said such and such a thing before.

Edwards, for the prosecution, objected to the general nature of the question, contending that it should be put with an exception, as to what was said before the magistrate.

PLATT, B.—The question is perfectly regular. You can shut out any thing said before the magistrate, but your objection comes too soon.

Edwards observed that the objection he had taken had been allowed over and over again on the circuit, and had been universally acted on.

PLATT, B.—I think the objection too soon. The question put by Mr. Missing appears to me perfectly regular. If the witness attempts to state any thing he said before the magistrate, you have an undoubted right to stop him, and require the deposition to be put in.

The question was then put.

Edwards, for the prosecution.

Missing, for the prisoner.

Summary.

THE work of a Session is now being crowded into the business of a night. It is impossible to follow our law makers in the breathless speed with which they strangle some projects of laws, and hurry others through the forms of the House with all their imperfections and impracticabilities. Parliament is to be prorogued early in August, so we will not speculate upon the fate of Bills, but patiently wait results which must so soon be exhibited.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS

THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.—The accounts respecting the annual territorial revenues and disbursements of the East-India Company have just been presented to Parliament. They shew, amongst other particulars, that the gross total revenues and receipts of the Bengal Presidency amounted in 1840-41 to 6,63,56,747 Company's rupees; in 1841-42, to 6,92,93,345 Company's rupees; in 1842-43, to 7,32,63,467 Company's rupees; and in 1843-44, to 7,85,12,352 Company's rupees (according to estimate). The gross total amount of charges concurrently amounted to 8,73,40,152; 9,13,37,516; 9,76,73,698; and 8,98,52,031 Company's rupees respectively; thus exhibiting a deficiency in each year of some 1,13,39,679 to 2,44,10,231 Company's rupees. Of the north-western provinces, the total revenue amounted in 1843-44 (according to estimate), to ,19,13,000 Company's rupees; and the total charges to 93,21,600, leaving a surplus on the netted account of 4,27,38,300 rupees. Of the Madras Presidency, the total revenue amounted in 1843-44 to 5,07,41,946 Company's rupees (gross), and the total charges to 3,56,51,112, leaving a surplus on the netted account of 27,67,186 rupees. Of the Bombay Presidency, the gross total revenue of 1843-44 amounted to 3,30,55,645 rupees, and the net revenue to 2,18,31,763, whilst the total charge amounted to ...3,495 rupees, leaving a deficit on the settled account of 16,78,861 rupees. A general abstract view of the revenues and charges of India shews that in 1843-44 (according to a partial estimate) the total revenues of the three presidencies and the north-west provinces amounted altogether to 18,14,91,813 Company's rupees, equal to 17,015,139*l.* at the rate of 2s. per sicca rupee. The total concurrent charges in 1843-44 amounted to 15,83,38,367 Company's rupees, equal, at the same rate, to 14,844,222*l.* thus leaving a surplus on the whole account of 2,170,917*l.* But the charges disbursed in England on account of the Indian territory during the same period having amounted to 2,914,073*l.* a net deficit remained in the balance of the whole account amounting to 772,322*l.* The net deficiencies in 1840-41, 1841-42, and 1842-43 amounted respectively to 1,753,247*l.* 1,765,701*l.* and 1,346,173*l.*

Bills in Progress.

BAIL IN ERROR.—A bill has been brought from the House of Lords intituled "An Act to Stay Execution of Judgment for Misdemeanors upon giving Bail in Error." It contains but seven clauses. The first enacts that in every case of judgment given after the passing of the Act for a misdemeanor, where the defendant or defendants shall have obtained a writ of error to reverse such judgment, execution thereupon shall be stayed until such writ of error shall be finally determined, and in the defendants shall be imprisoned under such execution, or any fine shall have been levied, either wholly or partly, in pursuance of such judgment, the said defendants shall be entitled to be discharged from durance, and to receive back any money levied on account of such fine from the person in whose possession it shall be, until such final determination; provided always, that no execution upon any such judgment shall be stayed, unless and until the defendants shall become bound by recognizance, to be acknowledged before one of the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, with two sufficient sureties to be approved of by such judge, in such sum as such judge shall direct, to prosecute the writ of error with effect; and in case the judgment shall be affirmed, forthwith to render the said defendants to prison, according to the said judgment, where imprisonment shall have been adjudged. The time of imprisonment is to be reckoned to begin from the day when the defendants shall be in actual custody under such judgment; and if the defendants shall have been discharged from imprisonment, such defendants shall be liable to be imprisoned for such further period as, with the time during which they may already have been imprisoned under such execution, shall be equal to the period from which such defendants were so adjudged to be imprisoned. The writ of error may be quashed in the case of delay or neglect to prosecute it. The Act is not to extend to Scotland.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

WE have nothing more to notify in this department than that the Magistrates of Radnor, at the last Quarter Sessions, unanimously resolved to advertise the holding of their Sessions in the LAW TIMES, deeming it but due to the convenience of the Profession most interested in them, that the announcement should appear in a journal where it is sure to be seen and referred to by the parties who are mainly concerned in the information so conveyed. Thus, by degrees, are all the counties, and cities, and boroughs, having a Quarter Sessions, adopting an arrangement so manifestly just towards the Legal Profession that it is only surprising it has not been universally asked for by the Lawyers in every locality, and yielded by the Magistracy.

APPORTIONMENT OF HIGHWAYS.

THE case of Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Hickling (5 Law T. 285) is an important decision to the effect that an old order of justices in 1815, which apportions certain parts of a highway upon parishes, which it specifies, under 34 Geo. 3, c. 74 (now repealed), is sufficient proof that the highway lies within such parishes, although there was no specific adjudication of the fact. The case arose on an indictment preferred in the usual way upon denial of liability by the surveyor under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, and the question was, whether the defendants might not now prove that no part of the road was in the parish, notwithstanding the order. But the Court held that the order was conclusive of all facts on which it adjudicated, basing their decision on Brittain v. Kinnaird (Brod. & Bing. 432), which goes, however, merely to shew than in an action against a magistrate, a conviction by him, if there be no defect on the face of it, is conclusive evidence of the facts contained in it; but adds Dallas, C. J. "I agree that if he had not jurisdiction, the conviction signifies nothing." Now the jurisdiction is put in issue in this case by the question whether part of the road did lie in the parish of Hickling. This is not expressly stated in the order, though it follows the form of the statute; but that cannot supply the absence of proof of an essential fact. Besides, there seems to us a great hardship in concluding the parish for ever by a blunder made in 1816. It was, we think, a fit matter of inquiry whether a fact not expressly stated in the order which was essential to the jurisdiction to make it, did exist or not. The decision makes the order itself a proof of the right to make it. S.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.—A parliamentary blue book has just been issued, containing an account of criminal offenders in England and Wales in the course of last year. It appears that, in 1844, the commitments numbered 26,542, which was a considerable diminution compared with the preceding year, when the commitments amounted to 29,591. In 1841, there were 27,760 commitments for trial; in 1842, 31,309; in 1843, 29,591; and in 1844, only 26,542. It would seem that, for the last five years, the numbers have increased, compared with the preceding five years. The commitments for the last five years numbered 142,389, and in the previous five years 112,864.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

AGAIN do the reports of the written judgments occupy a large portion of our space, and so many yet remain for publication, that we shall be compelled to do what last week we had announced, namely, to bring out another double number to liquidate a portion of the arrears. The one of last week, being rendered necessary by the quantity of advertisements, was presented as a gift to our subscribers, and consequently has in no way removed the necessity of another, which will probably be adopted next week. All the Circuit reports agree in complaints of the extreme lightness of the business. Lawyers and clients have no time for aught but railways and the speculations connected with them. Many of the judgments reported in this number are of very great importance, and will reward careful study. They are as nearly verbatim as a first-rate shorthand writer could take them. Perhaps our readers are not aware that it is only thus that the written judgments can be procured. That which ought to be public property, inasmuch as it is a part of the law of the land, and to which all ought to have free access, is handed to one favoured reporter. But, luckily, stenography is a match for favouritism.

THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF PROCEEDING AGAINST A TRADER-DEBTOR

CHAPTER II.

The creditor has now filed his affidavit of debt, and served a copy of it, together with a notice requiring immediate payment, upon his debtor. We proceed to examine the consequences of these proceedings, both as they regard the creditor and affect the debtor.

STATUTE.

10. "And if such trader shall not, within twenty-one days after personal service of such affidavit or affidavits and notice, pay such debt or debts, or secure or compound for the same to the satisfaction of such creditor or creditors, or enter into a bond in such sum, and with two sufficient sureties, as a commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy shall approve of, to pay such sum or sums as shall be recovered in any action or actions which shall have been brought or shall thereafter be brought for the recovery of the same, together with such costs as shall be given in the same, or to render himself to the custody of the gaoler of the court in which such action shall have been brought, according to the practice of such court, or within such time and in such manner as the said or any judge thereof shall direct, after judgment shall have been recovered in such action, every such trader shall have been deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the twenty-second day after service of such affidavit or affidavits and notice, provided a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against such trader within two calendar months from the filing of such affidavit or affidavits, but not otherwise. (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8.)

WITHIN TWENTY-ONE DAYS.

11. The debtor must either pay the amount of his debt, or secure or compound for the same to his creditors' satisfaction, or enter into a bond, with two sufficient sureties, to be approved of by the commissioner, to pay any sums which shall be recovered by his creditor in any action then pending, or which may thereafter be brought against him, together with costs of the same; or render himself to the custody of the gaoler of the court in which the action shall be brought, after judgment shall have been recovered against him; or, in default of his complying with one or other of these provisions, such debtor will be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the twenty-second day after the service of the copy of the affidavit and notice, provided the fiat shall be issued against him within two calendar months from the time of the filing of the affidavits. In Ex parte Gratton (2 M. D. & D. 401), where the creditor absented himself for a period of a fortnight of the twenty-one days limited by the statute for the payment of the debt, to avoid receiving it, and during his absence the debtor tendered payment of his debt to the creditor's managing clerk, who refused to accept it; Held, that under these circumstances the creditor had concerted the act of bankruptcy, and could not support a fiat under it.

Quære, whether in the computation of the twenty-one days, the day on which the notice is served is to be included. (Gibson v. Muskett, 3 Scott, N. C. 429; 4 Man. & Gr. 160, S.C.)

PAY, SECURE, OR COMPOUND TO THE CREDITORS' SATISFACTION.

12. In Ex parte Brown (1 Mont. & Ch. 177), it was held, that where a creditor, after serving a trader with a notice demanding payment, in compliance with the statute, entered into an agreement with him, by which the trader was to give up all he had in the world, on condition of the creditor's releasing him from his debt, such an agreement was to be considered as a security accepted by the creditor at the time for the satisfaction of the debt, and that he could not afterwards issue a fiat. In that case, Sir John Cross said, "Full satisfaction is one thing: but satisfaction for the time is quite another thing: a security with which the creditor is satisfied not necessarily amounting to a satisfaction of the debt."

In Attwood v. Bankes (2 Beau. 192), an injunction was granted by the Master of the Rolls to restrain a creditor from proceeding under this statute, by means whereof an act of bankruptcy might be deemed to have been committed by a debtor, or a fiat in bankruptcy might issue against him, on the ground of the creditor having consented to an arrangement, and undertaken to release the debtor from all liability in respect of the debt.

REGISTRATION OF FOREIGN RAILWAYS.

In another part of this number we have published the opinions of the present Attorney-General and Solicitor-General, and Sir JOHN BAYLEY and Mr. LOFTUS WIGRAM, on a case submitted to them on behalf of the East-Indian Railway Company, and which opinions appeared in the Times of the 2nd instant. We beg to invite thereto the attention of our readers, as some doubt appears to have lately arisen as to the necessity or not of registering, under the Joint Stock Companies Registration Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, companies formed in this country for the purpose of making railways in India, and abroad.

After opinions so decided, and given by the most eminent counsel of the day, we should respectfully have refrained from expressing our own views on the matter, had not our contemporary, the Jurist, in a leading article of the 5th instant, thought proper to refer to those opinions, and to controvert the principle laid down in them for testing the application of the Act.

The importance of the question, affecting, as it does, so many companies who are daily being advertised in the public journals, and the necessity therefore that the effect of the statute should be understood, and not a belief that any thing which we can say can either add weight to or was required to strengthen the high authority referred to, have induced us to offer some observations in reply to the arguments urged by our contemporary, and which, in our opinion, seek to put a wrong construction on the Act.

The second section of the statute enacts "that this Act shall apply to every joint-stock company, as hereinafter defined, established in any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, except Scotland, or established in Scotland, and having an office or place of business in any other part of the United Kingdom for any commercial purpose," &c.

Our contemporary agrees that the true test of the applicability of the statute, or not, is the place where the company is established; but he contends that a company is not established, within the meaning of that Act, in any other place than that in which its works are to be performed.

We think that it is evident, from the general purview of the Act, that one of its chief objects was to prevent the formation of bubble and fraudulent companies, and to secure the public as much as possible from being deluded by deceitful prospectuses or the speculative schemes of rash and inconsiderate projectors. This, we think, is manifest from the various provisions respecting registry: we need only refer to those relating to the registry, before publication, of the name and objects of the company; of its projectors, together with a written consent on their part to become such; of its subscribers, the deed of settlement, the amount of capital, &c. &c. Although, no doubt, the object of an Act is to be collected from the Act itself, yet it is satisfactory for us to know that this view which we have taken is consistent with the parliamentary report on which the statute was founded. When we remember the evidence that was taken and annexed to that report, particularly as to the formation of the West Middlesex Assurance Company, and other speculations got up on fictitious capital, it is not difficult to see that that which the statute is apparently designed to reach was what the legislature really intended. But if we are right as to this, surely it must not the less be within the mischief intended to be provided against, that a company got up in this country is formed for the purpose of constructing a foreign railway. If the scheme is to be put afloat here—if the projectors are here to go through all the stages of concocting, publishing, and fabricating the concern—if here the public are to be called on to subscribe to the undertaking, and to form the association—very short indeed would the Act fall of one of its objects should it not apply to such a company because its works are to be carried on in a foreign country. What, however, is there in the word established to defeat the application of the Act? Our contemporary says that "the 2nd section obviously means by established something more or something other than the mere formation of a company without reference to the carrying into effect of its objects; because, with regard to companies established in Scotland, it requires (in order to bring them within the Act) that they should have an office or place of business in some other part of the United Kingdom. Now, an office or place of business implies a business carried on; and unless the Act includes in the word 'established' the idea of carrying on the business of the company, we should have this singular, and, as we should submit, somewhat absurd result of the words used—that, as to companies formed in England or Ireland, they are within the Act, whether their business is carried on in those countries or not; while, as to companies formed in Scotland, they will not be within the Act unless they intend to carry on their business in England or Ireland. The difference between the expressions used in reference to Scotland, and those used in reference to Great Britain and Ireland, seems rather to shew that it is the carrying on of business that the Act takes as the test of establishment."

We, however, submit, that the language of the 2nd section shews, if any thing, that the Act meant the very reverse of that which our contemporary would deduce. It shews, in our opinion, that the legislature considered that the place where a company had an office or place of business was not necessarily the place where it was established; in other words, that it might be established in one country, and have a place to carry on its business in another. If the place where a company intends to carry on its business is the place where the company is to be considered by that Act as established, where then was the necessity of saying in the second section, that the Act should apply to a company established in Scotland, when it had an office or place of business in this country? Such would have been needless, as it would have then fallen within the definition of a company established in this country, and so have required registering.

We cannot understand why, if the word "established" is to be interpreted according to its ordinary acceptation, a joint-stock company cannot be said to be established in one country, and to carry on the objects for which it was formed entirely in another. We should be surprised if we were told that the East-India Company, or the General Steam Navigation Company, were not established in England, because the place where the objects of the company were to be carried into effect was in the case of the former in India, and of the latter on the ocean.

Our contemporary appeals to the general clauses of the Act, as being inapplicable to a company having its property and works abroad; but we see in these clauses no reason therefore to exclude such company from the operation of the Act. When we said that one of the objects of the Act was to impose a check on bubble companies, and rash speculations, we did not mean that that was the only object the Act had in contemplation. The Act was also framed for the purpose of giving greater facility to joint-stock companies suing and being sued, to incorporate without destroying the individuality of its members, and generally to provide for the better regulation of these gigantic partnerships. It is for the purpose of effecting this object that the clauses so alluded to have reference, and therefore such clauses can afford no true test for determining that the statute was not meant to effect the other object we have suggested, and to apply to companies falling within such object.

It may be difficult to say precisely what is intended by the statute by a company established in this country. Each case must be determined by the evidence applicable to the same, but we should say that a company wholly formed and completed in this country is a company established here, within the meaning of the statute, although its works may be intended to be carried on entirely abroad; at all events, after the opinions of the eminent counsel before referred to, it would be advisable for such companies to register under, and otherwise comply with, the regulations of the statute.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.

It was stated in the city article of the Times of the 26th ult. that—

"The prospectus of the 'Great Indian Peninsular Railway Company' contains a statement, that 'the registrar of joint-stock companies is satisfied that the company is not with the operation of the 7th and 8th Victoria, c. 110, and therefore does not require to be registered.' The doubt which has existed as to the application of the statute in this case seems to have arisen from the fact that the railroad, though in India, does not necessarily come under the head of foreign railways, since it is formed with a distinct class of English shareholders, and a committee and funds separate from the foreign arrangements. It having been settled, however, that the Act does not apply, the limit of 5s. per share as a deposit is avoided, and 2*l*. 10s. is expressed in the prospectus."

This announcement created considerable sensation, as it was well known that the directors of the East-Indian Railway, acting on an opinion the reverse of the above, and under the impression that the company was in fact within the meaning of the Act, had, in compliance with its provisions, notwithstanding the prejudice the smallness of the deposit was calculated to engender, limited the deposits to 5s. per share. The subject, however, was of too much importance to be left in any doubt, and the directors instructed their solicitor, Mr. Freshfield, to place the following case before the learned counsel whose opinions we subjoin:—

"Queries submitted to the Solicitor-General, Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, and Sir John Bayley, with their opinion thereon.

"1. Whether that company is within the purview and provisions of the Act of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110.

"2. Whether the promoters of that company could legally have advertised or taken a deposit exceeding 10s. per cent. on their proposed capital.

"3. Whether the promoters of that company, or any of them, having advertised without registration or taken a deposit exceeding 10s. per cent. would have been liable to any and what legal consequences for so doing."

"We are clearly of opinion that the East-Indian Railway Company is within the purview and provisions of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. The general powers of that Act are by sec. 2 declared to apply to all joint-stock companies established in Great Britain (except Scotland, or established in Scotland with a place of business in Great Britain), for any commercial purpose or purpose of profit; and the true test whether such a company is within the provisions of the Act or not is, the place where it is established, and not the place where the works are to be performed. The proviso in the same section exempts out of the general provisions of the Act railway and other companies there specified, which require the authority of Parliament, for the purpose of making them subject to the special provisions thereinafter provided by the 9th and 23rd sections, but not for the purpose of exempting them altogether from the operation of the Act. This company, therefore, being established in Great Britain, and being a joint-stock company for the purpose of commerce and profit, is, in our opinion, directly within the provisions of this Act, even though it does not require the authority of Parliament.

"We, therefore, think that the promoters of the East-Indian Railway Company could not legally have advertised or taken a deposit exceeding 10s. per cent. on their proposed capital, and that if they did so, they would be liable to the penalties imposed by sections 5 and 24.

"FREDERICK THESIGER.
"FITZROY KELLY.
"JOHN BAYLEY.

"Westminster, June 28, 1845."

OPINION OF MR. LOFTUS WIGRAM.

"1. I think that the company is within the purview and provisions of the Act 7 & 8 Victoria, c. 110. It is a company established in Great Britain for purposes of profit, and appears to be not within any of the cases which are excepted from the Act.

"2. I think that the promoters of the company could not legally have advertised or have taken a deposit exceeding 10s. per cent. on the proposed capital. I think this is the result of the 7th and 23rd sections of the Act.

"3. The pecuniary penalties imposed by the Act do not seem to be applicable to the case in question (see sec. 24); but it would have been highly improper for the promoters to have disregarded the provisions of the Act. I apprehend the consequence of such a course would have been, that the receipt of the extra deposits would have been an illegal transaction, and that the promoters might have evaded their proper responsibility to the shareholders for the due application of the deposits—a state of circumstances which might be highly prejudicial to the company.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

UNITED LAW CLERKS' SOCIETY.

The following is the report of this society:—

THIRTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

In reporting to the patrons and members the proceedings of the society during the past year, it is considered unnecessary to give any detailed statement of its objects, the institution having been in existence thirteen years, and its character being now well known to the profession.

The expenditure in assisting members prevented by illness from attending to their employment has considerably increased during the year. This has arisen through an increased number of claims, and from the afflictions of some of these members having been unusually severe. To twenty-four members who required this assistance various sums have been paid, amounting altogether to 175*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* The society has since its institution paid to members thus afflicted 989*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*

The committee have the pleasure of announcing that no further claim upon the superannuation fund for permanent relief through infirmity, other than sickness, has occurred during the past year.

The disbursements on account of death shew a decrease of exactly one-half as compared with those of last year. The committee have to report the death of the wives of five members; each of these members received 25*l.* being the amount of the assurance then payable. The total sum expended in satisfying assurances alone has now amounted to 1,287*l.* 10*s.*

All the payments previously mentioned have been made out of the general or principal fund.

Out of the casual fund many gifts of money have been made to distressed law clerks, not members, and to their widows. The applications for these gifts are becoming more numerous. The committee have received sixty-five during the year, and to forty-one deserving applicants relief was promptly granted; the remaining cases were such as the committee, after careful investigation, could not entertain. The applicants assisted were clerks, and the widows of clerks, to barristers, solicitors, attorneys, and proctors. One clerk had been a practising attorney, and another applicant was the widow of a solicitor formerly in extensive practice. The committee have also, out of the same fund, granted several small loans to members requiring temporary pecuniary aid. These loans are repayable by instalments suitable to the circumstances of the borrower, and are free from interest or charge of any kind. These gifts and loans have required a disbursement of 366*l.* which, added to previous payments on the same accounts since the foundation of the institution, make the total money thus expended 1,465*l.* 9*s.*

In August last, a subscriber offered to convey to the use of the society a valuable plot of land, on which to erect almshouses for the aged members and their widows. This munificent offer was gratefully received and acknowledged; but on carefully considering the project it was found, with regret, that it could not at present be entertained, the members being fearful of retarding in any way the accumulation of that capital, upon the interest of which the payment of assurances and superannuation allowances must ultimately depend.

After satisfying all claims upon the General Fund, the committee have been able to make a considerable addition to the investments with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. At the audit in April 1844, the amount of the General Fund was 6,357*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* The receipts of the year have amounted to 1,555*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.* and the disbursements to 490*l.* 12*s.* leaving a surplus of 1,065*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.* which has been added to the invested capital. The latter, on the 20th May, 1844, was 6,449*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* and on the same day in this year, 7,410*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*

The condition of the casual fund is scarcely more favourable than at the same period last year. On the 1st April, 1844, the society had in hand the sum of 50*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.* The donations of the profession, and subscriptions of the members to this fund, have amounted in the course of the year to 564*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* and the disbursements have been 549*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* leaving a surplus of 66*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*

The committee announce with pleasure, that the society still continues to receive marked approval, both from its early supporters and from patrons, whose accession has been obtained since the last anniversary festival. Among the latter will be found the honourable societies of Staple-Inn, Clements'-Inn, and New-Inn.

A considerable increase during the year in the number of members, shews that the interest taken in the society by those for whose benefit it was formed remains unabated. On the 20th of May last there were 418 members, and their subscriptions amounted to 950*l.*

The rules are now undergoing their periodical revision, when such alterations as experience has shewn to be necessary, or are likely to conduce to the well-being of its members and the clerks of the profession generally, will be made. One important subject now under consideration is the practicability of granting to the widows of deceased members an annual allowance, in addition to the benefits to which they are already entitled.

The society (although in a comparatively infant state) has expended nearly 4,000*l.* in promoting its benevolent objects. A considerable portion of this sum has been received by law clerks and their families who have not contributed to its funds. Some were aged clerks who would not have required this assistance, had an institution like the present existed at an earlier period of their lives, when they might have availed themselves of its advantages. The claims upon the casual or benevolent funds are yearly increasing, and although the contributions of the members form a considerable sum, it is insufficient to meet all these demands. The committee respectfully hope, that it will not become necessary to limit in any way the sphere of the society's usefulness, but that, so long as its benevolent character is preserved and its affairs are prudently conducted, it may continue to receive the support of the profession.

THE BEVERLEY AND EAST-RIDING LAW SOCIETY.

At the half-yearly meeting of the above society, held in Beverley, on Tuesday, the 1st day of July, 1845, it was unanimously resolved, that it would be highly beneficial to the interests of the society that it should join the Provincial Law Societies Association, and that the secretary be accordingly requested to signify to the honorary secretary of the association the intention of this society to join it, and to take such other steps as shall be requisite for furthering that object.

TO READERS.

Some apology is due to our subscribers for the large space occupied by the advertisements to-day. We should have given another double number for the purpose of containing them, but we were, at the last moment, disappointed of the arrival of the large paper. Compensation, however, shall be made for the encroachment next week, when, without additional charge, a double number will be presented. Our readers may be assured that strict faith will be kept with them in this particular, and that whatever space beyond the outside leaves may from time to time be occupied by advertisements, shall b erepaid in gratis supplements.

THE SUSPICIOUS CLAUSE IN THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.

We are indebted to the active and able secretary to the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association for directing our attention to a construction of the clause relating to practitioners in the Insolvent Courts, which certainly removes much of the alarm which at the first glance its language was calculated to excite. The words are these:—

Application to Commissioners, &c. need not be made by counsel or attorney. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116.—And be it enacted, That in making application to any Commissioner or Court as aforesaid, or taking any proceedings under this Act, or under the Act hereinbefore referred to, or under the Act made in the fifth and sixth years of her Majesty's reign, intituled An Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, it shall not be requisite for any party, whether creditor or debtor, to employ either counsel or attorney or solicitor.

It is contended, and we are bound to say with sound legal argument, that these words do not empower other persons than attorneys or counsel to act as such, they merely permit a party to appear and conduct his own case in all its stages, without employing attorney or counsel.

Undoubtedly this is the plain import of the words. But their legal construction is not always identical with verbal import. The Courts will often give a meaning to words that as they are read have none, and the intention of the Legislature will often be presumed, though it may have failed to express such intention.

The language of the clause must either be read literally, or a meaning must be given to it which it does not carry upon its face. If construed literally, it is a nullity; for already it is the right of parties to appear and be heard in person, if they so please, and only when it is desired to employ an agent is it that, for the protection of the client himself, the law requires that he shall employ a person who has proved his fitness for the office of attorney. It needed no new enactment to preserve this right to the suitor, and if this be all intended by the clause, it is but worthless verbiage.

But if it should be deemed that the Legislature in its wisdom must have had a meaning, and the Courts should take upon themselves to give to the words the meaning supposed to be intended, can they avoid putting any other construction upon them than that they were intended to permit parties to appear and act by others than attorneys and counsel?

Therefore, although the construction suggested by the learned secretary has certainly removed some of the alarm which we, in common with others, had felt on an over-hasty perusal of the clause, still do we deem it of so questionable a character that it ought to be removed before the Bill is permitted to become law. To its erasure there can be no objection. If it be merely a re-enactment of an existing right—to wit, that of parties to appear in person—it is a useless incumbrance, and ought to be struck out. If, on the other hand, any thing more than this be meant by it, that meaning must be at least intended to affect in some manner some existing privilege of Attorney or Counsel, or it would not be necessary thus expressly to name them. In either case the clause should be blotted out: if leaving the existing law unaltered, as being worthless—if changing it, as being in direct violation of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act.

But, unfortunately for our Profession, there is not in the entire House of Commons a man who will do for the lawyer what Mr. Wakley does for the medical profession, watch the progress of legislation, with intent to protect the interests with which he is necessarily so conversant, although our Profession is more concerned by a thousandfold in the doings of the Senate than are the physicians and surgeons. Until we have a representative of our own, we of the law must expect to see all other represented interests preferred to ours.

SHAM LAWYERS.

The following audacious circular has been distributed in Lewes, and advertised in the Sussex newspapers. Let the Law Societies look to

TIMOTHY TURNER,

Accountant, House Agent, Arbitrator, and a Deputy in General,

No. 30, Sun-street, Lewes,

Begs most respectfully to acknowledge the numerous and flattering solicitations of his friends, both in town and country, and desires to inform them, that notwithstanding it has been with much deliberation and the greatest reluctance that he has at length complied with their earnest request, they may fully depend upon that firmness and determination in a straightforward course (i. e.) consistent with truth and justice, which has ever characterized his conduct, and which has been made particularly public during his severe contest for the last eighteen months; and although his friends have so highly complimented him, by ascribing his triumphant victory to his knowledge of the law, and that ingenuity so peculiar to himself, yet, he begs to state, that while he would admit that "knowledge is power," nevertheless the grand basis of his victory was that justice, which is every man's right, and which he has, and ever will, pursue for his fellow-man, whether rich or poor. Thus, in this case, there was no doubt of his success, law and justice both being on his side, and which would have been much more conspicuous, had he been able at all times to have kept the sword out of the golden sheatl

T. T. begs also to acknowledge the correctness of the observations which have accompanied the request of his friends, particularly the following; viz. that many respectable tradesmen, and others, have been utterly ruined, and their families brought to pauperism, when difficulties have arisen, and their creditors plunged into excessive expenses and severely injured, through the mismanagement and extravagance of those who fain would be thought men of business; whereas, if some judicious, straightforward, economical individual had been called in, the man and his family might have been saved, and every creditor received his 20s. in the pound; and thus, with due care, all things brought about in a most pleasing manner, with a very little expense. So also as it regards disputes between parties—what anxiety and expense have occurred, oftentimes to the ruin of the innocent poor, merely for the want of some one who would take the "bull by the horns" and decide between right and wrong; which would often prove beneficial to an inconceivable extent. Moreover, as it respects the collecting of debts—here again have thousands been lavished away; in many instances the expenses far exceeding the debts themselves, and frequently happening to the industrious and deserving; while the most abandoned, and in some cases best able to pay, have received lenity to no purpose, and afterwards treated their creditors with the greatest impertinence; thus the tradesman might save himself much perplexity and time by putting all these backstanding debts into the hands of one who would act with discretion, firmness, and promptitude, shewing lenity where it is really needed, and severity where it is absolutely necessary.

So also with regard to their observation upon buying and selling property, the truth is obvious. Many persons are at a loss to know where to look for one upon whom they can rely, to carry out their wishes fully in these respects; but now they will have an opportunity to buy and sell to advantage, without being conspicuous themselves.

Many other points T. T. would willingly touch upon, seeing the attention of his friends has been thus directed in their kind solicitations, but the above will suffice. And while he would acknowledge, with sincere gratitude, their pressing and most flattering requisition; he would most conscientiously affirm, that they shall realize all that confidence which they may repose in him, and that every department of business shall have his best attention.

LAW TIMES EDITION OF IMPORTANT STATUTES.

The last edition of Mr. Cox's Registration of Electors Acts, incorporating the Reform Act and other Election Statutes, being very nearly exhausted, advantage has been taken of the opportunity to bring out a new edition (the fourth), which will contain notes of all the decisions of the Court of Common Pleas upon the Registration Appeals, with other additions and improvements, making it a complete manual of the Law and Practice of Registration. The work is now passing through the press, and will be published in about a fortnight. As soon as ready, it will be duly announced.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The Reports, which had fallen somewhat into arrear in consequence of the vast crowd of important decisions which have signalized the legal year now drawing to its conclusion, have been at length, by great exertion, brought down very nearly to the present time. During the last week the third number of the Registration Cases, with a supplement, completing Part I., has been issued, and thus, for four shillings, do the members obtain all the reports for the two registrations that have taken place since the passing of the Act, while their cost in either of the other series is 11s. The eighth number, completing the Second Part, of Cox's Criminal Law Cases, has also been issued, and thus, for eight shillings, do the members obtain a greater number of cases than in two numbers of Carrington & Kirwan and all the Crown cases in Moody, the cost of which together is at least 25s.

The thirteenth number of Real Property Cases, and the ninth number of Practice Cases in Law and Equity, will be published on Wednesday, and there are now in the press two more numbers of the latter and three of the former, together with Number 12 of Magistrates' Cases, which have been delayed, waiting for some judgments reserved in Easter Term, and only just delivered.

Thus it will be seen that no time is lost in bringing them out with all speed consistent with accuracy, which, in standard reports, is the primary requisite; the notes of cases in the Law Times serving all the purpose of rapid reporting—viz. information until a more formal report can be procured.

The following Forms for offices have been added to the list:—

Agreement for Lease of House, 3s. per doz.
Draft Lease of Houses, each sheet, 2s. per doz.
Common Covenants in Lease of House, each sheet, 2s. per doz.

A complete list of the Forms and other publications of the Society is now ready, and will be sent to any applicant.

THE CRITIC.

New Books

A Treatise on the Law of Contracts and Parties to Actions ex Contractu. by C. G. Addison, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Part I. London, 1845. O. Richards.

It is always with regret that we receive a new publication of worth during the busy season of the legal year that extends from April to the end of July.

This, however, is only the first part of Mr. Addison's treatise; and although for the reason indicated we shall be obliged to be very brief in our notice of it, another opportunity will offer for a more elaborate review when the work is before us in its entirety.

It may be thought by many that Mr. Addison's undertaking is a superfluous labour; that Chitty has already given to the Profession a book on the Law of Contracts, which supplies all their wants, as proved by the many editions through which it has passed with still increasing reputation. But Mr. Addison's is at once a more scientific and a more popular treatise than that of Chitty. The latter, as the reader will remember, is characterized by a remarkable slovenliness of workmanship, as if it had been written in haste, or, as is more likely, as if its compilation had been intrusted to pupils, the author supplying only a few memoranda here and there. Its first edition was in reality little more than a digested index of cases and statutes on the Law of Contracts not under seal. Few attempts were made to reduce the law thus diligently collected to a scientific form by the development of principles, and although subsequent editions have supplied some of these defects, still the general character of the work remains the same; it is not so much a treatise as a note-book: and, consequently, while very useful in the office for reference by the practitioner, it is an indifferent book for perusal by the student.

The aim of Mr. Addison is, we apprehend, to treat the subject in a more scientific manner than his predecessor, and to produce a work which, while it shall be an accessible authority for the man of business, shall also be intelligible to those unlearned in the law, and an intelligent teacher of the law "to those who are about to cross the threshold of legal science." And if a judgment may be formed from the part before us, in these objects he has been eminently successful.

The plan of the work is this:

The author commences with some preliminary observations on deeds and simple contracts generally. He then proceeds to treat of deeds, their requisites and attributes. From this he passes to simple contracts and the considerations necessary to support them, subdividing this subject into two sections, which review successively the nature of a simple contract, and what amounts to a valid consideration.

The next topic is the contract of sale, and its requisites in respect of authentication by writing, and then the authentication and establishment in law of contracts generally, 1st, by deed; 2nd, by writing signed by the party; 3rd, he reviews the nature and requisites of the written memorandum; 4th, the necessity of stamps on deeds, and simple contracts, and promises in writing.

The fifth chapter is devoted to the legal force and effect and the interpretation of deeds and simple contracts; the sixth, to the conditions precedent to the right of action ex contractu; and the seventh to covenants, and simple contracts, and promises created by implication of law, embracing the important and interesting subjects of implied covenants, implied promises, implied contracts of sale, and warranties and promises in respect of goods sold, and implied promises in respect of the various counts in assumpsit.

In the following chapter the author treats of the plaintiff in actions ex contractu, both on deeds and simple contracts, and then of the right of action in the case of principal and agent. The tenth chapter investigates the difficult subject of joint and separate rights of action ex contractu, including, of course, those of partners, and the law of survivorship. The next in order is the consideration of who should be the plaintiffs in such an action, where there is a change of interest by assignment, and by novation and subscription, by bankruptcy or insolvency, by marriage and by death, at which branch of the subject this first part closes.

We regret that we cannot find room for one of the many interesting and instructive passages we had marked for the purpose of shewing Mr. Addison's style of composition, which is sufficiently legal for lawyers to enjoy, without being too obscure for the laity. But we must reluctantly omit them just now, although we hope that the appearance of the succeeding parts at some more leisure season may enable us to perform this act of justice to the author, and at the same time to gratify our readers.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

MR. RAINY.

Reflection has strengthened the indignation we felt at the first perusal of the very gross insult offered by Mr. Rainy to the entire body of solicitors. Such sweeping charges of fraud preferred against the members of one profession by a member of another, who might be presumed by the public to be personally cognisant of the wrong-doing he denounces, cannot but feed the vulgar prejudices against lawyers, and produce unpleasing suspicions in the minds of clients against many a man of lofty integrity. Mr.

RAINY has no right to seek to procure employment for himself by thus sowing doubts between the solicitors and their clients. But the attempt will fail. The Profession he has insulted cannot patronize him; he must have made up his mind to lose them before he ventured thus to insult them. And we suspect he will find that clients will still, as now, continue to confide in their legal advisers for the management of a sale and the employment of the auctioneer, just as if he had never published his advertisement or his paragraph. Noblemen and gentlemen, who trust their solicitors with their title-deeds and their money, will yet trust them to select their auctioneers, assured, in spite of Mr. RAINY's asseverations, that in both of these parties they will find as much honour and honesty, and their interests as well protected, as if they had dismissed their attorney, and placed themselves in the hands of Mr. RAINY alone. Again we deny the frauds charged against the solicitors, and call upon Mr. RAINY for the proof.

THE NEW AUCTION LAWS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—It is really necessary that some notice should be taken of the working of the new auction laws. There can be no doubt th t the legislature, in framing the Act, had the interest of the community solely at heart; but it is equally obvious that Parliament cannot form any positive idea of the working of such a law, and therefore should be assisted by those who have an opportunity of observing the practical results.

I beg to give you my thoughts on the subject, accompanied by some important facts, to be inserted in your next publication, or used in any other way you please.

An auction is sometimes the only mode that can be adopted for the disposal of property; for instance, under wills, assignments to creditors, execution, distraint, and various like circu nst nces; and it is undoubtedly the best mode of disposing peremptorily of every description of property, if such auction be conducted fairly; but, on the contrary, a dishonest auctioneer may make great gains out of estates intrusted to him, and therefore there should be some check, some mode of securing respectable persons to act in so responsible and confidential a capacity.

A strong reason why auctioneers should be respectable may be inferred from a recent case brought before Mr. Alderman Farebrother, reported in the Times, the substance of which is briefly as follows:—

A man in difficulties had his goods seized by a sheriff, and, as usual, they were to be sold by auction. Amongst the articles was a diamond ring of some worth; the defendant (for so we may call him) had a brother who was desirous of purchasing the ring as a family relic, and appointed an agent to bid for it, shewing him the lot as marked in a catalogue by the auctioneer. It was given in evidence before the worthy alderman that a spurious article was submitted as the bonâ fide one, and of course bought by the agent appointed, upon which the doubly-injured parties applied to the magistrate.

Now, suppose no one branch of the family had been desirous or able to purchase the ring, the rubbish substituted would have fetched little, as in fact it was worth nothing, then such a disgraceful fraud upon the poor man and his creditors would not have been discovered. I dare say you are aware of the fact that when goods are seized under a writ of execution, the auctioneer is chosen by the sheriff's officer, and not by the plaintiff or defendant, and I am convinced that the very same tricks are played even when a poor wretch's last articles of furniture and clothing have been wrung from him, and to whom it is all-important that the utmost value should be obtained, and all to satisfy the cupidity of Mr. Sheriff's Officer and Mr. Auctioneer.

But there is an auctioneer of another class who should be properly introduced to the public. Sales are advertised by this worthy—(I put it in the singular number, and wish it were so)—sales are advertised by this schemer as, "Mr. ——— is honoured with instructions from the executors of ———, esq. deceased," when ———, esq. never existed; and, in fact, the effects might be traced from the broker's shop of the auctioneer, as he is permitted to style himself, and might further be traced to the garret in Moorfields where they were manufactured by a poor miserable man, assisted by his wretched wife and starved children, in the worst and cheapest manner in order to gain a trifling sum out of the low price given that he may earn subsistence.

You must not suppose that I wish to advocate the old system. On the contrary, the auction duty fell the heaviest on those who were least able to pay—as, the widow or family of a man in very moderate circumstances; a small tradesman dying and leaving stock in trade, which must necessarily be realized; assignees for benefit of creditors wishing to avoid the cost of bankruptcy proceedings; while many landowners and capitalists avoided the payment of auction duty by submitting their property to auction, buying in, and selling privately afterwards; but I am anxious to shew how desirable it is that some means should be adopted to put an end to the mock auctions now so conveniently and profitably carried on under the new law, and if possible to render the profession more difficult of access to persons of no character.

Under the old law, auctioneers were obliged to find sureties for payment of the duty, and that to a certain extent kept out disreputable persons; but now, a payment only of ten pounds empowers a man to act as an auctioneer, whether competent or not, and without regard to his character. It may be said that the evil will cure itself; that dishonest auctioneers will be found out, and will not be employed again. That very likely will be the case; but vendors are not the only persons defrauded; the same auctioneers have no employer, they sell their own property under false representations; the public are the sufferers; and as it is difficult for persons to detect the imposition, it will be continued until the public become thoroughly disgusted with auction sales, and then what will be the consequence? Purchasers will be afraid to attend an auction. The linen-draper's mode of tender must be adopted for the sale of effects, and that will open a door for worse roguery still.

For all this evil I am convinced a remedy may be found.

As the public cannot have control over the auctioneer, and further, as I have attempted to shew, auctioneers are employed in cases where neither the vendor nor the public have power to check them, some one should be taken by the Legislature to exclude disreputable persons. Or, perhaps, it might be practicable for auctioneers to form a society, similar to the Law Society, for the prosecution of fraudulent auctioneers: this I merely throw out as a suggestion.

But here allow me to say that I think Mr. Rainy attacks the wrong party when he accuses solicitors of corruption. I feel convinced that some auctioneers are so hungry for business that they have been induced to offer bribes to solicitors; but, of course, then it remains for the solicitor to take to himself or give his client the benefit of it, according to his sense of honour; and, from what I know of the Profession, I have little doubt that the client has generally the full benefit of any reduction in commission made by the touting auctioneer.

CUSTOM-HOUSE SALES.—A question having been raised respecting the officers of the revenue assuming the duties of an auctioneer at the sales by auction at the various ports throughout the kingdom, at stated periods, of goods of various kinds which have been wrested from smugglers, or seized in consequence of some informality with regard to their importation and entry, or for being undervalued or otherwise, and which, as respects the port of London, took place once a quarter at the Commercial Sale-rooms, Mincing-lane, as to whether such officers should be required to take out licenses to enable them to perform the duties required of them in that capacity, the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury have made a communication to the Board of Excise, which has been transmitted to the collectors and comptrollers of Customs throughout the kingdom, for their information and government,—that they do not think it expedient that the officers employed in conducting sales by auction, under the directions of the Commissioners of Customs, should be required to take out auction licenses for such purpose.

Re FORSYTHE, a Bankrupt.

Costs of petitioning creditor where assets insufficient—Payments to Secretary of Bankrupts and Accountant-General under 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56.

Faber applied for an order that the Secretary of Bankrupts and the Accountant-General should be directed to refund the sums of 10*l*. and 20*l*. respectively paid under the 45th and 46th sections of the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, and which were thereby directed to be paid "out of the first moneys that shall come to the hands" of the official assignee. By the 14th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, the assignees were directed to reimburse the petitioning creditor his costs "out of the first money that shall be got in under the commission." The whole of the estate of the bankrupt had been seized under an execution, which had been contested by the assignees, but finally held to be valid. The petitioning creditor's costs had therefore remained unpaid, and the present application was made to enable the assignees to pay those costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I cannot order the sums paid under the Act of 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, to be refunded. There is no such power granted by the Act. Application refused.

Re ———, a Bankrupt.

Fiat annulled—Refunding fees paid under Act of 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56.

Wright applied that the two sums of 10*l*. and 20*l*. paid under the Act of 1 & 4 Wm. 2, c. 56, ss. 45, 46, in this bankruptcy should be repaid. There were no assets got in under the bankruptcy, and both sums had been paid by the petitioning creditor out of his own funds. Subsequently the fiat had been annulled, and the affairs agreed to be wound up under a trust deed. The money differed from the case of Forsythe (the preceding case) in this material particular, that money paid was not the money of the bankrupt, but of the petitioning creditor. There had never been any estate in the hands of the assignees, and the bankruptcy was now at an end.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Under such circumstances, I think there can be no objection to order the fees to be refunded. Order made.

Re BARIATINSKY, a Lunatic.

Interim committee of the person—Reference to the commissioner to appoint permanent committee—Delay by the interim committee in acting upon suggestions made by the Lord Chancellor—Practice in lunacy.

Walpole supported a petition by Lord Sherborne and Miss Dutton, the interim committee of the person of the lunatic, for leave to pay into court two sums of money which had been found to be the property of the lunatic, and also to deposit with the Accountant-General, or some other proper officer of the court, a case of pearls of the value of 2,577*l*. also found to be part of the lunatic's estate.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What has been done to carry out the suggestions I made as to the mode of treatment pursued towards this lady? It would seem, from what I understand, that matters remain just as they were.

Walpole.—A proposition has been lately brought into the commissioner's office, which is now under consideration, and will soon come before the Lord Chancellor.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What is the nature of that proposition?

Walford, for the next of kin, stated he had not seen the proposal, but he had been informed that it related only to the question of maintenance.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—That does not meet the view I took of the case. If there is any improper delay in carrying out my suggestions, the next of kin have the remedy in their own hands. Lord Sherborne and Miss Dutton had merely been appointed interim committee of the person, and a petition might now be presented by the next of kin for the appointment of a permanent committee.

The order for payment into court, &c. was then made.

On a subsequent day, Stuart, for the next of kin, asked that a petition which they had presented for the appointment of a permanent committee might be answered immediately, and an early day appointed for hearing it, to which his lordship acceded.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

TURQUAND v. KNIGHT.

Fraudulent assignment—Liability of trustee to costs—Stat. 2 Vict. c. 29.

Where there has been a fraudulent conveyance, the trustee of such conveyance must pay his own costs, notwithstanding he may have been ignorant of the fraud at the time of the conveyance, and afterwards gave notice of it to the parties interested, he being a party to the deed itself which stated the receipt of the trust-money by him, and also the payment of it by him, when in reality no money ever passed in the transaction at all, and of which he must be presumed to have been aware.

By a certain indenture, bearing date the 20th day of March, 1840, John Chamberlain, in consideration of 400*l*. alleged to have been paid by one John Knight, assigned certain leasehold property to the said J. Knight. By another indenture, bearing date the day following, after reciting that the sum of 400*l*. mentioned in the former deed was not the proper money of John Knight, but of Elizabeth Chamberlain, wife of the said John Chamberlain, and part of her estate limited to her separate use, John Knight thereby declared that he would stand possessed of the said leasehold estates upon certain trusts therein mentioned, for the benefit of Elizabeth Chamberlain and her children. In the month of April, 1840, John Chamberlain went over to Australia; and in May 1840, a fiat having issued against him, he was declared a bankrupt, and the assignees filed the present bill against John Knight and Mrs. Chamberlain, to have the above-mentioned indentures declared fraudulent and void. The Court had accordingly declared them to be so, and a question now arose as to the defendant Knight's costs. In his answer J. Knight stated that he was ignorant of Chamberlain's insolvency at the time when he was called upon to execute the two indentures, and that he executed them at the request of Chamberlain, whose sister he had married. He admitted that he never had in his possession or paid the sum of 400*l*. the consideration-money mentioned in those instruments. He stated, however, that as soon as he had received information of Chamberlain's misconduct he had given notice to the assignees of the existence of these indentures, and the circumstances under which he was called upon to execute them; and it was admitted by the plaintiffs that he had given them information and assistance in the matter. There was a clause in each of the instruments that Knight had paid the 400*l*. to Chamberlain, and in the latter deed that Knight had received it from Mrs. Chamberlain.

Stuart and Piggott, for the plaintiffs, under the authority of Townsend v. Westacott (2 Bea. 340), contended that the conduct of Knight had been such as would totally prevent the Court from allowing him his costs.

Bethell and Oliver, for the defendant Knight, relied upon the admission on the other side, that he had given them all the information and assistance in his power, and that as against him the bill only prayed that he might assign the property and deliver up the deeds; and that the sole object of making him a party was to obtain a re-assignment of the property. (Norcutt v. Dodd, Cr. & Phill. 100.)

Hallett, for Mrs. Chamberlain.

Stuart, in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—It seems to me that the defendant, J. Knight, by acknowledging the receipt of the 400*l*. which he knew was quite false, has himself committed an act which has not only afforded a countenance to the fraud, but has made him a party to it. Now, had there been merely an assignment, and the question was whether or not he should re-assign, I should in such a case have come to the conclusion that he ought to have his costs, because the statute, 2 Vict. c. 29, renders the assignment void, and you have asked him to assign. If that had been all, and because you elect to consider him a trustee of an estate which he ought to assign, you should pay his costs. But when he goes out of his way, and is not merely a passive recipient of the property in question, but gives colour to the transaction by acknowledging the receipt of money, there appears to be such misconduct and impropriety in this trustee, that he ought to bear his own costs.

ROLLS COURT.

WESTENRA v. GREGORY.

Will—Construction—Accruing shares, how to be taken.

Whether an accrued share passes with the original share under the clause of accruer.

The plaintiff in this case was John Craven Westenra, a colonel in the army. On his marriage with Lady East, the widow of Sir John East, a marriage settlement was made, whereby certain property belonging to Lady East was settled so as to give her the absolute interest therein for life, and a power of disposition by will. This power she exercised by a will dated February 1837, whereby she gave her husband, Colonel Westenra, the interest of the money for life, or until he should marry again; and after his death or second marriage, she directed her trustees to divide the fund in equal shares among her four nieces—viz. Mrs. Bowler, Mrs. Woolley, Miss Emily Raitt (afterwards Mrs. Legh), and Miss Caroline Martha Raitt; and she declared that, "if any of my said nieces shall die before my said husband, J. C. Westenra, or before she or they has or have become entitled to her or their respective distributive share or shares of the said principal moneys, parliamentary or real securities, hereinbefore by me given to her or them, without leaving lawful issue of her or their bodies them surviving, then I give and bequeath the part or share, parts or shares, of her or them so dying without issue, to such of my said nieces as shall then be surviving, to be equally divided between them, at such time or times as her or their original share shall become payable; and if there shall be only one of my said nieces so surviving as aforesaid, then I give and bequeath the whole of the principal moneys, parliamentary or real securities, to such niece, her executors, &c."

After the testatrix's decease, Colonel Westenra married a second time, and thereupon the fund became divisible among the four nieces of the testatrix. Mrs. Woolley having died before the testatrix, without issue, her share went over to the other three by the express words of the will; and Mrs. Legh having died, without issue, after the testatrix, and before the period of distribution, her original share passed to the remaining two; but there was some doubt as to whether her accrued interest in the share of Mrs. Woolley should also pass, or go to her personal representative. To determine that question the present bill was filed.

Kindersley, for the plaintiff.

Turner (with him Rogers), for Mrs. Bowler.—There is no doubt as to the share of Mrs. Woolley passing to the other three; but I contend also that, on the death of Mrs. Legh, her share, as well original as accrued, passed to the remaining two. The fund is treated as an aggregate fund, and the whole was to go over to the survivor, if there should be but one, which could not be the case unless the accrued shares should also pass as well as the original. (Sillick v. Booth, 1 You. & Coll. C. C. 121; Pain v. Benson, 3 Atk. 78; Worlidge v. Churchill, 3 Bro. C. C. 465.) The words "part or share, parts or shares," included all they took, both original and accrued.

H. Stevens, for Caroline Martha Raitt, cited Eyre v. Marsden (2 Kee. 564); 2 Jarman on Wills, 622, and the cases there cited.

G. L. Russell, for Mr. Legh, the husband and representative of Mrs. Legh.—There is no lapse of Mrs. Woolley's share, because the express words of the will apply in this as well as in Mrs. Legh's case. But there are no express words which give over the original as well as the accrued shares of Mrs. Legh upon her decease, the words "part or parts," &c. applying only to the original shares. The word "whole," however, in the last clause, relating to a single survivor, does seem to favour the passing of accrued shares.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I cannot construe it in any other way. Both original and accrued shares pass to the two surviving nieces.

April 10 and 23, and June 30.

LETHBRIDGE v. CHETWODE.

Non-performance of trusts—Making good to a trust-fund the amount of dividends required by a settlement thereof to be accumulated on a certain event.

The object of the proceedings in this case was to set right certain improper dealings with a trust-fund in respect of which the trustees had not received the sums they were entitled to by their trust. By a marriage settlement made on the marriage of Miss Ludford with the Rev. Francis Bickley Astley, certain property was vested in trustees (of whom Sir Thomas Lethbridge, the plaintiff, is the survivor), in trust for the husband and wife, and their children, as they should appoint, &c. Part of it [illegible] 5,000*l.* [illegible] by Mr. Astley's father; but there was a proviso, that if Mr. Astley should be presented to the living of Everley, he should cease to receive the dividends thereof, and the trustees should thereafter add them to the trust-fund by way of accumulation, for the benefit of the children. Mr. Astley was appointed to the living in 1830, but continued to receive the dividends, having effected two policies of insurance on his life amounting to a considerable sum, which he appropriated to the benefit of his children, and in [illegible] thereof applied the dividends, as he conceived he might, to his own use. A loan had been declared on the policies, but he had not applied it to the reduction of the premiums. The 5,000*l.* was only paid to the trustees of the settlement in 18[illegible] by Mr. Astley's father's executors, though he had received interest all along. Under these circumstances, the question was, how the amount due should be made good to the trust-fund, without depriving Mr. Astley of too large a portion of his income. It was asked that new trustees should be appointed, that the fund should be made good, &c. A petition was also presented, praying that Mr. Astley should be repaid a certain sum advanced to buy one of the sons a commission, &c.

Turner and [illegible], for the petition.

Cooper, for the defendants.

It was ultimately arranged that Mr. Astley should assign a certain [illegible] sum, and that of the seven children of the marriage, five who were of age should charge their shares. [illegible]

Patent—Injunction—Action at law.

A trial at law to an [illegible] the plaintiff [illegible] the defendant [illegible] the party [illegible] him on [illegible] a second trial [illegible] who is [illegible] the patent [illegible] the extent of [illegible] his [illegible] ing its [illegible]

Neither will the [illegible] be put upon [illegible] of [illegible] the patent, the pl[illegible] his principal defence against [illegible] an injunction to restrain him from making or selling the machine [illegible] the infringement [illegible] of the invalidity of the patent, because of the [illegible] on the same principle.

An account ordered [illegible] by the defendant, instead of an injunction, [illegible] to apply.

This was a motion for an injunction to restrain the defendants, Messrs. Tuxford and Co., from making or selling a machine for rolling land and crushing clods, which it was [illegible] was constructed on the same principle as a like [illegible] for which the plaintiff had taken out a patent in September, 1841. The patented machine consisted of a number of wheels revolving side by side on a [illegible] axle, but separate and independent of each other. On the outer surface of the wheels there were teeth fixed, not in the direction of the radius, but inclined to it, so as, in revolving, to come down [illegible] on the clods of earth. There were also side teeth on the wheels, which had the effect of [illegible] crushing clods coming between the wheels. The defendant's machine was also constructed with wheels moving on the same axle, but they were bound together in bundles of four, six, &c., and there were no side teeth. The plaintiff brought an action [illegible] of his patent, and applied for the injunction accordingly. He had also brought an action at [illegible] on the 31st of August, 1841, against one G[illegible] for an infringement of the patent, and was successful on all the pleas put in by him; and Mr. Justice Cresswell, before whom the case was tried, certified that the question of the validity of the patent came before him on the merits, a [illegible] a new trial was afterwards refused; and an injunction was then granted in this court. Other infringements were also committed by several other persons, but in every case they yielded to the plaintiff's demand before [illegible] action. The plaintiff therefore considered himself confirmed in the enjoyment of his patent.

Kindersley (with him [illegible]) contended that the instruments were exactly the same in principle, the only difference being that in place of one wheel there were several [illegible] together; but the bundles [illegible] independently of each other [illegible] single wheels in the other [illegible] the [illegible] and the plaintiff [illegible] of it undisturbed.

[illegible] (with [illegible] of Turner) contended that the defendant's machine was not an infringement of the plaintiff's patent, and even if it were, the patent was bad, as other machines had been constructed on the same principle long before. The specification did not claim any single part—either the side teeth, the rings, or wheels rolling on the same axle but separate and independent, or any of the other parts, for they had all been in use before, and therefore could not per se be patented; but it claimed the combination of all the parts. Now nothing can be an infringement which affects only the parts and not the combination, as is evident from the case of Crane v. Price (Webst. Pat. Cas. 408). There the use of the hot blast and of anthracite coal was known before, but only separately; and the patent being for the combination, persons, after it was taken, were nevertheless at liberty to use the parts separately as before. But even if it be an infringement, the patent is bad, as there were machines, constructed on the same principle as that in question, in use long before. A fluted roller was constructed by the defendants in [illegible], which was the same, if the longitudinal [illegible] cut into teeth. Another, made in July 1841, was a wooden cylinder, with independent serrated rings, which were fastened by two iron bars or rods running along the surface of the cylinder. These rods being broken, were afterwards disused, and the machine was then the same as the plaintiff's.

Kindersley, in reply.—[The MASTER of the ROLLS intimated that there must be a trial at law; and the question was as to an injunction, or an account being kept by the defendants in the meantime. The latter was agreed to.] Then, as to the form of the action, as they say the patent is bad, let them bring a scire [illegible] and try that question. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—They cannot be obliged to establish your right against the Crown; it can be of no use to them.] Well, then, let there be a restriction put upon the subject-matter of trial. We have a former adjudication on the validity of the patent, and it is useless to try that again.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—They cannot be bound by what took place in a case in which they were not parties.

It was then agreed that the trial should take place in [illegible].

Thursday, July 3.

THOMAS [illegible] GWYNNE.

P[illegible] applied again in this case, reported 5 T. 327, and produced an affidavit that the [illegible] order was shewn when a true copy was served on the infant; and an attachment was now granted.

Re WALTERS.

Taxation of solicitor's bill—Parliamentary agent's charges—Omissions—Addition to—[illegible] Geo. 4, c. 64.

After the delivery of his bill, a solicitor may supply an omission or correct a mistake, but there must be clear and unequivocal proof that it [illegible] mistake, it will not do to [illegible] on taxation [illegible] about to be [illegible] one-sixth, then [illegible] to apply to add to [illegible]

A solicitor who can, [illegible] some instances [illegible] the parliamentary agent's fee instead [illegible] his [illegible] bill [illegible]

Mistakes and omissions [illegible] solicitor's bill as [illegible] parliamentary agent's [illegible] must be clearly p[illegible] to be such before any [illegible] can be allowed.

Quære, whether the petitioner [illegible] to [illegible] &c. ought not to [illegible] the particulars intended to be added.

This was an application by Mr. Walters, a solicitor, for leave to deliver another bill of costs, for the purpose of supplying omissions in and making additional charges to his bill of costs already delivered. Mr. Walters had been employed by the corporation of Swansea in conducting a suit, and also in obtaining an Act of Parliament for local purposes. In obtaining the Act he employed Messrs. Gregory and Faulkner as his parliamentary agents, and, on the completion of the business, they delivered their bill of costs, amounting to about 1,200*l.* Mr. Walters then delivered to the corporation two bills of costs: one incurred in conducting the suit, amounting to 125*l.* and the other in obtaining the Act, amounting to [illegible] 80*l.* inclusive of the parliamentary agents' charges. An order was obtained on the [illegible] of October last for taxing the first bill, and a like order on the 21st of the same month for taxing the second bill; and they were referred to the Taxing Master on the 2nd of November. The taxation had proceeded before the Master so far as that his certificate only was wanted to complete it, when the present petition was presented with reference to the bill of 2,280*l.* This consisted of two parts; one, Walters's own charges, and the other, the parliamentary agents', in both of which however, omissions were sought to be supplied, and in both, it was said, there were undercharges. The agents' charges were, it was said, by mistake less in several instances than those allowed by the parliamentary scheme under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 64, and in some instances there were omissions. For example, 2*l.* 2*s.* is the charge for attendance at the houses of Parliament, and less was charged, and 5*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* a retainer to Mr. Austin, and 10*l.* 10*s.* to the queen's printer, were omitted. As to Mr. Walters's own part of the bill, he had only charged as solicitor, and he now desired to add parliamentary agent's fees in cases where he had himself acted. The bills had been taxed so as to have one-sixth taken off, when, by the addition of an item which the Taxing Master allowed, the scale was turned the other way; but the item in question is disputed.

Turner (with him Selwyn), for the petition.—Mr. Walters had delivered the bills without charging sums which he was entitled to charge by the Act of Parliament. The Act is binding on all, and Mr. Walters has no choice; he has omitted sums actually out of pocket, and other sums are less than those to which he is entitled. This appears upon affidavits.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Was he so entitled when he delivered the bills? It is material to know that the business has been done; that the right to charge was not known; that if he had known it, he would have insisted on his right, and that if he had made the charge, he believed it would have been allowed. I ought to be satisfied he really paid the money, and did the thing he says; I am not sure, also, whether I ought not to have the additional particulars intended to be added.

Kindersley, for the corporation of Swansea.—I do not contend that a clear mistake or omission may not form the subject of relief, but that is not the case here. The larger bill consists of two parts, Mr. Walters's own and his agents', and there are complaints of omissions on his own part principally, but also on his agents'. The scale of charges laid down by the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 64, only applies to parliamentary agents for services in that capacity; where the same person is solicitor and parliamentary agent, he may charge reasonable fees as solicitor. The Act does not apply to Walters's fees, only to the parliamentary agents'. If he has omitted by mistake an item of disbursement, of course it may be supplied; but to charge as a solicitor, and then claim as a parliamentary agent, is a different thing. With the exception of one or two items of omission, all the rest of his part of the bill are less charges than those of a parliamentary agent's, which he could not charge. The case of Loveridge v. Botham (1 Bos. & Pull. 49) is conclusive against him; that delivery is conclusive against an increase of, and a very strong presumption against any addition to, the items. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The question is, do they come in under the parliamentary scale; you say no, because Walters is not a parliamentary agent. The case was put to me by the other side as if the charges were less than those allowed by the Act; you say they are not so, only in Walters's own charges, which are not parliamentary agent's charges.] That is so. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Well, then, the case is clear as to Walters. Now as to the agents' charges.] As to the charge for attendance, the clerk of the parliament states that the fee varies with the time, and the reason of a particular sum being put down in the scale is to shew the average charge; and so of the others. But does Mr. Walters say he paid Messrs. Gregory and Faulkner more? No; he suggests, indeed, that both he and they petition. But the fact is, he comes and says, let me charge more than I paid the parliamentary agents, and that too six months after taxation is ordered, and when the Taxing Master's certificate is ready. The truth is, he fears that one-sixth may be ultimately taxed off (for one item is in dispute), and he wants to increase the items so as to turn the scale. His claim ought to be for money he is liable to pay, or which he has paid. [The MASTER of the ROLLS. Suppose Walters was to have five shillings for the agents' ten shillings.] That would be an arrangement between the parliamentary agent and the solicitor. (Deaves MS. June 1, 1774.) If the agent says I have charged ten shillings when I ought to have charged twenty shillings, and if the bill so delivered is taxed, and a settlement is made on that footing with the client, the parliamentary agent could have no relief against Walters; there is therefore no difficulty on that ground. If the retainer to Mr. Austin, and the payment to the Queen's printer, were really omitted by mistake, of course they must be set right; but there must be very satisfactory evidence of the omission.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Mr. Turner, if you have not evidence as to that now, you must have time to produce it; but, on the other hand, if you made small charges not by mistake or omission, you cannot turn round now and say I will have all the law gives me. What I collect as to Mr. Walters's own charges is, that a solicitor's bill of costs has been delivered, and has been referred for taxation, and that it contains a parliamentary agent's bill; that there is a parliamentary regulation which applies to the latter; but that you have no right to charge for business done by the solicitor on the parliamentary scheme.

Turner said that Walters, though he had employed Gregory and Faulkner as his agents, sometimes acted as parliamentary agent himself, and therefore wished to charge in such [illegible]. It is a joint concern between him and the agents, for their affidavits respecting the matter are joint.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The Act does not say that, besides solicitor's fees, Mr. Walters is entitled to charge fees as a parliamentary agent. Let the petition stand over, that the petitioner may satisfy the Court, if he can, as to the omissions, &c. complained of in the agents' bill, the petitioner to pay the costs of the petition.

POTTS v. DUTTON.

Practice—Taxation—Charge for engrossing deed—Sale not completed.

A solicitor who, being employed to sell an estate, has, without the title-deeds, satisfied an intended purchaser (whose contract was only verbal) as to the title, and who, not being in possession of the title-deeds, has nevertheless got the conveyance engrossed, will not, upon the purchase going off for want of the production of the deeds, be allowed the expense of engrossing.

Thomas Howard Greville devised certain premises to Joseph Dutton, upon trust for sale; and in 1839 the premises were put up for sale accordingly, by Mr. Gaunt, Dutton's solicitor, but were not sold. The plaintiff, Mr. Potts, however, and the other persons beneficially interested, being desirous that a sale should take place, Thomas Scholefield, acting as the solicitor of Dutton, on the 15th May, 1839, entered into a verbal agreement with a Mr. Tindall for the sale to him of the premises, at the price of 650*l.*; and it was thereby also stipulated that Scholefield should prepare the conveyance, and that the vendors should pay the whole of the expenses of the sale, and of the conveyance to the purchaser. While these proceedings were going on, Mrs. Dutton got the title-deeds into her hands, and gave them to Gaunt, the former solicitor of Dutton, who, upon being applied to, refused to part with them, alleging that he had a lien on them for a large sum due to him by Dutton. Scholefield, however, satisfied the purchaser as to the goodness of the title without the title-deeds; and, in the hope of being able to obtain the deeds through the influence of the cestui que trusts, or otherwise, before the completion of the purchase, he prepared the draft conveyance, and submitted it to Mr. Gregory, the solicitor for the purchaser, by whom it was approved. The deed was then engrossed by Mr. Scholefield, and executed by Mr. Dutton; and a memorial for registration was also prepared by the former, the premises being in the county of York. Gaunt, however, having declined to give up the deeds, Mr. Tindall refused to complete, and the sale ultimately went off; and on a resale the premises only produced the sum of 400*l.* Upon the proposed conveyance, Scholefield was asked to furnish his account, and upon the bill being delivered, the common order to tax it was obtained by Potts and the other parties interested; but there being special circumstances in the [illegible] was found necessary to discharge that order [illegible] present a special petition. Scholefield had three distinct charges against Dutton: first, a bill of costs in the cause of Potts v. Dutton, second, a bill of costs in respect of the trust estate; and third, charges to a large amount, distinct from both of these, against Dutton himself personally. This state of things gave rise to a discussion as to how much was to come into the bill for taxation. Mr. Scholefield claimed to be entitled to payment of his whole demand in every shape against Dutton; but, on the other side, it was proposed to pay him all costs in the suit, and as regarded the trust estate of the testator. This not being acceded to, and Dutton, the trustee, having become insolvent, the cestui que trusts presented a petition praying that Scholefield be ordered to deliver his bill of costs as solicitor in the cause, or as relating to the trust estate, and, upon payment of what should be found due, that he should be ordered to deliver up the deed of conveyance of the trust estate, &c.; and on the 8th of November, 1844, he was ordered to deliver his bill, &c. and costs were reserved. The bill was accordingly delivered and referred to the Taxing Master, who made his report on the 30th of April, 1845, finding as therein mentioned, but disallowing an item of 18*l.* 10*s.* being the expenses of engrossing the conveyance and of the execution thereof. The cestui que trusts then presented their petition to confirm the Taxing Master's report, and Mr. Scholefield presented a cross petition, praying to be allowed the 18*l.* 10*s.* and to retain the conveyance till he was paid.

Turner, for the cross petition.—Mr. Scholefield, knowing that the purchaser was giving more than the value for the estate, and that he was under no obligation to carry out the contract, might reasonably think it his duty to take care to have every thing ready to complete the purchase the moment he got the deeds from Gaunt, which he expected he should be able to get, and so secure the advantage to the cestui que trusts. But the Taxing Master says he should not have engrossed the deed till the title-deeds were delivered by Gaunt; but was he to assume that Gaunt would refuse them, he having no lien upon them, and being offered his bill of costs? The 18*l.* 10*s.* therefore, ought to be allowed. They say, also, we must deliver up the deed to them, but we think we ought to retain it till the charges in question be paid.

Kindersley (with him Montagu), for the cestui que trusts.—The contract for sale was not in the least binding on the purchaser, for it was verbal, and might of course have been repudiated at any time. It was therefore imprudent in Mr. Scholefield to engross the conveyance under the circumstances, he not even having the deeds in his possession. We are entitled to have the deed delivered up; mere cancellation will not do; it is a cloud upon the title as it is executed by Mr. Dutton.

Turner, in reply.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—There are two questions in this case; one raised on the petition of Mr. Scholefield, desiring to be allowed the sum of 18*l.* 10*s.* the expenses of engrossing and executing a deed of conveyance, and the other on the petition of the cestui que trusts of the will of the testator, desiring the Master's report to be confirmed, and the delivery up to them of the deed of conveyance engrossed by Mr. Scholefield and executed by Mr. Dutton, and also other papers. The case is certainly one of hard practice. Tindall being willing to give more than the value of the estate, and the title being made out, this extraordinary thing happens—Dutton's wife hands over the deeds to Gaunt, and he retains them, insisting he had a lien, though in reality he had none. Scholefield, however, thinking that the persons beneficially interested would be able to get back the deeds, and having an honest expectation that they would, went on to prepare and engross the conveyance; so that all that was wanted was the execution of it by the purchaser and the delivery to him of the title-deeds. If Scholefield thought he would be in a condition to deliver them, he was disappointed, and the sale went off. The question, then, is, whether, having so prepared the draft, and not having the title-deeds in his hands, he was to proceed to the further expense of getting the conveyance engrossed, or should have waited till he had the title-deeds in his possession. He was influenced by a zealous intention of having the deed ready, lest the benefit of the sale might be lost if the purchase could not be completed at the time; but had he a right so to engross it? It is hard practice to refuse him the charge, he being honest, and the sale being likely to be lost if the deed should not be ready. The Taxing Master said he exceeded his duty, and as the expense of engrossing, &c. turned out to be use- [illegible] as it [illegible] imprudent thing to do, he refused the [illegible]. I cannot say he was wrong, and therefore I dismiss the petition as to the allowance of that item. As to the order of course obtained by the cestui que trusts, which was discharged for irregularity, there must have been a petition of some sort, and a special petition was accordingly presented, on which an order was made, and the report in pursuance thereof we are now considering. There were three distinct charges by Scholefield against Dutton, and on the discussion as to how much should be brought under consideration on taxation, there was no difficulty on the part of the cestui que trusts as to paying the costs of the cause, and relating to the trust estate, not the subject of the suit. I cannot therefore refuse the costs of the original petition. The only thing else is the delivery of the deed. Dutton has executed it, and not delivered it; while, therefore, it remains with him or with Scholefield, it is a cloud on the title. It is said it may be cancelled, but I much doubt whether that would do. Well, then, shall Dutton, who did this from over zeal, be allowed to say he will not do away with the impediment created by the deed, unless all the costs be paid? I must order the delivery of the conveyance, on Scholefield being paid what may be found due to him.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

ABERDEEN v. GIBBS.

This case, which is reported ante, p. 191, was again heard, upon a motion to commit Mrs. Grimstead for contempt, in consequence of an alleged breach of the injunction, in continuing to prosecute the action against the plaintiff.

Russell and Renshaw, for the plaintiff.

Wigram and Trower, for Mrs. Grimstead, cited Clarke v. Imperial Gas-light Company (1 Younge, Exch. Ca. 580), and Montague v. Hill (4 Russ. 128).

Willcock, for the defendant Gibbs.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—How this matter would have stood if Mrs. Grimstead had alleged and established, or probably established, against the plaintiff in equity a case of collusion with Mr. Gibbs, or a case of delay, it is not necessary for me to say. No such case is made. In the absence of an allegation of any such collusion, and in the belief I entertain that an answer by Mr. Gibbs, of whatever weight, however little or however great, would be evidence at law receivable upon the trial of that action at law, I am of opinion that this trial must not yet take place so far as any party to this record is concerned. I am of opinion that I can do what appears to me right to this extent upon the notice of motion, however worded, as it stands.

The plaintiff alleging the answer of Gibbs to be insufficient, and undertaking to file exceptions to that answer, for insufficiency, and undertaking to prosecute those exceptions and to proceed to obtain a full answer from Gibbs with diligence, let the trial be stayed until further order; and let this motion stand over, with liberty for either party to apply.

My order is as against Mrs. Grimstead, if she is not already stayed, on which I say nothing.

BAUER v. MAULE.

Practice—Commission to examine witnesses abroad.

Where persons, not parties to the cause, claiming an interest in the subject-matter of a suit, obtained the Master's certificate to examine witnesses abroad, in support of their claim, without producing an affidavit, there being other affidavits in the Master's office sufficient to satisfy him of the propriety of granting the certificate, the certificate was held to be regular.

On an application for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, it is generally necessary to state the places where it is proposed to execute the commission.

This was an application to set aside a certificate given by the Master under the following circumstances. Inquiries having been directed to be made by the Master, certain persons, not parties in the cause, claimed an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, as next of kin to a deceased person. To establish their relationship, they applied to the Master for his certificate in order to obtain a commission to examine witnesses abroad, but produced no affidavit to support their application. There were, however, affidavits in the Master's office relating to other proceedings in the cause which were sufficient to satisfy the Master of the propriety of granting the certificate. The certificate was therefore granted, and this motion was now made to set it aside.

Lee and Heathfield, in support of the motion, referred to the 17th and 51st orders of 1828, and the following cases: Bamford v. Bamford (2 Hare, 612); Coote v. Coote (1 Bro. Ch. Ca. 445); Mendizabel v. Machado (2 Russ. 540); and Meinertzhagen v. Davis, before the Vice-Chancellor of England.

Wray, for the defendant.

Lee, in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I am satisfied that it is within the proper functions of the Master, executing an inquiry into a matter of fact in his office, to grant a certificate for a commission to examine witnesses abroad. I am equally satisfied that the Master ought not to grant such a certificate as a matter of course, or without some ground laid, sufficient, or which ought to be deemed sufficient, according to the course of the Court. I am of opinion that the Master in this case has granted the certificate upon sufficient grounds before him, according to the course of the Court and the nature of the subject. Let that part of the notice of motion which seeks that the Master's certificate be set aside, be refused. The notice of motion, however, asks other things, and I think that in this case, if not in all other cases, at least in this, it is reasonable that the Court should be informed now, in this stage, of the place or places it is proposed that the commission should be executed, and that information not now being given, and the party who ought to give it, not being here, let further proceedings under the Master's certificate be stayed until further order, with liberty to apply.

PERROT v. NOVELLI.

Practice—Security for costs.

A plaintiff, who was a Frenchman, not a housekeeper in England, but who visited this country occasionally, and for temporary purposes only, and then resided at an inn or in lodgings, was, upon the application of the defendant, ordered to give security for costs.

The plaintiff in this case filed his bill on the 3rd of May, 1845, and therein described himself as residing at No. 15, Mornington-place, in the county of Middlesex, and as a native subject of the kingdom of France, where he generally resided. On the 31st of May inquiry was made at No. 15, Mornington-place, and information was there received that the plaintiff had given up his lodging there some weeks previously, and that he was then residing in France, where his general residence was Vanguard, near Paris. It appeared also by affidavit, that the plaintiff's visits to England were occasional only, and for temporary purposes; and that to the best of the deponent's belief, the plaintiff was not, nor had ever been, a housekeeper in England, but that, upon his visits to England, he resided at an inn or hotel, or in lodgings.

Russell and W. J. Milne, on behalf of the defendant, moved that the plaintiff should, under the circumstances, be ordered to give security for costs.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR made the order asked, or that the plaintiff should, with the defendant's consent, pay 100*l.* into the hands of the registrar as security for the costs.

HICKMAN v. HICKMAN.

Practice—Plea—Time for replying to a plea.

The bill in this case was filed on the 6th of March, 1845, and on the 16th of May a plea was filed by the defendant to the whole bill. The plaintiff was duly served with notice of the plea; but not having set the same down for argument, an application was now made on behalf of the defendant, that the plaintiff might be ordered to pay the costs of the plea and of the suit.

Faber, for the motion.

W. Holt, for the plaintiff, stated that it was his intention to reply to the plea; and as no time was limited for the replication, he was entitled to have his costs of this application.

The 23rd order of August 1841, and the 31st order of April 1828, were referred to.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that it appeared that no time is fixed for replying to a plea; but upon the plaintiff's undertaking to reply within a week, he should direct the motion to stand over and reserve the costs.

MIDDLETON v. POOLE.

Practice—Payment into court—Retainer.

Where an executor, a defendant in a creditor's suit, admitted that he had money of the testator's in his possession, but that he had retained it on account of a debt due to himself, and there was no constat of the existence of a debt of a higher order than the defendant's, the Court declined to order him to pay the sum into court.

This was a motion in a creditor's suit, instituted against the executor of the debtor, and was made for the purpose of obtaining an order upon the defendant to pay into court a sum of money admitted by his answer to be in his possession. The answer stated that a debt was due to the defendant from the testator, and that the sum in question (332*l.*) was retained by the defendant on account of that debt. It did not appear that there was any debt of a higher order than the defendant's.

W. M. James, for the motion, cited Tipping v. Power (1 Hare, 411).

Wigram and Lewin, for the defendant, cited Nunn v. Barlow (1 S. & Stu. 528).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR declined making the order, and directed that the motion should stand over. Costs reserved.

Thursday, May 8.

PLOMER v. M'DONOGH.

An order to amend a bill having been obtained by the plaintiff after an undertaking by him to speed the cause, was held to be irregular.

In this suit, the bill having been amended, the defendant answered the amended bill on the 18th of October, 1844. No further step having been taken by the plaintiff, the defendant, on the 21st of April, 1845, moved that the bill should be dismissed for want of prosecution, and the plaintiff thereupon gave the usual undertaking to speed. On the 25th of April, the plaintiff, upon special application to the Master, obtained an order for leave to amend the bill.

Wigram and Rogers, for the defendant, moved to discharge the order made by the Master.

Russell and Ellerton, for the plaintiff, cited 1 Smith's Chancery Practice, 434; 2 Daniell's Chancery Practice, 376; Darby v. Smale (1 Hare, 490); Daniel v. Austin (9 Sim. 18); and Smith v. Olver (3 M. & Cr. 16[illegible]).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—How this case would stand or might stand if it had appeared on the record in any shape or in any manner that a commission was not required, or would not be issued, I desire to be understood as giving no opinion. The case before me happens to contain this, that there is nothing on the record to shew that a commission was not required, or would not be issued. I am of opinion that, at least in the circumstances in which this case stands, without saying whether the omission is or is not material, an amendment, or order for amendment, is inconsistent with the previous order. The order of the 25th of April must be discharged. Defendant's costs to be costs in the cause.

BELCHER v. VARDON.

Leasehold property—Usury.

Where a sum of money is advanced which it is agreed shall be repaid by certain fixed annual instalments, extending over a certain term of years, each instalment being accompanied with interest due on the balance for the time being, the interest being paid by the rents of leasehold property, at the rate of eight per cent., the Court will consider such contract usurious and void, although the lender be liable to covenants contained in the lease, with the landlord of the property.

By an agreement made between the Marquis of Westminster and Mr. Cundy, the former, in consideration of the sums to be expended by Cundy in building upon the land therein described, agreed to grant leases for 99 years of the houses to be built upon the said land as they should be covered in, to Cundy or his nominees. Cundy subsequently mortgaged the land comprised in the agreement to Dodd, to secure the sum of 3,000*l.* and by the mortgage entered into various stipulations as to the leases to be granted by the marquis. Cundy being in want of further advances to proceed with the building, Dodd released the part of the property in dispute in this cause, and a correspondence between Cundy and the defendant Vardon took place, by which Vardon agreed to advance to Cundy 2,050*l.* and Cundy agreed "to pay Vardon rent at the rate of 8*l.* per cent. from the date of the advance, and to take a lease of the houses upon the usual conditions, or find Vardon a tenant subject to his approval; and also that he (Cundy) was to have the option of selling the houses, provided he repaid Vardon the amount advanced on the houses, and all rents due thereon to the day Vardon assigned the lease or leases to Cundy or his nominee." The houses having been sufficiently completed, Cundy on the 11th of May, 1843, wrote to the solicitors of the Marquis of Westminster a letter in the following terms: "Having covered in eight houses upon the marquis's ground in Burton-street and Minerva street, according to my agreement with the marquis I shall be glad for you to grant the lease of such houses to Mr. Thomas Vardon, of Chester-square, when required by him, to whom I have disposed of them at the rents agreed upon, viz. 2*l.* per house;" and to this letter the defendant Vardon wrote and signed the following postscript: "Please to prepare the above leases at your earliest convenience." The leases were accordingly prepared, and, as was alleged, executed by the marquis, but were not delivered to either of the parties. Vardon afterwards increased his advances to the sum of 2,400*l.* and to a judgment creditor of Cundy's for 1,000*l.*, Vardon on the 11th of October, 1843, wrote a letter stating that, "in consideration of his giving Cundy time to discharge his debt of 1,000*l.* he (Cundy) would give him security for 600*l.* part thereof, on No. 76, Chester square, and he (Vardon) thereby undertook to pay the sum of 500*l.* residue thereof, as soon as that sum should have been laid out by Mr. Cundy, upon eight houses in Burton-street and Minerva-street, the leases of which from the Marquis of Westminster were then in a course of preparation, and which houses he was then finishing; and in the event of the last-mentioned sum of 500*l.* not being expended between that time and Christmas, he (Vardon) thereby undertook to hold the said leases subject to his claim upon Cundy for 2,400*l.* and interest for advances made by him to Cundy to build the said houses, until the judgment creditor's demand should be satisfied;" and to this letter Cundy wrote and signed the following postscript: "I hereby approve of the above arrangement and undertaking, and agree to give effect thereto." The property alluded to in the foregoing letters was the "Burton-street property." The "Belgrave-street property" was the subject of an agreement between Vardon and Cundy, dated the 24th of November, 1841, whereby, after reciting two leases to Cundy for 70 years, and that it was intended to erect five houses on the land, it was agreed that Vardon should advance such sums to Cundy as should be mutually agreed upon upon the following conditions: that Cundy should assign to Vardon the two leases and the ground thereby demised, subject to the ground-rent and the covenant reserved and contained in the leases; that Cundy, or his nominees, if approved of by Vardon, his executors or administrators, should take underleases as soon as the houses or any of them should be covered in and completed, for the whole of the said terms wanting ten days, at a rent amounting to 8*l.* per cent. upon the sums which should be advanced by Vardon, such rents to commence from the respective periods at which the advances should be made, the rents to be payable quarterly, with powers of entry and distress. Upon this agreement 800*l.* was advanced by Vardon. Cundy having become bankrupt, his assignees filed this bill, praying that the transactions might be declared usurious and void, but offering to allow the defendant to prove against Cundy's estate for all sums justly due to him; but that if the transactions were considered as a purchase by Vardon, then that an account might be taken of all sums of money laid out on the premises, and an account of what was due to Cundy for his skill and labour employed in the erection of the houses, &c. On the part of the defendant it was alleged that he had purchased the property, &c.

Russell and Heberden, for the plaintiffs, cited Doe v. Chambers (4 Camp. 1); Doe v. Gooch (3 Barn. & Ald. 664); and Serirr v. Greenway (19 Ves. 413).

Anderdon, Wigram, and Fooks, for the defendant, cited Ex parte Scrivener (3 Ves. & Bea. 14), and Binfield v. Solomons (9 Ves. 84).

June 5.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I think it consistent with principle and with the authorities, although I do not say with all the authorities, to hold, that if A, his necessities requiring an advance of 1,000*l.* obtains it from B, upon a bargain between them that, in consideration of such advance, A, his executors and administrators, shall pay B, his executors or administrators, an annuity of 80*l.* for a term of 70 years, commencing immediately, the annuity to be secured by the covenant of A binding himself personally whilst living, and after his death his assets generally, the transaction is usurious, and upon that ground bad, unless protected by those provisions of the legislature which have recently, as to certain cases, repealed or relaxed the usury laws. The term "loan" may or may not be a correct designation of such a transaction. The notion of a loan, in the popular or generally received sense of that expression, may not have entered into the minds of the parties. But how, in its essence or substance, does such a dealing differ from a mere loan of money at interest, when, according to the contract, the principal shall be repaid by certain fixed annual instalments, extending over a great number of years, each instalment being accompanied with interest due on the balance for the time being? I cannot see any material difference. Such cases as I have just mentioned are, I apprehend, common. Generally, I believe, it is a part of such bargains, that any irregularity in payment of the instalments of the principal or interest shall give the creditor the right of demanding immediately the whole sum remaining unpaid; but can the presence or the absence of such a stipulation, of which, when existing, a creditor may or may not choose to avail himself, be a matter of importance in a question of usury? I think not. Forbearance, whether for one year or for several years, is not to be purchased beyond a certain price. The mere inconvenience, a possible inconvenience, arising from the condition of a man's pecuniary capital, as well as the risk of trusting to the solvency of another, is considered to be unfit to be compensated at a rate beyond a certain fixed limit. If this is so, then, considering the length of the term of years, in the present instance exceeding seventy years, the amount of the annual rents intended to be reserved to Mr. Vardon, being eight per cent. upon his advances, and the circumstance that Mr. Cundy personally during his life, and his assets after his death, by the form and nature of the transactions in question, as I understand them, was or were to be liable for the rents, whatever might be the value or produce of the property charged, I am of opinion that such a transaction as that before the Court is usurious and void. The rents were to come out of landed property; landed property was intended to be charged, and the recent relaxation of the usury laws does not therefore help the defendant in this case. At first I doubted whether the liabilities incurred, or to be incurred, by Mr. Vardon, to the head landlord, and the possibility of the determination of the head-leases by re-entry or forfeiture, or by means of a bad or defective title, might not create a material distinction in his favour; but looking at the nature of these liabilities and contingencies—so far as they can be considered; looking also at the whole scheme and frame of the transaction; looking also at the large language of the statute of Queen Anne, I find it impossible to say that any substantial difference ought to be held to arise upon this ground. I must consider that the covenants contained in the underleases, on the part of Mr. Cundy, were to be analogous to those contained in the head-leases respectively; the breaches of them on the part of Mr. Cundy would render him liable to be sued by the head landlord, or would render Cundy or his representatives liable to be sued by Mr. Vardon or his representatives, supposing the underleases were valid, and he would be liable to make adequate compensation in damages. There is no suggestion anywhere against the title of either of the head landlords, at least I have not observed it. With regard, however, to the Burton-street property, what I have said must be taken subject to the qualification that, supposing the total absence of any usury laws, the documents respecting that property are, as it seems to me, of such a kind, and so expressed, as to be insufficient for the creation of any lien on it. For the purpose of coming to a conclusion, these documents ought to be read together. But if this be erroneous, they cannot, in my judgment, properly receive any construction except that which I have given; and as they are viewed and treated by the defendant in the manner in which his answer insists upon them, I think myself bound in this suit, notwithstanding the observation of the defendants on the face of the bill, to treat them in the same manner as those relating to the Belgrave-street property. I have not said specifically whether, in my view, these transactions were intended as shifts and devices to evade the usury laws. If it is necessary for me to give an opinion pointedly upon that specific question, I must answer it in the affirmative, according to my understanding of its nature. It has been said that though the plaintiffs are here as assignees of the bankrupt, they are not entitled to relief in this case without paying the amount fairly due from Mr. Cundy or his estate, or allowing the defendant to have a charge for it upon the property. I cannot accede to that argument. It appears to me they are entitled to relief upon the terms of allowing a proof under the fiat against Mr. Cundy for that amount. The principles applicable to the case of a redemption of a valid security are not, in every respect, applicable to a case of the present description; nor can I properly, as it appears to me, assent to the defendant's demand of a charge on the property in respect of his money expended in building. The defendant must pay the costs up to this time. I was very much struck by the observations as to the forfeiture of the lease, especially by those made by Mr. Fooks. I thought of them a great deal.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

MORRIS v. HOWES.

Settlement — Construction — Power — Limitation to "executors, administrators, and assigns."

A power limited in a settlement, made in contemplation of a marriage to be exercised during coverture, without reference to any future coverture, cannot be exercised during any other coverture than that to which the settlement immediately refers.

Where the ultimate limitation of a fund is to the executors, administrators, and assigns of a party who survives the events upon which the fund is limited to her executors, administrators, and assigns, it will pass under her will to her residuary legatees.

By indentures of settlement, dated in 1776, made previous to the marriage of Henry Ashby with Elizabeth Hickman, certain lands situated at Netherhutford were, after previous limitations, limited to the use of Wm. Hickman and Charles Oakden, their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the term of 500 years from the death of the survivor of Henry Ashby and Elizabeth Hickman, upon trust, in case the said Elizabeth Hickman should leave no issue of her body by the said Henry Ashby at the time of her death, to raise the sum of 1,000*l.* and pay the same to such persons, and upon such trusts, as the said Elizabeth Hickman, at any time during her coverture, should, by any deed or writing duly executed in the presence of two witnesses, or by her last will, appoint or devise the same; and, in default of such appointment or devise, to the use of the executors, administrators, and assigns of the said Ann Hickman, and to no other use, intent, or purpose whatsoever.

The marriage was solemnized, and in 1780 Henry Ashby died, leaving his wife, the said Elizabeth, surviving; there was no issue of the marriage, and Elizabeth Ashby did not exercise the power reserved to her by her marriage settlement above recited during her first coverture. In 1781, Elizabeth, in contemplation of a second marriage with Thos. Litchfield, and during her widowhood, exercised the power of appointment reserved to her by her first marriage settlement, and appointed the said sum of 1,000*l.* to the use of all and every the children and child of her body by the said Thomas Litchfield, and, in default of children, to the use of such persons as she, Elizabeth Ashby, should by deed or will appoint. Elizabeth Ashby married Thomas Litchfield, and in 1784, before she had any children by him, again executed the power reserved to her by her first marriage settlement, and appointed the said 1,000*l.* to Thos. Litchfield, absolutely, reserving to herself a power of revocation in case she had no children by Thos. Litchfield living at her decease, and to re-appoint the same to such persons and for such purposes as she should direct by deed or will, whether covert or sole. There was issue one daughter of the marriage of Eliz. Ashby with Thos. Litchfield, now named Elizabeth Kislingsbury. Elizabeth Litchfield died in 1791, leaving Thos. Litchfield, her husband, and the said Elizabeth, her daughter, and the said Ann Hickman, her mother, surviving, without having revoked the appointment made in 1784 under the power as above stated. In 1793, the said Ann Hickman, conceiving herself entitled, by the events which had occurred, to the said sum of 1,000*l.* under the trust of the indentures of 1776, filed her bill in Chancery to have it paid to her; that bill was dismissed with costs as against the then owner of the lands in question, and without costs as against the subsisting trustees of the term of 500 years created to secure the amount.

In 1779, Ann Hickman made her will, and without making any specific bequest of the said 1,000*l.* bequeathed all the residue of her estate and effects to John Hickman and Henry Hickman upon the trusts therein mentioned, and appointed them her executors, and died in 1779, without revoking her will, leaving her said executors and trustees of her residuary estate surviving, who proved her will. After various deaths and representations, the plaintiffs became and now are the personal representatives of Ann Hickman and her grandson Henry Hickman. The said Thos. Litchfield devised all his estate and effects to his son John Litchfield, and appointed him his executor, and died, leaving his son, the said John Litchfield, by one marriage, and his daughter, the said Eliz. Kislingsbury, by his wife Elizabeth, by a different marriage, surviving him. Under the above facts, four classes of claimants arose; one the executors of Ann Hickman, who claimed beneficially in consequence of the words used in the settlement of 1776; another class were the residuary legatees named in the will of Ann Hickman; a third class were the next of kin of Ann Hickman; and a fourth class were the representatives of Thos. Litchfield under the appointment in 1784. In consequence of these conflicting claims upon the fund, the plaintiff, as the personal representative of Ann Hickman, instituted this suit to have the fund administered under the decree of the Court.

Metcalfe appeared for the executor of Ann Hickman.

Sir C. Wetherell and Elmsley, for the residuary legatees.

Romilly, for the representatives of Thomas Litchfield.

T. Parker, sen. for other parties.

The cases cited were, Sanders v. Franks (2 Mad. 147); Wallis v. Taylor (8 Sim. 241; 1 Anstruther, 128); Daniel v. Dudly (1 Turn. & Phillips); Palin v. Hills (1 Mylne & Keene, 470); Horseman v. Abbey (1 Jac. & Walk. 381); Beable v. Dodd (1 Term Rep. 193); Bulmer v. Jay (4 Sim. 48); Collyer v. Squire (3 Rus. 467); Holloway v. Clarkson (2 Hare.)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This case appears to have been before Lord Rosslyn in 1793; but the parties not having pleaded his judgment, it does not come before me in a legal form. Whether it binds me or not is impossible to say, for it does not appear to be known what judgment was then made. The bill may have been dismissed; I must therefore consider the case as still open. It is clear from the settlement, that this power was intended to be exercised during coverture; it could not therefore be properly exercised dum sola. The next question is, whether the exercise of the power was restricted to the first coverture or not. Sir Thomas Plummer, in Horseman v. Abbly, considered it was so restricted: I am of the same opinion. Here a marriage is about to be contracted, the settlement is drawn up in reference to that marriage, and the restrictive words used are not in the ordinary form, "present or future coverture," but "during coverture," which must mean the coverture then in immediate contemplation. The consequence is, the power not being exercised during the first coverture, all claims arising from the exercise of the power, whether dum sola or during the second coverture, are disposed of. The next consideration is, whether the interest which Ann Hickman had under the settlement passed under her will. The provisions of the settlement were these: "In default of appointment by Elizabeth Hickman, to the use of the executors, administrators, and assigns of the said Ann Hickman, and to no other use, intent, or purpose whatsoever." The first question to be considered is, whether the words "executors or administrators" are to be interpreted next of kin. In Bulmer v. Jay, Lord Brougham said nothing but a clear case of intention can justify such a construction, and unless such appears, those words must have their plain and ordinary meaning given to them. It is clear here, that the executors and administrators do take, but whether beneficially or not, is another question. It is laid down in the case of Grafftley v. Humpage (1 Beavan, 46), that the joinder of the word assigns with executors and administrators, gives them a representative character, and clothes them with a trust to administer all funds that come to their hands as any other assets. The case of Daniel v. Dudley was very similar to this; there the Lord Chancellor held, they took in their representative character, and were bound to administer all assets that came to them in that character as general assets; and in the case of Hawes v. Hawes, Lord Langdale declared, that unless the Court is absolutely compelled by force of the words used to impute that highly improbable intention, the Court should not adopt such a conclusion, and declared the words used there (which were similar to the present) did not confer a beneficial interest. I am of opinion the same construction must be adopted here, and that the executors of Ann Hickman do not take beneficially. That being disposed of, the next question is between the next of kin and residuary legatee. It is clear, any thing Ann Hickman had at her death passed under her will. This fund was vested in Ann Hickman at the time of her death. It is said, to give this fund to the residuary estate, will clash with the decision of Palin v. Hills. Such will not be the case, for in Palin v. Hills the party died before she took a vested interest, having previously made her will; therefore at the time of her death she had nothing to give. Here the interest is clearly vested, and the testatrix makes her will and bequeaths her residuary estate; so that, in considering the decision in this case, the point decided in Palin v. Hills does not arise, and it is unnecessary to consider whether that decision is to be followed or not. I am therefore of opinion they do not clash, and that the money in question passed to the residuary legatees of Ann Hickman.

OAKES v. BEAR.

Equitable mortgage—Deposit—Fraud.

Where the title-deeds deposited in pursuance of an agreement for an equitable mortgage do not extend to all the property mentioned in the agreement, the Court will, notwithstanding, decree the sale of the whole of the property mentioned in the agreement belonging to the mortgagor.

John Bear being indebted to his bankers, the plaintiffs, in the sum of 1,000*l.* executed a memorandum of agreement, in which he recited that he was possessed of certain freehold and leasehold property, and agreed to deposit the title-deeds relating to the property mentioned in security for the repayment of the said sum of 1,000*l.* and any further advances he might raise from the plaintiffs; and in pursuance of that agreement the defendant deposited a bundle of deeds and papers, which he stated were the title-deeds relating to the property mentioned in the agreement, which the plaintiffs received, without examining the contents. John Bear had previously created a lien upon some of the property mentioned in the agreement, in favour of Dakin Bear, of which the plaintiffs had no notice. John Bear makes his will, and devises all his estate and effects to the defendant, upon the trusts therein mentioned, and shortly after dies; upon the death of John Bear, the plaintiffs, for the first time examined the bundle of deeds deposited by John Bear, when they found that the deeds related to only a very small portion of the property mentioned in the agreement, and to none of the property subject to the lien to Dakin Bear.

The plaintiffs then filed this bill to have their lien extended to all the property mentioned in the agreement executed by John Bear, with the deposit and a sale, and to have the deficiency, if any, paid out of the general estate.

Walker, for the plaintiffs, cited the case of Ex parte Wetherall (11 Ves. 398).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—There can be no question upon the rights of the plaintiffs; a clear fraud has been committed by John Bear. Let Dakin Bear stand as a first incumbrancer on so much of the property as his lien extended to, and that the plaintiffs be second incumbrancers upon that property, and first incumbrancers upon the property covered by the deeds contained in the bundle, and not comprised in Dakin Bear's security. In other respects I make the usual decree in a suit by an equitable mortgagee on behalf of himself and all other creditors of the testator.

ATKINSON v. BOYS.

Decree—Annuity—Deficiency.

Where a fund stands invested under a decree to a separate account, to pay an annuity out of the dividends, which subsequently become insufficient, the annuitant cannot institute a fresh suit to have the corpus of the fund applied to make up the deficiency so long as the previous decree remains unreversed.

John Atkinson devised all the residue of his real estate and effects to his son, Robert Atkinson, absolutely, subject to his debts, and afterwards died. Robert Atkinson, on his marriage, executed a settlement, under which he conveyed and assigned to trustees the property he had from his father, for a term, with strict powers of distress and sale, to secure the payment of an annuity to his wife of 300*l.* per annum after his death, and upon the decease of the survivor of himself and his wife, to the use of his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. Robert Atkinson afterwards sold his life estate in the annuity, and the capital in reversion, to Thomas Boys.

A suit was subsequently instituted by the creditors of John Atkinson to have their debts paid, and Sir John Leach decreed, amongst other orders, that a sum of money, the dividends of which would be sufficient to pay the annuity of 300*l.* should be carried to a separate account, to be called the contingent residuary account, and directed the dividends to be paid to Thomas Boys during the life of Robert Atkinson, and after his death to the plaintiff, his wife, in case she survived him, and, upon the decease of Robert Atkinson and the plaintiff, to pay the capital to Thomas Boys.

Other creditors of John Atkinson subsequently took proceedings against his estate, and the fund set apart by the decree to meet the annuity of 300*l.* became reduced to 3,700*l.* Robert Atkinson died, and his widow, the plaintiff, finding the dividends of the sum invested to pay her annuity insufficient for that purpose, filed this bill to have so much of the sum of 3,700*l.* applied as may be necessary to purchase her an annuity of 300*l.* per annum, or that so much may be ordered to be taken annually from the principal as may be sufficient to make up with the dividends an annuity of 300*l.* for her own use.

K. Parker and Elmsley appeared for the plaintiff.

Romilly, for the defendants, took a preliminary objection, that the prayer could not be granted so long as the decree of the Rolls remained unreversed.

Elmsley argued that this was a fund distinctly set apart to meet this annuity, and was primarily applicable for that purpose; and having, by prior claims, become deficient to effect that object from the annual dividends, the plaintiff had a right to file this suit to have the principal applied to make good the deficiency.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I make no decision upon the title of the plaintiff to have the prayer of her bill granted, for this is not the proper course to pursue to have it tried; I cannot decide in favour of the plaintiff without deciding that the order of Sir John Leach is bad. The proper course is, to have the cause reheard by petition at the Rolls.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Friday, July 4.

PARGETER v. HARRIS.

Demurrer to replication.

The declaration was on a covenant to pay rent, contained in a certain lease, which was set out. The recitals shewed that the lessors were "owners subject to a mortgage," and the reddendum was, "yielding and paying for every year during the demise, 157*l.* 10*s.* as part of interest due upon the mortgage, at the office of Mr. Wratislaw." The declaration contained an averment, that there was no reversion in the plaintiffs, or either of them, at the time of executing the indenture. The second plea was, that the reversion of the said premises was in the plaintiffs and one Pargeter, deceased, and that after the death, the plaintiffs granted to one Salmon the reversion in the said premises. To this the plaintiff replied that there was no reversion of and in the said premises, in the plaintiffs at the time of the indenture.

To this the defendant demurred. The points were, that the plaintiffs were estopped from denying that they had a reversion, because it was implied from the deed that they had, and that the replication was a departure. The plaintiffs contended that the plea was bad, for that the covenant was a covenant in gross.

It was argued on Friday, April 25, by Alexander, Q. C. in support of the demurrer, and Tomlinson, contrà.

The following authorities were cited: Co. Litt. 352, a; Green v. James (6 M. & W. 656); Lawson v. Tremerre (1 A. & E. 792); Bowman v. Rowstron (2 A. & E. 295); Carpenter v. Buller (8 M. & W. 209); Webb v. Russell (3 T. R. 392); Spencer's case (5 Rep. 16); Vivian v. Arthur (1 B. & C. 410); Vernon v. Smith (5 B. & Ald. 1); Com. Dig. "Estoppel;" Palmer v. Ekins (1 Ld. Raym.); Carrick v. Blagrave (1 B. & B. 53); Cardwell v. Lucas (2 M. & W. 111).

At the sittings after Trinity Term, judgment was delivered as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Friday, July 4.—Lord DENMAN, C. J.—This was an action of covenant on an indenture dated in 1835, by the two Pargeters and H. Pargeter, since deceased, of the first part, and A. Harris, guardian of I. Pargeter, and G. Pargeter, and W. Pargeter, of the second part, and the defendant of the third part, reciting that the parties of the first part, and A. Harris, as guardian, were owners of land and premises thereby described, subject to mortgages for 3,500*l.* interest payable half yearly. The parties of the first part, with the consent and approbation of A. Harris, demised the lease of the premises to the defendant for seven years, yielding the clear yearly sum of 153*l.* 11*s.* to be paid at the office of the said attorney, in part interest on the said mortgage, and the defendant covenants with the parties of the first part to pay the said yearly sum. The declaration then states the nonpayment of the rent, and avers that the plaintiffs had not, nor had any of them, at or since the time of making the indenture, any reversion of or in the premises. The plea was, that the reversion in the premises expectant on the determination of the lease, was in the parties of the first part; and that before the breach the plaintiff and the survivor of the said parties, assigned that reversion to I. S. who became and is the assignee thereof. The replication was, that no reversion was, at the time of making the indenture, or since, in the parties. On general demurrer, the points marked for argument are, that the replication is bad because the plaintiffs are estopped from saying that the defendant had no reversion; and that it is a departure from the declaration. On the part of the plaintiffs the plea is said to be bad; first, as setting up the assignee's title to sue upon covenants that did not pass by assignment; secondly, in assuming the existence of the reversion, although the declaration alleged there was none, and shewed by indenture that the lessors had only an equitable interest, and no reversion. There is plainly no departure in this case, for the replication does but repeat the precise averment in the declaration, which was obviously necessary, according to the decision of Green v. James (6 M. & W. 656). The declaration is not in the usual general form in actions of covenant for rent, but states so much of the lease as shews the plaintiff had only the equity in redemption in the premises, and the plaintiff knew that circumstance from the recital; that recital is sufficient to prevent either being estopped from denying that the plaintiff had the legal reversion. The question therefore comes to this, whether, in all cases where the lease discloses that the land is mortgaged, and that the lessor has only the equity of redemption, the covenant for the payment of the rent is not necessarily a covenant in gross. There is the further observation, that the rent is not made payable to any person, only at the office of Mr. Wratislaw aforesaid, in part of the interest due on the said mortgage or mortgages; and the covenant is with the said plaintiffs, their heirs, &c. that he will pay to the plaintiffs, in manner hereinbefore mentioned, the said yearly sum of 153*l.* 11*s.* It is very doubtful whether this can be said to be a reversion at all. In Gouldsworth v. Knight (11 M. & W. 337), the Court of Exchequer is said to have intimated that the assignees of the lessor who has only an equity of redemption might maintain covenant, but that is not so.

We are of opinion there is no estoppel in this case by reason of the facts being disclosed on the face of the lease, since the covenant is a covenant in gross, and the declaration is good; for the same reasons, the plea is bad. Judgment for the plaintiffs.

WEBBER v. PRELLER.

The "market price" is, in the absence of fraud, the price at which actual sales have been made.

This was a motion for a new trial in an action for the nonpayment of the price of salt under a contract, by which Messrs. Preller were to receive and Messrs. Webber to deliver, in the year 1843, 1,500 tons of salt, at 9*s.* a ton, with a discount of 6*d.* per ton for cash, within ten days of delivery; but if the market price was lower, Messrs. Preller were to have the benefit thereof, and in no case was the price to be above 9*s.* a ton. The amount, at 6*s.* per ton, less the discount, had been tendered and paid into court. It was shewn at the trial, that upon the day upon which the delivery, pursuant to notice, took place, sales had been made in the morning at 6*s.*; but none later in the day, and some of the witnesses stated that the price was higher, and that they would not have sold at that price. The judge directed the jury to take these facts into consideration in determining the market price, and they found that 7*s.* was the price, and a verdict was returned accordingly.

At the sittings after Trinity Term, Martin, Q. C. and J. Henderson shewed cause against a rule for a new trial, and Crompton was heard in support. On July 4, judgment was delivered as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—In this case the only question was, what was the market price of salt on the 16th of December, 1843, that being the price which the defendant was to pay to the plaintiff for a quantity of salt delivered on that day, provided it did not exceed 9*s.* a ton, that being the maximum price agreed upon. Two or three sales were proved on that day, and they had been made at 6*s.* per ton, and one of the sales being of a considerable quantity, there was no evidence of any other sale at any other price than 6*s.*; and for some time previous the selling price appeared to be 6*s.* Various witnesses, however, stated that after the 16th of December the price rose to 6*s.* 6*d.*, 7*s.* and 7*s.* 6*d.* and some persons would not have sold for that day for so low a price as 6*s.* and that they considered the market price; but there was no proof of any actual dealing on that day at any other price than 6*s.* The learned judge appears to have left the question of the market price to the jury, not only upon the evidence of actual sales and dealings, but upon the evidence also of a subsequent rise in price, and stated that some persons would not have sold for so low a price as 6*s.* on that day, and that they considered the market price on the 16th of December higher than 6*s.* The jury, by their verdict, found 7*s.* to be the market price. We think the jury may have been in some degree misled by the summing up of the learned judge, as they seem to have given their verdict rather with reference to the evidence of subsequent prices and speculations of the witnesses as to the prices at which parties would or would not have sold, than to the evidence of actual transactions on that day, which, in our judgment, was the market price. We therefore think there should be a rule for a new trial, unless the plaintiff will consent to reduce the verdict to the sum which ought to have been allowed, 6*s.* the market price. I think there was no proof that the sale had been kept back on that day by any act of the parties; and no fraud was imputable.

Crompton consented to take a verdict for 20*l.*

On a subsequent day Lord DENMAN, C. J. said—

We have expressed our opinion that the verdict can only stand for about 20*l.*; but we were asked, further, whether the defendant is not entitled to a verdict on the ground that five per cent. ought to be deducted, because the sum properly due was tendered within a stipulated time. We think this deduction ought to be made, but we have no power to enter a verdict for the defendant, therefore can only make the rule absolute in that respect for a new trial.

POW v. TAUNTON.

Patent.

This was a motion for a new trial in a patent case. The arguments were purely technical, and constant reference was made to the models in court.

Rotch (June 20) shewed cause.

J. Henderson, contrà.

On July 3rd judgment was given as follows:—

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—This was a motion for a new trial in an action for the infringement of a patent, in which the plaintiff obtained a verdict on all the issues, one of which was that upon a plea denying the novelty of the invention. The patent was for a nipping lever for causing the rotation of wheels, shafts, and cylinders under certain circumstances stated in the specification, by which the plaintiff claimed as his invention the nipping lever, which was used for the sliding-box, before described, affixed to the wheel or the flange, for the purpose of causing the same to rotate or move together with any shaft or cylinder, in the same manner as any thing attached thereto. The question was raised as to whether the sliding-boxes were or were not reasonable or necessary parts of the invention claimed. We think the jury may have been misled by the mode in which the question was left to them, and they may have considered it unimportant whether the use of the sliding-boxes was necessary and reasonable for the plaintiff's invention, provided the use of it was new; and we think that either they were reasonable, and then they ought to have been stated, or they were not reasonable, and then there is no novelty. We think the rule should be absolute for a new trial.

The cases of Hargreaves v. Wood, Scarpeline v. Atcheson, Symons v. Peacock, Fannin v. Anderson, Carter v. Price, and Reg. v. New Windsor, will be reported forthwith. The judgments have been delivered since Term, and the great importance of many of these cases has rendered some delay unavoidable in reporting the arguments.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

LOGAN v. BELL.

By a marriage settlement certain hereditaments were conveyed to the use of J. W. and her heirs "until the solemnization of the intended marriage, and from and after the solemnization thereof to the use of such person," &c. as she the said J. W. "notwithstanding her said intended or any future coverture, and whether she be covert or sole, and without the consent, concurrence, or privity of her husband, or with such consent, concurrence, or privity, at any time or times, and from time to time," should by will or codicil, &c. appoint. Held, that the power authorized an appointment before marriage, and that an appointment by J. W. under a codicil made after the settlement, and before the marriage, was therefore valid, and not revoked by the subsequent marriage.

This was an action of debt, for money had and received to the use of the plaintiff. At the trial, before Cresswell, J. at the sittings after Trinity Term 1844, a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the Court on a special case, which set forth, inter alia, a settlement made in contemplation of the marriage afterwards solemnized between the plaintiff and Isabel Wight, and a codicil by Mrs. Logan, made after the settlement and before the marriage. On the argument of the case in Trinity Term last by Talfourd, Serjt. for the plaintiff, and Channell, Serjt. for the defendant, it was agreed to be admitted that the money had been received to the use of the plaintiff, if the power contained in the settlement was well executed by the codicil made by Mrs. Logan.

The following authorities were cited: Sug. Powers, 6th ed. 349; Doe dem. Hodsden v. Staple (2 T. R. 684), and in Equity under the name of Hodsden v. Lloyd (2 Bro. C. C. 534); Maundrell v. Maundrell (10 Ves. 246); Sclater v. Travell (Viner's Abr. tit. Authority, G. 8); Dalby v. Pullen (2 Bing. 144); and Doe dem. Calkin and Others v. Tomlinson (2 M. & Sel. 165).

The power and the codicil are fully set forth, and the points stated, in the following

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C.J. delivered judgment as follows:—In this case the question, as agreed by the parties, is, whether the codicil executed by Mrs. Logan on the 24th of October, 1825, is a valid execution of the power of appointment contained in the marriage settlement of the 22nd of the same month. If it be a valid execution, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment; if not, the defendant. The settlement in question, after reciting the intended marriage between Isabel Wight and George Logan, states that Isabel Wight was seised in fee of the hereditaments in question, and conveys them to Thomas Gilchrist and his heirs, to the use of the said Isabel Wight and her heirs, until the solemnization of the intended marriage, and from and after the solemnization thereof, to the use of such person or persons for such estate or estates, interest or interests, and to and for such ends, intents, and purposes, and upon such trusts, and charged and chargeable in such manner, and subject to such powers, provisos, declarations, and agreements, as she the said Isabel Wight, notwithstanding her said intended or any future coverture, and whether she shall be covert or sole, and without the consent, concurrence, or privity of her husband, or with such consent, concurrence, or privity, at any time or times, and from time to time shall, in and by any deed or deeds, writing or writings, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of, and attested by, two or more credible witnesses, or in and by her last will and testament, or any writing in the nature of, or purporting to be her last will and testament, or any codicil or codicils thereto, to be by her signed and published in the presence of, and attested by three or more credible witnesses, limit, direct, or appoint, or give or devise the same, and for want and in default of, and until such limitations, direction, or appointment, gift or devise, shall be effectually made, and in case any such shall be made then subject thereto, when and so often as the estates or interests thereby limited or created shall respectively cease and determine, to the use of the said Thomas Gilchrist, his heirs, and assigns, for and during the joint natural lives of the said Isabel Wight and George Logan, in trust, from time to time to pay the rents, issues, and profits of the said hereditaments and premises (after all taxes, rates, repairs, insurances, charges, and other outgoings payable for and in respect of the said premises, or any of them, shall have been satisfied thereout) to such person or persons, and in such manner, as she, the said Isabel Wight, by note or order in writing under her hand, shall order, direct or appoint (notwithstanding her coverture); and in default of such order, direction, or appointment, then unto the proper hands of her the said Isabel Wight, to and for her sole and separate use, wholly and independently of the said George Logan, and without the same being in any wise subject to his debts, control, or engagements. And the receipt of the said Isabel Wight alone it is hereby declared shall, notwithstanding her coverture, be a sufficient discharge for so much of the rents and profits of the said premises as shall therein be expressed to be received; and from and immediately after the decease of them, the said Isabel Wight and George Logan, to the use of the said Isabel Wight, her heirs and assigns for ever." On the 26th of October, 1825, the marriage took place, and on the 24th, two days before the marriage, and two days after the settlement, Isabel Wight made a codicil under seal, and signed and published it in the presence of three credible witnesses, by whom it was duly attested. The codicil is in the following terms:—"This is the codicil to my before-written will. I give and bequeath all and singular my messuages, cottages, and hereditaments, situate at Croydon and Croydon Common aforesaid, and all my shares and interest in the new Four per Cent. Annuities, and all other my real and personal estate whatsoever, unto William Birdsell, of Berwick aforesaid, clerk, and John Greenfield, of the same place, grocer, and their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust, for all the children of my body who shall survive me and attain twenty-one years of age, and their heirs, executors, and administrators, as tenants in common, in equal shares, and to apply a competent part of the interest, rents, and dividends for the maintenance, during their minorities, of all my children, and for default of such children, or failure of them, in trust for my intended husband, George Logan, and his assigns, for his natural life, and from and after his decease in trust for all the children of his body who shall survive him and attain twenty-one years of age, and their heirs, executors, and administrators, in equal shares as tenants in common, and to apply the rents and interest in manner aforesaid, for the maintenance and education of them during their minorities; and for default or failure of such children of his body in trust to pay, assign, convey, and transfer, or dispose of all my said real and personal estate in manner as the same is given, bequeathed, devised, and directed by my before-written will. Witness my hand and seal this 24th day of October, 1825, and I declare this to be an appointment under the two deeds of settlement of my real and personal estate on my intended marriage, dated the 22nd instant. Some questions were adverted to in the course of the argument which may be very shortly disposed of. It is no objection to the power, that the party exercising it has a fee or other interest in the land. This is clear from many cases, Sir Edward Clere's Case (6 Coke, 17), and Maundrell v. Maundrell (10 Ves. 245), and other cases there cited. Nor is there any weight in the objection that the execution of the power was to operate after the event arose which was contingent at the time the power was executed. See the cases of Dalby v. Pullen (2 Bing. 144), and Sclater v. Travell (Viner's Abridgment, tit. Authority, G. 8), which shew that the power may be effectually executed, though at the time of its execution it is uncertain whether the event on which alone it could take effect shall ever happen. Nor is there any doubt that, supposing there were terms in the settlement to extend to the codicil made after the settlement and before the marriage, the appointment by the codicil was not revoked by the marriage; and according to the language of Lord Kenyon (2 T. R. 684), in the case of Doe v. Staple, where, after stating that, "generally speaking, the will of a feme sole ceases to have any operation after she becomes covert" he adds, "but it is equally clear that where an estate is limited to uses, and a power is given to a féme covert before marriage to declare those uses, such limitation of uses may take effect, and this is the rule even in a court of law." And the exception in the Act 7 Wm. 4, c. 26, which excepts from the enactment making marriage a revocation of a will made by a woman under a power of appointment, when the estate would, in default of appointment, pass to her heirs, executors, or administrators, shews that before the Act the will of a woman, under the power of appointment, would not be revoked by a subsequent marriage. There seems therefore to be no doubt that the power to appoint by her codicil made before marriage, if proper words are found to confirm it, might be fully executed, and take effect notwithstanding the subsequent marriage; nor is there any doubt that if Isabel Wight had such a power, it was effectually executed by the codicil, which expressly refers to the power, and is in all respects strictly within its terms. The question therefore is, whether the power given in the settlement did arise before the marriage? The language of the clause conferring that power is full and precise, as it relates to the time when, the circumstances under which, and the form and mode by which, it may be exercised. The words as to the time are, "as she the said Isabel Wight shall, at any time or times, and from time to time." These words in the ordinary sense comprehend all future time, and therefore the time between the settlement and the marriage, the words relating to the circumstances under which the power may be executed are, "notwithstanding her said intended coverture, or any future coverture, and whether she shall be covert or sole, and without the consent, concurrence, or privity of her husband, or with such consent, concurrence, or privity." These words are all enabling, none of them restricting, and as the language respecting time comprehends all future time, that respecting circumstances comprises all the circumstances in which a person not under a natural incapacity can be placed; there is nothing therefore in this part of the clause which restrains the generality of words relating to time. But further, the nature of the uses which Isabel Wight is to have the power of limiting shews that, for the complete operation of the power intended to be given, the execution of it before the marriage should be operative. These uses are by the terms of the settlement to commence from, and immediately after, the solemnization of the marriage: she was, by those express terms, if she thought fit, enabled to make an appointment to commence from and immediately after the marriage. Now this could not strictly and completely be performed by an execution after marriage, as it would operate only from the time of its execution, and the time between the marriage and the execution of the power being limited to the release to uses, any execution after marriage must have some part, how[illegible]nall, of the uses to which the power was originally intended to extend unacted upon. With regard to the terms of that part of the clause conferring the power which relates to the mode and form in which it is to be exercised, though they are not, if simply and loosely construed, inconsistent with the construction that would confine the execution to the time which follows the marriage, yet it will be found that the other construction is the more consonant to their full and exact meaning. Those words which give the power to give and devise by will or codicil, as distinguished from the power to appoint by writing, in the nature of a will or codicil made by Isabel Wight, would be useless unless made for the purpose of a will or codicil made before her intended marriage, or after that and before any future marriage, preventing such, however, from being revoked by marriage. The words themselves are for that purpose most appropriate, and the power is a reasonable and proper o[illegible] The effect of those words is, in combination with those which enable her to appoint during coverture, to prevent any coverture from affecting in any way any disposition of her lands by the power, and saving the necessity of renewing after coverture any disposition made while sole or covert, but which she might not desire to alter. Indeed, to suppose the word "sole" was introduced for the purpose only of protecting her will made during widowhood would be to take away from its effect a case to which it naturally applies, and was in the immediate contemplation of the parties, and sure to happen if the marriage took place at all; and it appears excessively to limit the directions depending upon the future contingency of her surviving her husband and marrying again. We think, therefore, the intention of the words was to confer the power to appoint before as well as after the marriage, and that that intention was effectually expressed. The case of Hodsden v. Lloyd (2 Bro. C. C. 534) was relied on for the defendant. In that case an agreement, not under seal, was made before the marriage, by which it was agreed that the wife's fortune should, if she happened to die first, be at her own disposal; and by the parties it was agreed to prepare settlement deeds to that effect, and the agreement was accordingly prepared and executed. On the same day, after the agreement and before the marriage, Catherine Culver, the intended wife, made her will, and thereby gave the interest of all her fortune to her husband for life. The Lord Chancellor held the will was revoked by marriage. The distinctions between that case and the present are many and obvious. The agreement was not under seal; there was no person seised to any use; no express mention of any power, or when or how it was to be executed. In order to support the will and the execution of the power, it will be necessary to construe the words "and if the said Catherine Culver shall happen to die first, then the aforesaid fortune to be at her own disposal," as conferring an equitable power of appointment by will made by her before marriage. The Lord Chancellor did not so construe it, but considered it conferred a power only to make a will after marriage, and there seems no reason to doubt the correctness of that construction. That case differs so widely from the terms of the settlement in the present case, by which the power defined by the express words as to the time, circumstances, and mode of execution is enforced, that the construction of the one has no bearing upon that of the other. Upon the whole, therefore, we are of opinion that judgment must be given for the plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff.

WESTERN SUMMER CIRCUIT, 1845.

Dorchester, July 18.

(Before Mr. BARON PLATT.)

REG. v. WARR.

It is not necessary, where one statute creates an offence and affixes a punishment, and a subsequent statute is passed by which the punishment is altered, to conclude an indictment charging such an offence as being contra formam statutorum.

This was an indictment for forgery. There were a great many counts, all of which concluded contra formam statuti.

The prisoner demurred to the indictment, and on his behalf it was contended by Stock, on the argument of the demurrer, that this conclusion was wrong, and that, as the offence had been created by one statute, and the punishment altered by another, the conclusion should have been contra formam statutorum. He cited Reg. v. Adams (1 Car. & M. 299), in which Coleridge, J. had expressly ruled in this way.

Slade, contrà.—If that decision be correct, all the indictments for sheep-stealing and housebreaking would be wrong. The true rule is, that when the statute creates an offence, and affixes no penalty, and it therefore becomes necessary to pass another statute to affix the penalty, then it might be necessary to conclude contra formam statutorum; but it is never necessary, in criminal pleading, to notice or refer in any way to a statute which is simply passed for the purpose of altering the punishment.

PLATT, B. (after consulting Erle, J.) decided that the objection was not tenable, and that the indictment was good.

The prisoner then pleaded "Not Guilty," was tried, convicted, and sentenced to ten years' transportation.

DEVON SUMMER ASSIZES. 1845.

(Before Mr. Baron PLATT.)

REG. v. MARCHANT.

Friendly Society—Larceny—Indictment.

One of three stewards of a benefit society, not enrolled under 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, having the key to one of three locks upon the box, and abstracting the contents during the temporary absence of his co-trustees, cannot be convicted of larceny under a count in the indictment laying the property in the landlord of the inn where the box was kept at the time of the theft.

Prisoner was indicted for stealing certain moneys belonging to a friendly society.

The first count laid the property in James Berry (who was the president of the society). In the second count it was laid in Tully and others (stewards of the society). In the last count it was laid in J. Stiff (the landlord of the inn where the money-box of the society was kept).

The facts were, that the prisoner and Tully were stewards of the society; Berry was the president. The funds of the society were kept in a box with three separate locks, of which the president and two stewards (the prisoner being one) had each a key; so that the box could not be opened but in the presence of the three. The box was kept at the inn at which the society met, in charge of the landlord. On Whit Monday the society assembled; the box was opened, and the money and other effects of the society seen safe therein. The president and the other steward had occasion to quit the room in which the box was, leaving the prisoner alone in the room. They left their keys in the locks. On their return they found the box locked as far as the prisoner's lock was concerned, and the prisoner gone, having abstracted the contents of the box. The rules of the society were not enrolled.

Stone having opened these facts to the jury,

Slade, for the prisoner, submitted to the Court that they did not support the indictment, the prisoner having the entire possession of, and a joint interest in, the box and its contents, when the money was taken.

Stone, for the prosecution, cited Rex v. Bramley (R. & R. 478), in which it was held that where a member of a benefit society entered the room of the person with whom a box containing the funds of the society was deposited, and took and carried it away, it was holden to be larceny, and contended that, inasmuch as the present indictment contained a count laying the property in the landlord of the inn, who was answerable to the society for the box and its contents, the taking of the contents of the box was a felonious taking sufficient to support that count.

PLATT, B.—The prisoner had the lawful possession of the box at the time he abstracted its contents. He had also a joint property in those contents; he cannot therefore be held to have stolen the contents of that box from the landlord, who was not responsible for the same while in such possession of the prisoner and his co-trustees. This indictment cannot be sustained. Not guilty

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

FOREIGN WINES AND SPIRITS.—A return recently moved for by Mr. Darby, M.P. shews that in the year ending January 5, 1845, the total quantities of foreign wine imported into this country amounted to 8,584,586 gallons, of which 1,662,788 gallons were re-exported. Upon 7,077,451 gallons duty was paid. The quantities retained for home consumption, after deducting the amount exported subsequently to the payment of duty, amounted to 6,838,648 gallons, viz. 319,257 gallons of Cape, 473,789 gallons of French, 2,847,501 gallons of Portuguese, 2,478,360 gallons of Spanish, 111,577 gallons of Madeira, 53,865 gallons of Rhenish, 20,650 gallons of Canary, 158 gallons of Fayal, and 463,527 gallons of Sicilian, &c. wines. The quantities remaining in warehouse under bond on the 5th of January last amounted to 10,367,781 gallons, viz. 6,186,256 gallons in London, and 4,181,525 gallons at other places. It will be seen that the principal wines consumed in this country are those of Oporto and Xeres (port and sherry); that the Cape, French, and Sicilian (Marsala) wines are pretty much on a par, whilst the consumption of Madeira is almost incredibly insignificant. The quantities of foreign spirits imported in 1844 amounted to 5,786,787 gallons; the quantities retained for home consumption to 3,267,878 gallons; the quantities exported to 2,352,636 gallons; the quantities shipped as stores to 387,859 gallons; and the quantities delivered for the use of the navy to 359,924 gallons. The quantities remaining in bond on the 5th of January last amounted altogether to 5,383,467 gallons, viz. 3,276,687 gallons in London, and 2,106,708 gallons at other places in the United Kingdom. Amongst the 3,267,878 gallons retained for domestic consumption, there were 1,988,988 gallons of West-India and colonial rum, 104,324 gallons of East-India rum, and 105,185 gallons of West-India, East-India, and Mauritius rum, all vatted together, making a grand total of 2,198,592 gallons of rum. There were also retained for home use alone, 1,023,073 gallons of brandy, 14,864 gallons of Geneva, 6,077 gallons of other foreign and colonial spirits, and 25,272 gallons of Channel Islands spirits.

PROSECUTIONS.—A return relative to rates of allowance for prosecutors' and witnesses' expenses, and for attorney and counsel, and to prosecutions for felonies and misdemeanours, in the counties of England and Wales, at the two last assizes and quarter sessions, has been printed by order of the House of Commons, on the motion of Mr. W. D. Christie, M.P. for Weymouth. From a summary of the return, it appears that the total number of prosecutions for felonies, at the summer assizes of 1844, and the quarter sessions of 1844-45, in England and Wales, amounted to 1,957, and the total number of prosecutions for misdemeanours to 129; that the number of prosecutions for felony at the Spring assizes, and the Epiphany or Easter quarter sessions of 1845, amounted to 1,779, and the number of prosecutions for misdemeanours to 100; and that the total number of prosecutions at the two last assizes and the two last quarter sessions, respectively, amounted—those for felonies to 4,476, and those for misdemeanours to 262. The number of cases in which no payment was made for brief or counsel's fee amounted, in the three periods respectively, to 705, 725, and 2,099.

FEES IN CRIMINAL COURTS.—A Bill brought into the lower House of Parliament by Mr. Escott, Sir Jas. Graham, and Viscount Duncan, M.P. "for further securing the rights of accused persons, and for abolishing certain fees in criminal courts," proposes to declare and enact that the plea of "Not guilty" is the free, undoubted, and unconditional right of every subject of this realm accused of crime or misdemeanour; and that henceforth it shall not be lawful for any officer of any court of criminal jurisdiction in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or for any other person whatsoever, to take or demand from any person accused of any crime or misdemeanour any fee or payment whatsoever, either before or after trial, or before, at, or after any summary proceedings before one or more justices of the peace, other than such proper and legal fine as the said court and justices before whom such person shall have been tried, or summarily convicted, are or shall be authorized to impose as a punishment for the offence for which such person shall have been tried and found guilty, or summarily convicted.

REVISING BARRISTERS.—A return, extending to seven pages, has been printed by order of the House of Commons, shewing the operations of the revising barristers of last year. It contains the names of the barristers, with the days they were employed. They are now paid 200*l.* each, including expenses, and the revision which, on its commencement, cost the country 31,000*l.* has been reduced to about one-half of that sum. Last year, the Court of Common Pleas decided seven appeals from counties; two were for the appellants, and five for the respondents. From cities and boroughs there were 23 appeals; 17 were in favour of the respondents, and the remainder for the appellants. Last year, costs were ordered for the first time—the highest amount was 22*l.* 2*s.*, and the smallest 7*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.*

RELIGION IN THE COLONIES.—From a bulky Parliamentary return lately published, it appears that according to a schedule of the grants, endowments, and appropriations, made for the purpose of religious instruction or of education in the colonies (the gross total population of our colonial dependencies amounting in the aggregate to 4,705,739 souls), there was paid in 1842 a total sum of 226,902*l.* to the clergy of the churches of England, Scotland, Rome, and the Methodist and Dissenting ministers, of which 46,964*l.* was paid by the British Treasury, and 176,938*l.* from colonial funds. The grants from the British Treasury to schools during the same period amounted to 26,117*l.* and that from colonial funds to 146,230*l.* making a grand total of 172,407*l.* Of the sum of 49,964*l.* granted by the Treasury to the clergy, those of the Anglican establishment received 44,593*l.*; those of the Scotch, 347*l.*; and those of the Romish, 2,024*l.* Of the sum of 176,938*l.* granted from colonial funds 118,443*l.* was received by the Anglican clergy, 29,645*l.* by the Scotch, 4,634*l.* by the Wesleyans and Dissenters, and 24,216*l.* by the Romish priests.

PUBLIC PETITIONS TO PARLIAMENT.—The 41st report of the select committee shews that there are, or were a few days ago (amongst many others lying on the table of the House of Commons), three petitions in favour of the Jewish Disabilities Removal Bill, signed by 53 persons; 31 petitions against the Universities (Scotland) Bill (recently rejected), signed by 1,108 persons; 40 petitions in favour of the same measure, signed by 1,600 persons; 587 petitions for relief from agricultural taxation, signed by 41,667 persons; 30 petitions for an inquiry into the working of the Anatomy Act, signed by 3,439 persons; 229 petitions against the Irish Colleges Bill, signed by 326,646 persons; 430 petitions for a Ten Hours Factory Bill, signed by 8,788 persons; 9 petitions for an alteration of the laws relating to landlords and tenants in Ireland, signed by 6,142 persons; 101 petitions against the Parochial Settlements Bill, signed by 2,971 persons; 289 petitions for an amendment of Sir J. Graham's Physic and Surgery Bill as it now stands; 28 petitions in its favour, signed by 915 persons; and 9 petitions in favour of the Smoke Prohibition Bill, signed by 6,583 persons.

Bills in Progress.

A Bill intituled "An Act for securing the real Independence of Parliament."

52 Geo. 3, c. 144. Issuing of judgment for debt, &c. and execution thereon, to disqualify Peers and Members of the Commons from sitting and voting in Parliament.—Whereas it is highly necessary, for the preservation of the dignity and independence of Parliament, that members of either of the Houses thereof who become insolvent, and do not pay their debts in full, shall not retain their seats in the Commons House, and shall be sequestered from voting in the Lords House; and whereas an Act was passed in the fifty-second year of the reign of his late Majesty George the Third, for preventing such as should be made bankrupt from sitting in the Commons House; but no provision hath yet been made touching such as are insolvent, not being traders, albeit that there is much more reason for regarding the bankruptcy of persons exposed to the risks of trade with favour; and whereas the provisions heretofore made for preventing the delays of justice through privilege of Parliament have not proved effectual, but persons having such privilege do set at nought the judgments and orders of courts of law and equity, to the great scandal of the law, and such persons should no longer be suffered to assist in making the laws which they continually do violate: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this Act if any judgment shall be given against any peer or any member of the Commons House, for any debt, or for the costs of any action or suit, and execution shall be issued thereupon, or if any order for the payment of money into court or otherwise shall be made, and process of sequestration issued thereon, and it shall be found by the return of the said process of execution or sequestration that such peer or member of the Commons House hath not goods or chattels sufficient to satisfy the debt, and after sequestration shall have issued and been executed such peer or member hath not paid the money into court, or otherwise obeyed the order in that behalf made, or that the debt shall remain unpaid, then and in that case such peer or member shall be altogether incapable of sitting and voting in either House of Parliament, unless within twelve calendar months from the process being issued against him he shall pay the debt, or pay the money ordered to be paid, with costs on the same judgment or order and process: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall affect any peer or member of the Commons House who shall have brought a writ of error against such judgment, or appealed against such order, and have given security for the payment of the debt or money in case such judgment or order shall be affirmed, in two sufficient bondsmen, to be approved by a judge of the court in which such judgment shall have been given or order made.

3. Power of Speaker to nominate persons to issue warrants for new writs extended to vacancies under this Act—24 Geo. 3, Sess. 2, 26.—And be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that all and every of the powers contained in an Act of the twenty-fourth year of the reign of his late Majesty George the Third, for repealing so much of the two former Acts as authorized the Speaker of the House of Commons to issue his warrant to the clerk of the crown for making out writs for the election of members to serve in Parliament in the manner therein mentioned and for substituting other provisions for the like purposes, so far as such powers enable the Speaker of the House of Commons to nominate and appoint other persons, being members of the House of Commons to issue warrants for the making out of new writs during the vacancy of the office of Speaker, or during his absence out of the realm, shall be and they are hereby made to be in force for the purpose of enabling him to make the like nomination and appointment for issuing warrants, under the like circumstances and conditions, for the election of members of Parliament in the room of such whose seats shall become vacant under the provisions of this Act.

4. Act may be repealed, &c.—And be it enacted, that this Act may be repealed, altered, or amended during this present session of Parliament.

A Bill intituled "An Act to facilitate the Admission in Evidence of certain official and other Documents."

Certain documents to be received in evidence without proof of seal or signature, &c. of person signing the same.—Whereas it is provided by many statutes that various certificates, official and public documents, documents and proceedings of corporations and of joint stock and other companies, and certified copies of documents, by-laws, entries in registers and other books, shall be receivable in evidence of certain particulars in courts of justice, provided they be respectively authenticated in the manner prescribed by such statutes: and whereas the beneficial effect of these provisions has been found by experience to be greatly diminished by the difficulty of proving that the said documents are genuine; and it is expedient to facilitate the admission in evidence of such and the like documents: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that whenever by any Act now in force or hereafter to be in force any certificate, official or public document, or document or proceeding of any corporation or joint stock or other company, or any certified copy of any document, by-law, entry in any register or other book, or of any other proceeding, shall be receivable in evidence of any particular in any court of justice or in any judicial proceeding, the same shall respectively be admitted in evidence, provided they respectively purport to be sealed or impressed with a stamp, or sealed and signed, or signed alone, as required, or impressed with a stamp and signed, as directed by the respective Acts made or to be hereafter made, without any proof of the seal or stamp, where a seal or stamp is necessary, or of the signature or of the official character of the person appearing to have signed the same.

2. Courts, judges, &c. to take judicial notice of signature of equity or common law judges, &c.—And be it enacted, that all courts, judges, justices, masters in Chancery, masters of courts, commissioners judicially acting, and other judicial officers shall henceforth take judicial notice of the signature of any of the equity or common law judges of the superior courts at Westminster, provided such signature be attached or appended to any decree, order, certificate, or other judicial or official document.

6. Remuneration for deed under the Act not to be by length only.—That in taxing any bill for preparing and executing any deed under this Act it shall be lawful for the taxing officer, and he is hereby required, in estimating the proper sum to be charged for such transaction, to consider, not only the length of such deed, but the skill and labour employed and responsibility incurred in the preparation thereof.

7. Deed failing to take effect by this Act to be as valid as if Act not made.—That any deed which shall fail to take effect by virtue of this Act shall nevertheless be as valid and effectual, and shall bind the parties thereto, so far as the rules of law and equity will permit, as if this Act had not been made.

CRIMINAL FEES.

A Bill for further securing the rights of accused persons, and for abolishing certain fees in criminal courts, was presented and read a first time, and ordered to be read a second time on Monday, 21st. This Bill proposes to enact, "that the plea of Not Guilty is the free, undoubted, and unconditional right of every subject of this realm accused of any crime or misdemeanor; and that from and after the passing of this Act it shall not be lawful for any officer of any court of criminal jurisdiction in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or for any other person whatsoever, to take or demand from any person accused of any crime or misdemeanor any fee or payment whatsoever, either before, at, or after trial, or before, at, or after any summary proceedings before one or more justice or justices of the peace, other than such proper and legal fine as the said court, or justice or justices of the peace, before whom such person shall have been tried or summarily convicted, are or shall be authorized to impose as a punishment for the offence for which such person shall have been tried and found guilty, or summarily convicted.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SMALL DEBTS (No. 3) BILL.

TUESDAY, July 22.—On the motion of the SOLICITOR-GENERAL, the House went into committee on this bill.

After a few words from the SOLICITOR-GENERAL, in moving the order of the day, Mr. WAKLEY said he must enter his protest against proceeding with the bill, because, since the bill was brought down from the other house, thirteen new clauses had been introduced, and three schedules had been added, which honourable members had never before seen.—Sir JAMES GRAHAM said he was very sorry that, owing to a mistake of the printer, the bill had not been put into the hands of honourable members at an earlier period. If the honourable member pressed his motion, he (Sir James Graham) should not think he was doing his duty if he did not at once accede to it. He did not think, however, that there was any thing in the new clauses that would be found objectionable, and he would postpone the bill till Thursday.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE objected very strongly to that part of the bill providing that the wages of workmen should be arrested in the hands of their masters for the payment of their debts. He objected to that clause operating in any case, except that of yearly salaries. Weekly wages were very uncertain, sometimes more, sometimes less. If that part of the bill were persisted in, he thought that it would be found to operate to the extreme dissatisfaction of all parties.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL said he thought that the effect of that part of the bill had been misapprehended by the honourable member. The clause objected to contained no power for the attachment of wages on their passage from the hands of the master to the workman. It would only operate in cases where the wages were more than sufficient to supply the means of life, in which case the surplus would be attached, and that only on the order of a judge.—Sir J. GRAHAM said he had collected from the honourable gentleman that it would be agreeable to all parties to postpone the bill till to-morrow.

FEES (CRIMINAL COURT) BILL.

On the order of the day for the second reading of this bill, Mr. ESCOTT said a person who was accused of a criminal offence might plead guilty or not, as he thought proper, and no court of justice could properly inflict any other mulct than the legal fine. He trusted then that the present bill would not be opposed. He had been charged with attempting to abolish fees without giving compensation. But fees meant a legal charge, not an extortionate demand, such as he contended were the fees he had pointed out. He had carefully looked into the law, and could find no Act of Parliament that sanctioned such fees. The only colour for the demand was the permission given to the justices to make a table of fees; but then this Act only contemplated fees that were legal, not such gross and extortionate demands as he had pointed out to the House. He was surprised to find, now he had brought in a bill to abolish this shocking system, that any hon. member should get up and object to the measure. He trusted, as he had made manifest a gross abuse, requiring legislative remedy, that the House would consent to the second reading of the bill.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said the House must take care that it was not hurried into rash legislation by the creditable warmth of feeling displayed by the hon. and learned member. If the House were so carried away, hon. members would possibly find that a sure had passed which, instead of doing good, would cause much mischief. No doubt the hon. and learned member had pointed out great abuses; those abuses ought to be done away with, and he (the Attorney-General) was ready to go along with the hon. and learned member in supporting any well-considered measure for that purpose; but then, looking at the bill before the House, and taking into consideration its scope and tendency, he was afraid the hon. and learned member had gone too far. The bill in question went to abolish many fees that certainly ought not in fairness to be abolished. With respect to fees on acquittal, the 55 Geo. 3 entirely abolished those fees. This Act recognised the principle for which the hon. and learned member contended; but he admitted it did not go far enough. It did not embrace some of those cases pointed out by the hon. and learned member, and so far he agreed with the views of the hon. and learned member. For instance, he thought that parties ought not to be required to pay fees before allowed to plead, nor should those who traversed, except for their own convenience, be called on to pay fees—much less those who had stood their trial, and had been acquitted. But then it was, in his judgment, going too far to abolish all fees secured and allowed by numerous Acts of Parliament. He thought to do this would be a dangerous and hasty piece of legislation. Undoubtedly, there were cases in which fees were much higher than the fines inflicted, and it might be wise to apply a legislative remedy to such an evil; but this was not a sufficient reason for abolishing fees altogether. Unless, therefore, his hon. friend should confine his bill within those limits which he thought safe, and which he had mentioned, he should be obliged to give it his decided opposition.—Mr. AGLIONBY said he thought the bill was much needed, and that it had been very properly brought in. He was sorry the Attorney-General objected to some parts of it, but he thought that was no reason why they should not give it a second reading. He would therefore suggest that they should do so, and that his learned friend should consider the Attorney-General's suggestions, and either amend the bill or take the sense of the House upon it in committee. (Hear, hear.)—Sir J. GRAHAM said that on a former occasion the question had been raised, whether parties acquitted for misdemeanors should be liable to payment of fees, and he then stated that he doubted whether such fees were legal, and that it was certainly not advisable they should be exacted. He was still quite ready to admit that such persons, and persons who were out on bail, or were compelled to plead, should not be liable to payment of fees, but he was not prepared to carry the principle any further.—The House then divided:—

The Bill was then read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the law relating to real property, which was brought in accordingly, and read a first time.

WEDNESDAY, July 23.—The Real Property (No. 3) Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed.—The Darby Court (Westminster) Bill; the Stamp Duties, &c. Bill, and the Militia Pay Bill were each read a third time and passed.

SMALL DEBTS (No. 3) BILL.

On the motion of the ATTORNEY-GENERAL, the House went into committee on this Bill; the several clauses were agreed to, and the report ordered to be received to-morrow (Thursday).—The Lunatics Bill was read a third time and passed.—Mr. SPOONER moved the third reading of the Duddeston and Nechells Improvement Bill.—Mr. MUNTZ opposed the Bill, and moved that it be read a third time that day three months. After a short discussion, the House divided; the numbers were—

For the amendment	.. ..	52
Against it	.. ..	75
Majority against the amendment		—23

The Bill was then read a third time.

COUNTY-RATES.

The House then went into committee on the County Rates Bill. On clause 7 a division took place. The numbers were—

For the clause	.. ..	43
Against it	.. ..	11
Majority for the clause	.. ..	—32

Mr. HAWES complained that this Bill preserved all the inequalities as regarded assessment which were connected with the old County Rates Act, and were the opprobrium of the system. He would be glad to know whether the Bill had received the sanction of her Majesty's Government.—Mr. GRANGER thought it most remarkable that, in a Bill with respect to county-rates, so important an element as the returns of the income and property tax should have been wholly omitted.—Lord G. SOMERSET stated, in answer to the question of the hon. member for Lambeth, that he had read the clauses, and, without going into their general merits, was prepared to say that he approved of them.—After a few words from Mr. DARBY, Mr. G. PALMER, Mr. DICKINSON, and Sir J. Y. BULLER, the remaining clauses and the preamble were agreed to, the House resumed, and the Bill was ordered to be reported to-morrow.

SMALL DEBTS (No. 3) BILL.

THURSDAY, July 24.—Mr. GREENE brought up the report of this Bill, which was agreed to, and some clauses being added, the Bill was ordered to be printed as amended, and to be read a third time on Monday next (at twelve o'clock).

REMOVAL OF PAUPERS BILL.

The House resolved into committee on this Bill. The several clauses were agreed to, after some conversation on the desirableness (if it had been practicable) of removing Irish paupers to the very place of their former abode, and not merely to the port nearest to it. The Bill was reported. The report to be received to-morrow (Friday), at twelve o'clock.—The Taxing Masters Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill went through committee.—The Turnpike Roads (Ireland) Bill and the Documentary Evidence Bill went through committees, and were ordered to be reported to-morrow (Friday), at twelve o'clock.—The Real Property (No. 1) Bill, and the Assignment of Terms Bill, also went through committee.—The Granting of Leases Bill, and the Real Property (No. 3) Bill, passed through committee.

FEES (CRIMINAL COURTS) BILL.

Mr. ESCOTT, in moving the order of the day for going into committee on this bill, said it appeared to him that a number of hon. members, who had intimated their intention to vote against it were unaware of the grievances it sought to remedy. All that this bill sought to do was to protect an accused person from being put to the necessity of buying his right of pleading, and right of trial, by the payment of exorbitant fees. If he had not the money, the practice was to refuse him the right of pleading. That was the general practice. He had seen it repeatedly; and he had affidavits in his possession of cases of which he had not himself been witness, that it was the constant practice to refuse one charged with a misdemeanor the right of pleading "Not guilty" unless he paid the fees. He was sent back, brought up again at a subsequent session, and that was continued until either the fee was extorted, or it was found that the party really could not pay it. That was the practice in the county where he resided—Somersetshire. It was the same in Devonshire and Dorsetshire, and, in fact, in all the counties where the taking of fees was tolerated: but in 32 counties the practice was abandoned, and he now wanted that to declared to be the law, and that in the whole of the counties of England and Wales the same practice should be carried into operation under this bill. A distinction had been attempted to be drawn between the case of a party acquitted and that of a party convicted; but he was confident that if the House attended to the principle on which that distinction rested, they would see that there was no difference whatever between the two cases. What was the difference between charging a man who was innocent with fees to the amount of 3*l*. and one who was found guilty of an offence the fine for which was 1s. with fees to the same amount? In the one case, the man paid 3*l*. which he ought not to pay, the other 2*l*. 19s. Both cases were equally unjust. Justice could not be done unless they decided that no money (he admitted that it could not be demanded legally now) should be demanded from any person charged with a crime, except that penalty which the Court had a right to inflict, to punish him for the offence with which he was charged. He had been at a great loss to know why this Bill should be opposed. He had never found any person who was not a friend of the parties who demanded these fees who upheld them. It was merely a question of money. The difficulty was this, that these fees formed a convenient way, except to the parties who paid them, of paying certain officers of certain courts. (Hear, hear.) It was most important that the criminal courts of justice in this country should be freed from this stain, and until they were so, the law would not be loved as it ought to be, or the administrators of that law properly respected.—Sir J. GRAHAM said, the hon. and learned gentleman had himself shewn that this Bill was in fact unnecessary, for he had said that the law did not justify the exaction of those fees at that moment. If that were so, then he (Sir J. Graham) was decidedly opposed to all useless legislation. He differed from his hon. friend entirely with regard to persons found guilty. He thought that every person found guilty should have to pay a portion, at any rate, of the costs incurred.—Lord J. MANNERS hoped the House would, at any rate, proceed to the extent which the right hon. baronet, as a responsible adviser of the Government, felt it his duty to recommend.—Mr. G. PALMER supported the Bill.—Dr. BOWRING agreed with the hon. member for Winchester, inasmuch as no fees bought to be charged either on acquittal or conviction; and he trusted that the virtuous attempt of the hon. gentleman would be attended with success.—Mr. DARBY thought that the Bill went too far; he feared, in fact, that it would abolish altogether the just fees generally exacted in criminal cases.—Sir J. GRAHAM gave notice that, if the House rejected this Bill, he would be prepared to place on the table to-morrow a Bill abolishing all fees in criminal courts, both on pleading and on acquittal.—After a few words from Mr. P. Borthwick, Colonel Rolleston, and Mr. J. O'Connell, Mr. ESCOTT said, he had not introduced this Bill until his right hon. friend had intimated his intention to give up a measure he had brought forward with a similar object. He would at once accept the offer of the right hon. gentleman, and congratulated the House that this important question would now receive the attention of that right hon. baronet.—The Bill was then, by leave, withdrawn.

SMALL DEBTS (No. 3) BILL.

FRIDAY, July 18.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL said that it was a matter of importance that this Bill should pass with as little delay as possible. He had communicated with several members who represented mercantile communities, and he had, in consequence, been enabled to put the Bill into such a form as he believed would be generally acceptable. With the view of introducing the alterations he alluded to, he should move that the Bill be then read a second time and committed pro formâ, and that it be reprinted, so as to be circulated to-morrow.—Mr. WAKLEY suggested that the nature of the alterations should be stated, or that the Bill should be delayed for two or three days.—Sir J. GRAHAM thought that if the House would assent to the suggestion of his honourable and learned friend at that period of the session, it would be the best course to pursue. His honourable and learned friend had several important alterations to introduce into the Bill, it therefore would be advisable at once to commit the Bill pro formâ.—The Bill was read a second time. The House resolved into committee on it. The amendments of the Solicitor-General were introduced into it. The House resumed, and the Bill was ordered to be recommitted on Monday.

An Act to empower Canal Companies and the Commissioners of navigable Rivers to vary their Tolls, Rates, and Charges on different parts of their Navigations. (June 30, 1845.)

The purport of this statute is declared in the title. It merely gives the power named, and provides that tolls so altered are to be charged equally to all persons under the circumstances; Sec. 3, that the Act shall not apply to existing companies, until a meeting of the shareholders shall have determined thereupon, nor in other cases until approved by trustees or proprietors, and notices thereof duly published. Sec. 4 saves the rights specifically reserved to canal companies and others by existing Acts of Parliament. Sec. 5 enacts that canal companies, subject to a limitation of profits, are not to raise their dues so as to exceed the maximum of profits. Sec. 6, that nothing herein is to exempt any canal, &c. from any general Act.

CAP. XXIX.

An Act to regulate the Labour of Children, Young Persons, and Women, in Print Works. (June 30, 1845.)

This statute is not of sufficient general interest to justify its insertion here.

CAP. XXX.

An Act to amend an Act passed in the Third and Fourth Years of the Reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the better Administration of Justice in his Majesty's Privy Council." (June 30, 1845.)

We present the Act entire.

1. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 41. Recited Provisions of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 41, not to apply to appeals admitted by Suddur Courts after 1st January, 1846.—Whereas by an Act passed in the session held in the third and fourth years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the better Administration of Justice in his Majesty's Privy Council, after reciting that various appeals to his Majesty in Council from the Courts of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut at the several presidencies of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, in the East Indies, had been admitted by the said Courts, and the transcripts of the proceedings in appeal had been from time to time transmitted under the seal of the said Courts through the East-India Company, then called the United Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies, to the office of his Majesty's said Privy Council, but that the suitors in the causes so appealed had not taken the necessary measures to bring on the same to a hearing, it was enacted that it should be lawful for his Majesty in Council to give such directions to the said company and other persons, for the purpose of bringing to a hearing before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council the several cases appealed or thereafter to be appealed to his Majesty in Council from the several Courts of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut in the East Indies, and for appointing agents and counsel for the different parties in such appeals, and to make such orders for the security and payment of the costs thereof as his said Majesty in Council should think fit, and thereupon such appeals should be heard and reported on to his Majesty in Council, and should be by his Majesty in Council determined, in the same manner, and the judgments, orders, and decrees of his Majesty in Council thereon should be of the same force and effect, as if the same had been brought to a hearing by the direction of the parties appealing, in the usual course of proceeding: provided always, that such last-mentioned powers should not extend to any appeals from the said Courts of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut other than appeals on which no proceedings then had been or should hereafter be taken in England on either side for a period of two years subsequent to the admission of the appeal by such Court of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut: and whereas by certain orders in council made under certain powers contained in the said Act provision is made for registering in the council office the arrival in this country of the transcripts of the proceedings in appeals from the said courts: and whereas it is considered advisable that the said Act should be amended in manner hereinafter mentioned: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That the hereinbefore recited provisions of the said Act shall not apply to the case of any appeal which shall be admitted by any of the said Courts of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut after the 1st day of January, 1846.

2. Appeals admitted after 1st of January, 1846, to be considered as abandoned by consent, unless, &c.—And be it enacted, That any appeal to be admitted by any of the said Courts of Suddur Dewanny Adawlut after the said 1st day of January, 1846, shall be considered and be held to be abandoned and withdrawn by consent of the parties thereto, unless some proceedings shall be taken in England in the same by one or more of the parties thereto within two years after registration at the council office of the arrival of the transcript; and any such appeal as aforesaid shall be held to be abandoned and withdrawn in like manner under any other circumstances which her Majesty in Council may from time to time by any orders or rules in that behalf direct to be taken and considered as a withdrawal thereof; and the East-India Company are hereby required from time to time to ascertain and certify to the proper courts in the East-Indies all appeals which may from time to time become abandoned and dropped under the provisions of this clause.

CAP. XXXI.

An Act to facilitate the Transmission and Extinction of Heritable Securities for Debt in Scotland. (June 30, 1845.)

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

No incident has occurred requiring comment.

THE RIGHT OF ATTORNEYS' CLERKS TO CONDUCT CASES BEFORE MAGISTRATES.—Important Decision.—At the County Court, Bolton, on Thursday, the magistrates were engaged in hearing this question, involving the right of articled clerks to conduct cases on behalf of their employers. For a considerable time it has been customary at this court to allow clerks such privilege, but of late several solicitors have expressed their opinion to the effect that such a privilege materially affected the solicitors of this town. An objection was made on the 30th ult. by Mr. Taylor, solicitor, to the practice of attorneys' clerks pleading in that court, and an arrangement was then made to argue the question on this day. Mr. Holden being the senior solicitor who practises in this court, agreed to conduct the argument on behalf of the solicitors. Mr. Greenhalgh, clerk to Mr. Cross, and Mr. Richardson, clerk to Messrs. Winder and Broadbent, appeared to support their right to the privilege. The arguments pro and con. were proceeded with at great length, after the hearing of which the magistrates retired for consultation. After an absence of about an hour they returned, when Mr. Fletcher gave the following decision:—"We have come to a unanimous opinion on this subject. The construction we put on the Acts quoted is, that no person can act in this court as a pleader, or appear in any case as legal adviser, who is not duly qualified and enrolled as an attorney."—Mr. Holden then requested the Bench to make an entry to that effect in their minutes, to prevent the question being raised on any future occasion.—Mr. Fletcher stated that such entry should be made.—Manchester Times, July 12, 1845.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

ANOTHER double number enables us to bring up a considerable arrear of the written judgments; still however many remain to be reported, for which it is impossible to find room at present. Some other matters, of considerable interest to the Profession, will be found mooted elsewhere.

REVIEW OF DECISIONS IN THE EQUITY, BANKRUPTCY, AND ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS,

For the Half-year ending on the 1st of July, 1845.

BANKRUPTCY.

Attorney.—An attorney not admitted in bankruptcy is not entitled to practise in bankruptcy, through an agent duly admitted. (Re Williams, 5 Law T. 80.)

Choice of assignees.—Where the bankrupt was one of five trustees, and had received and misapplied a portion of the trust-money, and an order of the Court of Review was obtained by the other four trustees for liberty to go in under the fiat and tender a proof for the amount, this was held not to be such a debt as to entitle them to vote in the choice of assignees. (Ex parte Rowe, re Rowe, 4 Law T. 321.) Where no choice of assignees has been made, the sums of 20*l.* and 10*l.* under the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, ss. 46 and 55, are not payable. (Ex parte Miller, re Miller, 4 Law T. 473.) Adjourned meetings for the choice of assignees are within the exceptions of the 55th section. (Ibid.) On the annulling of the fiat, with the consent of the creditors, before a choice of assignees has been made, the official assignee is entitled to remuneration for his services. (Ibid.)

Clerk's salary.—A clerk, absent from illness, with the consent of his master for three months, before the bankruptcy, was allowed 30*l.* under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 28. (Ex parte Harris, re Closson, 5 Law T. 203.)

Contracting debt without ability to pay.—An insolvent who has given a bill of sale of his household goods, furniture, and stock in trade, and has contracted a subsequent debt, does so without reasonable assurance of being able to pay, and is not entitled to the benefit of the Act. (Re Clark, 4 Law T. 436.) The mere fact of being insolvent is not sufficient evidence of a party having contracted debts without reasonable assurance of being able to pay. (Re Lane, 5 Law T. 271.)

Costs—Statute of Limitations, &c.—The bill of a solicitor for fees and disbursements after the choice of assignees was, upon petition, ordered to be paid, though no item of the bill was within six years, the estate not being completely wound up and distributed; but the Statute of Limitations applies to cases of that sort. (Ex parte Brutton, re Fisher, 4 Law T. 321.) Where the bankrupt has obtained his certificate, and there has been no proof under the fiat, and no choice of assignees, and there exists a moral certainty that no choice will ever take place, the official assignee may pay over a small sum in his hands in discharge of the solicitor's costs without reserving the sums required to be paid under the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, ss. 46, 55. (Ex parte Teague, 4 Law T. 378.) Upon a petition by an assignee for leave to bid at the sale of property under the fiat, the bankrupt, who had been served with the petition was allowed his costs of appearance. (Ex parte Young, re Worth, 4 Law T. 473.) Expenses of witnesses summoned to prove an act of bankruptcy, but not examined, cannot be allowed. (Re ———, 4 Law T. 473.) A person summoned to be examined touching property of a bankrupt supposed to have been concealed by him, is not entitled to be paid his expenses before he is sworn or examined. (Re Lampan, 5 Law T. 179.)

Equitable mortgage—Interest.—In pursuance of an arrangement between trustees and their cestui que trust, an equitable mortgage was given to the latter for sums due by the trustees, and the trustees paid interest on the sums up to their bankruptcy. The Court allowed interest at the same rate to be continued from the date of the bankruptcy, although no mention of interest was made in the memorandum given by the trustees upon the equitable mortgage being made. (Ex parte Mayor, re Solly, 4 Law T. 399.)

Proof of debt.—The owner of one moiety of a vessel cannot prove against the estate of the bankrupt owner of the other moiety, for half the money paid by him for stores supplied (previous to the execution of the transfer of the moiety to the bankrupt) for the use of the vessel on an intended voyage at the joint risk (Re Hemsworth, 5 Law T. 179); and a subsequent agreement must be in writing. (Ibid.) Where a bankrupt had agreed to accept a composition from a debtor, and give him a release, and the debtor had subsequently become a creditor of the estate, before such creditor can prove, he must produce the release. (Re Lacey and Yates, 5 Law T. 203.) A business being given to a solicitor by will, on condition of admitting an infant to the business at twenty-one, and in default to pay 1,000*l.* he becomes bankrupt during the minority, and the 1,000*l.* is held to be provable against his estate. (Ex parte Megarey, re Megarey, 5 Law T. 203.) The father of an infant received a legacy on his account, and invested it in securities out of the ordinary course, and he became bankrupt; the cestui que trust could elect to take the securities and profits, or prove for the legacy and interest. (Ex parte Montefiore, 5 Law T. 222.) Vendors may prove for loss of price in a sale to a second purchaser against the estate of a first, who did not complete his purchase. (Re John Peters, 5 Law T. 222.)

Protection of the Court—Contempt, &c.—The officer of the sheriff is bound to take notice of the protection of the Court on its production to him; and the commissioners' courts, being courts of record, have power to punish for contempt and to grant costs. (Re Day, 4 Law T. 419.) A person being in contempt of the Insolvent Debtors Court for disobedience to an order made by it on an application for his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Acts, petitioned the Court of Bankruptcy for his discharge under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, and obtained an interim order. On application for his final order, the commissioner, by an order stating the circumstances of the case, remanded him to his former custody. The Court of Review, upon a petition of appeal, had no jurisdiction. (Ex parte Newlands, re Newlands, 4 Law T. 473; and see 5 Law T. 19.) Quære as to the appeal from such an order?

Shewing cause against final order of an insolvent.—The opposition by a creditor to the final order of an insolvent who has petitioned the Court for protection, will be restricted to matters in which the creditor has an interest. (Re Lazarus Alman, 4 Law T. 273.)

Statement of value of an insolvent's estate.—The statement in the petition of the value of the insolvent's estate must include all his estate, whether incumbered or unincumbered, notwithstanding the word "unincumbered" is in the form of the petition. (Re John Jones, 4 Law T. 453.) The word "unincumbered" in the form refers to the word "value," and not to the estate. (Ibid.)

Vexatious defence.—The Court refused to order an insolvent's discharge, for having vexatiously defended an action. (Re Margaret Parry, 4 Law T. 440.) Having defended an action with reasonable grounds of doing so is no ground of opposition, but if the defence was vexatious, the final order will be refused. (Re John Jones, 4 Law T. 453.)

To demise and repair.—Where the appellant had entered into a contract to demise certain premises for a term to the respondents, and previously to the commencement of the term to repair the old premises and build a new warehouse, and the respondents entered accordingly at the day agreed upon, but before the appellant had completed the building and repairs, and before the lease was executed, and a fire soon after destroyed the premises, the respondents were not bound to demise and rebuild, the contract not being completed, and till then the premises being at the appellant's risk. (Counter v. M'Pherson, 4 Law T. 449.)

COSTS.

Delivery of bill of costs—Signing.—Sending a packet containing a bill of costs, which is afterwards sworn to as being received, is sufficient delivery within the Act, especially when referred to in a letter afterwards. (Ex parte Burr, 5 Law T. 123.) Special applications are not required by the Act, only the common order with special directions, which the secretary at the Rolls has orders to give generally. (Ibid.) A bill of costs may be referred for taxation, though delivered unsigned, or unreferred to by any letter accompanying it. (Re Pender, 5 Law T. 170.) Where a solicitor transacts business for a client in his personal character, and other business for him in his representative character, and delivers bills for each, there ought to be two distinct orders for taxation. (Ibid.) It is irregular to obtain the common order to tax directing the delivery up of all papers on payment of what is due, there being other papers than those relating to the bill. (Ibid.)

Suing in formâ pauperis.—Where a petition is presented in two causes, in one of which the petitioner has an order to sue in formâ pauperis, but not in the other, the costs of such petition, on its being dismissed, may be apportioned. (St. Victor v. Devereux, 4 Law T. 470.)

Suit.—The executors of an insolvent who had been one of several trustees who committed a breach of trust, are entitled, as between party and party, to their costs of a suit relating thereto, to which they are made parties, the estate being administered, and no inquiry having been made as to the insolvency. (Norton v. Pritchard, 5 Law T. 2.)

Taxation of, &c.—Several cases have come before the Master of the Rolls, in which the parties had entered into a special agreement as to the payment of costs, and he has over and over again held that he has no jurisdiction to construe such agreements on petition. It is only where the parties are agreed as to the effect of the agreement that he will take the petition into consideration. If there be a dispute, they must proceed by bill. Instances are to be found in Re The Great Western Railway Acts (4 Law T. 250); Re Thompson (4 Law T. 251); Re Elderton (4 Law T. 310), &c. On a reference to tax, leave to exhibit a special interrogatory as to the possession of papers will not be granted. (Re Burt, ex parte Nash, 5 Law T. 190.) If an order for taxation be refused by a common-law judge, who has competent jurisdiction to decide upon the question, it will not be reconsidered in equity. (Re Wheeler, 4 Law T. 251.) The Vice-Chancellors have jurisdiction to make orders for the taxation of bills of costs as well as the Master of the Rolls, though the latter and the Lord Chancellor only are mentioned in the Solicitors Act. (Re Carew, 4 Law T. 310.) A solicitor need not wait till the end of the suit to have his costs taxed, if it be delayed by the obstinate conduct of some of the defendants; and he is entitled to a stop order on funds in court to the credit of the plaintiff, if another solicitor is about to be appointed. (Hobson v. Shearwood, 5 Law T. 19.) The expenses of a short-hand writer's notes of the judge's charge and evidence will not be allowed on taxation, the judge's notes and counsel's notes being considered the legitimate sources of information. (Malins v. Price, 5 Law T. 143.) After payment of the bill within the year, objectionable items, though not the only thing to be considered when taxation is asked for, must be stated either alone or along with other special circumstances. (Re Thompson, 4 Law T. 330.) It is irregular for one of two executors who is beneficially interested to obtain an order for taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs for conveyancing, &c. done for the executors, as between the solicitor and executor, and not as between him and the executors. (Re Perkins and Gepp, 4 Law T. 472.) The true construction of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 38, is that a third party, liable to pay costs originally payable by a client to his solicitor, stands, on a reference to tax, in the same situation as the client himself, and the costs must be taxed as between solicitor and client. (Re Thompson, 4 Law T. 330.)

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

Costs.—If a parish permit a long accumulation of arrears of church-rates, and then suing, will, for such neglect, be left to pay its own cost (Blount v. Fife, 5 Law T. 151.)

Divorce.—Misrepresentation by the wife of her name and circumstances is no ground for annulling a marriage. (Clowes v. Clowes, 5 Law T. 153.) Malicious desertion does not of itself bar the husband's suit for a divorce by reason of the adultery of his wife. (Ibid.)

Faculty.—The Court will not confirm a faculty for a stone altar and credence-table in a parish church, the same not being a communion-table according to the canons and statutes. (Faulkner v. Litchfield and Stearn, 5 Law T. 21.) This is a very important judgment in reference to the views of the leading parties in the Church.

Jurisdiction.—The bishop in whose diocese an offence is committed by a clerk holding preferment in another diocese, may issue a commission of inquiry, and if the commissioner report that there is primâ facie ground for the complaint, the bishop of the diocese in which the defendant holds his preferment is to proceed. (The office, &c. by Homer and Bloomer v. Jones, 4 Law T. 440.)

Will—Cancellation—Tearing.—A testator had given instructions for a new will, but died before it could be executed. A former will, written on very brittle paper, was found in a box tied up with a draft of the new will, but divided in the middle, the seal and signatures remaining, and there being no other sign of cancelling; the circumstances were not considered to raise a sufficient presumption that the paper was torn for the purpose of revoking, the probability being that it was occasioned by the wear and tear of a brittle paper. (Bigge v. Bigge, 4 Law T. 471.)

EVIDENCE.

Absence.—A person entitled to a share in a sum of money after the death of the life-tenant went abroad many years before that event, and had not since been heard of. His share was ordered to be paid to the other parties, on the presumption, from the evidence, that he died before the life-tenant. (Rolfe v. Wright, 4 Law T. 431.)

INSURANCE.

Compensation.—Where compensation for loss, &c. is received from other parties, the underwriters are discharged from all claim. (White v. Dobbinson, 5 Law T. 233.) And where they have paid the loss, and the insured afterwards obtains compensation from other persons, they have a claim to be repaid. (Ibid.)

JURISDICTION.

Agent of foreign government.—A person sent by the Spanish government to pay certain claims of the British Auxiliary Legion of Spain, and entirely bound by the directions of the Spanish ambassador here, is not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court. (Service v Castaneda, 5 Law T. 143.)

LUNATIC.

Jurisdiction.—A lunatic will be permitted, under particular circumstances, to reside out of the jurisdiction of the Court, if security be given by some one resident within the jurisdiction that he will be brought back if required by the Chancellor. (Re Jones, 4 Law T. 249.)

Practice.—The committee of a lunatic will be permitted to oppose a railway bill injuriously affecting his property. (Re Dynely, 5 Law T. 233.) Where the only object of the petitioner for a commission in lunacy is to protect the person and property of the alleged lunatic, it will be granted. (Re Woodcock, 4 Law T. 289.) Intervals of long continuance, during which the lunatic may conduct himself rationally, form no grounds for refusing a commission if it is in fact shewn that delusions exist. (Re Watts, 4 Law T. 389.) A sum will be allowed the lunatic to contest his lunacy. (Re Nelson, 4 Law T. 409.)

MARRIED WOMAN.

Wife's reversionary interest, &c., assignment of by husband.—A wife being entitled to a reversionary legacy, her husband assigned it by way of mortgage, and survived the period appointed for payment; on the authority of Elwin v. Williams (12 L. J. N.S. 440), the assignment was held void against the wife surviving. (Ashby v. Ashby, 4 Law T. 252.) Quære, what effect would a release of the property by the husband for valuable consideration have had? A settlement on marriage of a woman's property was made to herself for life, and, after her death, for the children of the marriage equally, with a power to the trustees to advance one-half their presumptive shares, with her consent. She married a second time, and she and her husband, for valuable consideration, assigned the life-interest; she could nevertheless exercise the power of advancement. (Whitmarsh v. Robinson, 4 Law T. 372.)

Separate use—Restraint on alienation.—The law of separate use containing terms of restriction on alienation is in a somewhat unsettled state, from the effect of late decisions, the alienation clause being sometimes held to affect only the power of appointment, and in other cases to be applicable only to the interest in default. In Barrymore v. Ellis (8 Sim. 1), it was held that a limitation as the married woman should appoint, but not so as to anticipate, and in default, then to her for her sole use, only restrained the appointment, and gave an uncontrolled authority over the interest. The Vice-Chancellor put stress upon the words, "to her for her separate use," not being "to pay into her proper hands, for, &c." Again, in Brown v. Bamford (11 Sim. 127), the same decision was made. There there was a receipt clause, that the receipts of the lady should be good discharges; but the Vice-Chancellor said, to make it of any efficacy as a restraint, there ought to have been added, "and no other receipts shall be good discharges." But in Medley v. Horton (13 Law J. 442), the limitation was, as the married woman should appoint, and in default to be paid into her proper hands for her separate use, and her receipts alone to be sufficient discharges to the trustees, and it was held that the restraint only applied to the estate, not to the general power of appointment. In the case of Moore v. Moore (1 Coll. 54), however, Knight Bruce, V.C., decided that, under a limitation exactly like that in Barrymore v. Ellis (though he professed to see a distinction, without saying in what it consisted), the restraint applied both to the power and the estate in default. And in Baggett v. Meux (1 Coll. 138), the same judge decided that the anticipation clause, placed after the power of appointment and before the estate in default, was both retrospective and prospective. In Harrop v. Howard (3 Hare, 624; 4 Law T. 352), it has been decided that negative words need not be introduced into the receipt clause to complete the restraint on anticipation, for that clause must be construed to relate to the income, subject to such restraints as are imposed by the former part of the settlement. Lastly, in Harnett v. M'Dougall (5 Law T. 18), the Master of the Rolls refused to give effect to a charge on her income by a married woman to whom funds were limited as she should appoint, but with the anticipation clause, and in default, to her to her separate use. The case of Brown v. Bamford is now before the Lord Chancellor on appeal, and has been twice argued before him, and is now waiting judgment.

MORTGAGE.

Fraud.—A farmer who had a mortgage upon property delivered all the title-deeds, except the deed assigning the mortgage to himself, to his solicitor, with a view to a sale. The solicitor sold the property and absconded; no inquiry till then having been made as to the deeds, the farmer was not held liable as a party to the fraud.

Pension—Mortgage, assignment of.—A pension granted in compensation to a clerk of the Transport Office, after the abolition thereof, is assignable. (Barry v. Disney, 4 Law T. 471.)

Priority—Laches.—In an administration suit, a bond creditor, being also equitable mortgagee, comes into the Master's office under the decree, and claims the debt on bond, suggesting the mortgage claim, but taking no further steps respecting it for six or seven years. The assets, however, turning out insufficient, he then presents his petition to prove his lien, and thereby gain priority over a specialty creditor: it was dismissed with costs. (Cattel v. Symons, 4 Law T. 350.)

Redemption.—A mortgagor cannot, before the day mentioned to redeem, compel a mortgagee to receive the principal, interest, and costs in full up to the day of redemption, and to reconvey to the mortgagor. (Brown v. Cole, 5 Law T. 2.) The death of the mortgagee of real estate is the period to be considered as to the question whether the mortgage is absolute or subject to redemption, and whether his wife be dowable thereout. (Flack v. Longmate, 5 Law T. 35.)

Repairs, improvements, &c.—A mortgagee in possession will be allowed to charge for repairs, but not alterations or improvements without the mortgagor's consent; and he will be held liable for injury to the mortgaged property, by pulling down cottages and erecting buildings of a different description. In case of a suit for redemption, also, if the mortgagee claims for lasting improvements, but does not prove his expenditure, and the mortgagor shews that the value of the property has been depreciated by the mortgagee's alterations, the latter will not be entitled to an inquiry. (Sandon v. Hooper, 4 Law T. 269.)

PATENT.

Reference to the Solicitor-General.—Where there is a dispute as to the priority of two conflicting patents for the same invention, the course is to refer it to the Solicitor-General to ascertain if they clash, and if so, then who first invented, not who first presented his petition. (Re Griffiths's Patent, Re Samuda's Patent, 5 Law T. 141.) The report of the Solicitor-General on a patent needs no confirmation. In the case of rival patents, the matter is referred to the Solicitor-General, who reports to the Chancellor for his information, and then it is in the discretion of the latter whether he will affix the great seal or not. (Re Prosser's Patent, Re Pinkus's Patent, 5 Law T. 189.)

PRACTICE.

Contempt.—Where a defendant is in custody for contempt in not putting in an answer, and (an answer having been subsequently put in) the plaintiff files a replication, that is a waiver of the contempt, and the defendant is entitled to be discharged without payment of costs. (Oldfield v. Cobbett, 4 Law T. 390.) But though the defendant does so become entitled to be discharged as to the original contempt, yet he remains liable to the costs on subsequent unsuccessful applications to be discharged. (Ibid.) A prisoner in contempt for want of answer, though entitled to his discharge under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 15, r. 13, yet, if justice cannot be done without detaining him, the Court will do so. (Fox v. Whitmore, 5 Law T. 234.)

Correction of mistake in answer after replication.—Where a defendant, speaking in his answer to the best of his belief, has made a mistake in the date of an important document, he will be allowed to correct that mistake by a supplemental answer, even after replication, and when the case has for some time stood in the paper for hearing; and that, notwithstanding the effect of the alteration of date may be entirely to displace the plaintiff's claim. (Fulton v. Gilmore, 4 Law T. 329.) A plaintiff who after replication examines a defendant as a witness, who, by some omission, has neglected to release his interest in the suit, may nevertheless, upon proving the release to have been executed afterwards, use the depositions as if the release had been made prior to the examination. (Knight v. Morrell, 4 Law T. 410.)

Delay in applying.—An application to discharge for irregularity the common order at the Rolls, in a cause depending before a Vice-Chancellor, should be made as early as practicable. (St. Victor v. Devereux, 4 Law T. 470.)

Impertinence.—Where an agreement was set out in verbis, and there being many transactions to be stated in the bill, the plaintiff, after setting out the agreement, repeated a part of it as an introduction to a branch of the transactions, such repetition was not held impertinent. (Foster v. Breynton, 4 Law T. 452.)

Infant.—A bill may be filed in the name of an infant married woman by her next friend, without her consent. (Wortham v. Pemberton, 5 Law T. 2.)

Injunction.—After the passing of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, an order for the committal of a person to the Fleet for contempt for breach of an injunction having become inoperative, and the party having evaded the service of the order for several years, but not having again committed a breach of the injunction, a motion to review the order and commit the party to the Queen's Bench Prison was refused as too severe. (St. John's College, Oxford, v. Pratt, 1 Law T. 271.)

Motions.—Notice of motion may be given for any day of the Term, provided the usual time is allowed to intervene between the service and hearing; but the Court will only hear the motion on seal days. (Stow v. Fell, 4 Law T. 471.) Motions before the Lord Chancellor are not strictly appeal motions, and it is no objection to such motions that the terms of the notice of motion vary from those of the original motion in the court below. (Lidgett v. Williams, 5 Law T. 169.) When the Court permits a motion to stand over to answer an affidavit, it is an indulgence to be granted at the discretion of the Court on terms. (Damer v. Lord Portarlington, 5 Law T. 189.)

Opening biddings.—The biddings on a sale by the Court will not be opened as of course upon a sufficient advance of price being offered, if the tenure of the property be precarious, as upon life, &c. (Wallond v. Wallond, 5 Law T. 142.)

Orders.—Orders under the Act 1 Vict. c. 91, and the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 52, are imperative on the Court, and they have no discretion respecting them. (Calvert v. Gandy, 4 Law T. 371.) The 5th Order of 1828 requires exceptions to be referred not before eight days, nor after fourteen; and if the order to refer the exceptions, though obtained, is not served within the fourteen days, it is to be considered as abandoned. (Dalton v. Hayter, 4 Law T. 489.) Notwithstanding the 9th and 10th Orders of the 26th of October, 1842, the ordinary Master is the proper person to whom to refer the question as to just and proper sums to be allowed to an accountant for his time and labour. (Hughes v. Wynne, 4 Law T. 351; id. 17.)

Production of documents.—Where a fact is neither admitted nor denied by the defendant in his answer, affidavits will not be admitted to be read on an interlocutory application to substantiate that fact. (Edwards v. Jones, 4 Law T. 249.) Where a list of documents is set out in the schedule to an answer, and it is expressly denied that such documents evidence or relate to the plaintiff's title, such documents will not be ordered to be produced. That was the decision in Adams v. Fisher (3 Myl. & Cr. 526), and because the denial was not sufficient, production was ordered in Edwards v. Jones (4 Law T. 129). Documents mentioned in the answer to be in the defendant's possession, but not scheduled, and alleged by the defendants, to the best of their knowledge and belief, not to relate to the matters in question, were ordered to be produced. (Attorney-General v. Berry, 5 Law T. 35.)

Second rehearing.—Though a defendant who is in contempt for non-payment of costs is entitled to be heard on an application to discharge the very order in respect of which he is in contempt, that does not entitle him to apply for a second rehearing until the costs awarded against him on the first have been paid. (Needham v. Needham, 4 Law T. 309.)

Service of subpœna.—Where a party is resident abroad, a subpœna to answer a bill may be served on a solicitor who has a general power to act for that party in all matters connected with the subject of the suit. (Murray v. Vibart, 4 Law T. 310, 350.) Where a husband and wife were defendants in a suit, and the wife had appeared to and answered the original bill, and the husband, on being served with a subpœna for himself and wife to a bill of revivor, entered an appearance for himself, but refused to do so for the wife, the Court gave the plaintiff leave to enter one for her under the 8th Order of 1841. (Holcombe v. Trotter, 5 Law T. 36.)

Time.—An attachment may issue after the time for answering has expired, though the plaintiff has previously joined with the defendant in a commission to take the answer. The time is not thereby extended. (Boschetti v. Power, 4 Law T. 490.)

STATUTES, CONSTRUCTION OF.

Construction of the Stat. 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76.—The appointment of a new town-clerk amounts to a removal of the old, under the Act, though the latter does not offer himself for re-appointment. (Attorney-General v. The Mayor of Poole, 4 Law T. 272.)

Compensation under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76.—Any office held by a town-clerk, which is appendant or appurtenant to, or usually held with the office of town-clerk, though not a corporate one, is an office for the loss of which compensation is to be allowed. (Ibid.)

Construction of the 56 Geo. 3, c. 60.—Executors by accident overlook stock standing in the name of their testator, which, under the above Act, is transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. A person pretending to be grandson and residuary legatee of the testator obtains probate of a paper purporting to be the will, and gets a transfer of the stock at the bank, and being convicted of forgery and transported, the executors of the real will were held entitled to a transfer from the commissioners. (Ex parte Joliffe, 4 Law T. 309.)

Stamp Act.—A cheque directed to "A. B. and Co. bankers, L." without any other mention of the place of issuing the cheque, is not within the exceptions from the Stamp Act, and, being unstamped, is void. (Bond v. Warden, 4 Law T. 451.)

Construction of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 40, s. 12.—The bankers of a friendly society, which, by its rules required the treasurer not to retain any sums which might be in his hands beyond a certain amount, are not to be considered officers of the society within the 4 & 5 Wm. c. 40, s. 12.

TITLE.

Judgment creditors.—Under a decree in a suit by simple creditors of a testator, a sale was directed, and an objection raised to the title to one of the lots which had descended to the testator's heir-at-law from his brother, a devisee under the will, by reason of certain unsatisfied incumbrances against the heir-at-law, whose judgment creditors were not before the Court, was held to be a good objection. (Parkinson v. Piper, 4 Law T. 410.)

TRUSTS.

Composition of debts.—Trustees are not justified without an express authority, to compound debts, however expedient and beneficial such composition may be shewn to be. (Samuel v. Gibbs, 4 Law T. 311.)

Liability of trustees.—An executor directed to invest in real or sufficient securities on trust is liable for loss sustained by leaving the assets in a firm even of which his co-executor is a partner. (Fulton v. Gilmore, 4 Law T. 392; Ib. 4 Law T. 431.)

Power of sale.—By a power of sale to trustees of a marriage settlement, "to sell out the trust funds and invest the produce thereof, and they were thereby authorized and required, at the request of husband and wife, so to do, in freehold or copyhold hereditaments or terms for years, having at least 60 years to run, and of sufficient value, and situate in a convenient place," they are bound to sell and invest in town leasehold houses, and the only discretion they have is to see they are of the value and description intended. (Beauclerk v. Ashburnham, 4 Law T. 431.)

WILL.

Construction.—It is incumbent on those who contend that the word "surviving" is to be construed "other," to point out words in the context which authorize such a construction. (Cooper v Palmer, 4 Law T. 472.) The rules by which inconsistent clauses of a will are construed or rejected should be governed by the intention of the testator, apparent upon consideration of the whole will. (Marrall v. Sutton, 4 Law T. 1.)

Cumulative legacies.—Where a testator has a certain kind of foreign stock, and by two different codicils refers in terms to that stock, and disposes of it to the same person by both codicils, it is a specific legacy, and the second gift is a substitution for the first, and not cumulative. (Marquis of Hertford v. Lord Lowther, 4 Law T. 450.) But where two different sums of money were given by the same codicils, though in some degree connected by expression with the specific gift, then pecuniary legacies were held to be cumulative, there being no sufficient indication of intention to overturn the general rule. (Ibid.)

Legacy duty.—A British subject domiciled in a British colony died, having debts due to him in England, which his executor collected, and out of the money paid legacies to legatees in England: the legacies were not liable to duty. (Thomson v. Advocate-General, 4 Law T. 389.)

Misnomer. The veritas nominis will overcome the error descriptionis. (Newbolt v. Pryce, 4 Law T. 272.)

Power.—An appointment not exceeding the power by a father to his child under a will, is not fraudulent, though it may ultimately give him the absolute possession of the fund, and defeat the contingent interests of other parties interested therein. (Pemberton v. Jackson, 5 Law T. 17.)

Precatory words.—An absolute gift to the testator's wife, accompanied by a declaration that he had manifested entire confidence in his wife by giving her sovereign control over the whole of the property for her sole use; but that nevertheless he earnestly conjured her, with the advice of his executors, to proceed forthwith to make ample provision for his child and grandchild, and then a bequest of the residue to his wife, creates no trust in favour of the child or grandchild. (Winch v. Brutton, 4 Law T. 271.)

Publication.—An acknowledgment or declaration of an instrument to be testamentary in the presence of two witnesses is a publication of a will. (Warren v. Postlethwaite, 5 Law T. 235.)

Restraint upon alienation.—A testator gave to a person the dividends of a sum for life, and after his death to his wife for life, to be laid out for the good of the children; and upon the youngest child attaining twenty-one, to them equally, but none of them were to sell or part with their share before the period of division; or, if so, it was to go over to the others. One of them, after the death of the father, and before the division, having taken the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, was held to have forfeited his share under the restrictive clause. (Churchill v. Marks, 4 Law T. 452.)

ON THE GENERAL ISSUE.

Passing to the consideration of matter of inducement, introduced by way of explanation, we may notice, first, the case of M'Gregor v. Gregory (11 M. & W. 289). It was an action of libel against the editor of the Satirist, for classing the plaintiff among "black-legs and black-sheep," which words were shewn to have an opprobrious meaning, by introductory averments to the effect that the defendant was in the habit of using them, and his readers understood them as signifying respectively cheats and persons of bad character. Traverses of these averments were met by demurrers. On the argument, it was admitted that facts necessarily introduced for the purpose of explaining the charge were not in issue under not guilty. Upon this principle the case was decided; for the Court was of opinion that it could not have attached a defamatory meaning to the words in question, had no proper facts been averred by way of explanation. The same reason seems to govern cases where averments, introduced for the purpose of giving a peculiarly offensive meaning to words actionable of themselves, state facts so connected with the charge (see May v. Brown, 3 B. & C. 113), that the plaintiff is obliged to prove that the words relate to those facts. It is true that the words would have supported an action without the particular averments in question, and in that sense they may be said to be immaterial But looking at the peculiar meaning attached by the innuendo to the words, the inducement is necessary for the purpose of supporting the charge actually made, and is therefore admitted by not guilty. If, however, such averments be not in any way connected with the charge, they are immaterial, and therefore neither admitted nor in issue. (See Heming v. Power, 10 M. & W. 564.) There is also another kind of explanatory inducement which is introduced, not for the purpose of giving a defamatory meaning to the words, but in order to shew that they apply to the plaintiff. Such matter of inducement would be requisite, for instance, in the case of a libel on a statesman, alluding to him only by the mention of his office, and would not be put in issue by not guilty. This is distinct from the case of defamation of a person in his office, profession, or trade, by words not otherwise actionable, which is illustrated by one of the examples subjoined to the rule, shewing that there not guilty will not operate as a denial of the fact of the plaintiff holding the office or being of the profession or trade alleged. In the case contemplated by the example, the inducement appears to be necessary in order to entitle the plaintiff to a peculiar kind of reputation; though it may also serve to explain the charge.

The cases decided in actions for negligent driving, &c. seem referable to this head. The ordinary form of declaration may be exemplified by that in Taverner v. Little (5 N. C. 678), which stated in substance that the plaintiff was possessed of a horse, on which a servant of the plaintiff was riding along a public highway; and the defendant was possessed of a cart, and a horse drawing it, which cart and horse were then under the care and direction of the defendant, who was then driving the same along the said highway; nevertheless the defendant so negligently drove the said horse and cart, that through the negligence of the defendant the said cart ran against the horse of the plaintiff, and wounded it so that it died. Here the inducement, with the exception of the statement of the plaintiff's possession of the horse, which is requisite to found the action, appears to be merely explanatory of the charge. It was held that the defendant could not, under the general issue, shew that the cart which ran against the plaintiff's horse was not the defendant's, nor driven by him or his servant. It was argued that the charge in this action is compounded of the defendant's act, its quality (negligence), the collision, and the damage as consequent. And if, in this particular case, the charge had been such as it was represented to be, doubtless not guilty would have put in issue all those components, without regard to their position in the declaration. The defendant's counsel, in support of his view, urged that the inducement as to the defendant's driving his cart might have been omitted. Supposing that to be done, and the requisite modification made in the declaration, it would have charged the defendant with so negligently driving a cart, that, through such negligence, it ran against the plaintiff's horse and injured it. And it was very properly urged that, in the case of such a declaration, not guilty would have enabled the defendant to shew that he had nothing to do with the driving of the cart. But this argument was defective in not proceeding to prove that such a change in the form of the declaration would have made no alteration in the charge. In truth, the charge actually made was not that the defendant negligently drove a cart, which, by reason of such negligence came into collision with the plaintiff's horse and injured it,—involving all the components above mentioned,—but that the defendant, under certain circumstances stated in the inducement, was guilty of negligence whereby the collision and damage were caused. The circumstances accompanying the negligence were separated from it, and stated by themselves in the inducement; the more properly, because in this action it is the negligence, and not its surrounding circumstances, of which the plaintiff complains. The plea of not guilty, when construed with reference to the particular form of the declaration in Taverner v. Little, seems to have denied, not the fact of the defendant's driving by himself or servant, but solely the quality of negligence, and the facts of a collision and damages as consequences. The identity of the cart driven by the defendant with that causing the collision, supposing one proved, is admitted by not guilty, because the inducement is so intimately connected with the charge, that it must be understood as though it expressly alleged that "the defendant was driving the cart hereinafter mentioned to have run against the plaintiff's horse." (Dunford v. Trattles, 12 M. & W. 529; S. C. 1 Dowl. & L. 554.) So the allegation of possession in trover relates to the identical goods charged to have been converted. (See further as to the point of identity, Barsham v Bullock, 10 A. & E. 23, and Reed v. Thoyts, 6 M. & W. 410.)

It must be admitted that the reason above given for these decisions is open to the imputation of subtlety. As a matter of fact, the negligence is a mere quality of the driving, and it requires an effort of abstraction to view the negligence as the principal, and the driving as the circumstance. In the obscurity at present involving this subject, the pleader is bound to scrutinize closely the form of the declaration. There are many actions to which the same reasoning might be made applicable by a slight change of form in the declaration; and conclusions established with reference to the ordinary precedents may receive modifications when the charge is artfully narrowed.

THE PRIVILEGE OF COUNSEL.

(From a Correspondent.)

IT requires but little apology on our part to introduce a subject of such importance to the Legal Profession, and one so vitally affecting the public interest as the privilege of counsel. It is often a sign of good-will on the part of those who endeavour to point out defects which exist in a particular profession, and which are likely to bring its members into disrepute. On this occasion we claim for our motives equal purity. It comes from high authority that it is for the advantage of the administration of justice that counsel should have "free liberty of speech." Our present purpose is rightly to understand this seeming uncontrollable license. A case recently decided in the Court of Common Pleas, Hon. F. H. W. Needham v. Mr. Serjeant Dowling, was an action of slander for words spoken in a professional capacity before a court of justice. In reading that report, it affords us some amusement to see the vain attempt of learned counsel to grapple with that refractory gentleman called "Privilege." Mr. Serjeant Wilde, after a hopeless endeavour to confine it within the bounds of moderation, quietly relinquished the task as fruitless. "People spoke," said the learned gentleman, "of the privilege of counsel, but counsel had no privilege." The privilege "belonged to the client, speaking through the mouth of the counsel. Were counsel bound to see that every proposition of law or fact was strictly true before they submitted it to the Court? That was impossible." The Lord Chief Justice Tindal, too, "thought that the privilege, which had been very justly put, not as the privilege of the counsel, but of the suitor, must prevail." Now if this be the usage of the Profession and the law of the land, we cannot but think it most unsatisfactory, not only as it affects the public, but as it regards counsel themselves. It would be an insult to the Profession to consider counsel as a mere mouthpiece, as a conduit-pipe of sound from the mouth of one to the ear of another, yet the law does little less than this, and for the purpose, as it would appear, of screening its members. In the case of Wood v. Gunston (Styles, 462), Chief Justice Glyn said, "that if a counsellor speak scandalous words against one in defending his client's cause, an action lies not he against him for so doing, for it is his duty to speak for his client, and it shall be intended to be spoken according to his client's instructions." "If it were not so," asks Sir T. Wilde, in quoting these words, "what became of the confidence between client and counsel?" And so, because of the necessity of maintaining a confidence, of course most useful as well as most sacred, it is requisite to take for granted that counsel give utterance to nothing beyond the tenor of their instructions. Upon the same extraordinary doctrine is the case of Flint v. Pike (4 Barn. & Cress. 478). Mr. Justice Bayley there said, "The speech of a counsel is privileged by the occasion on which it is spoken; he is at liberty to make strong, even calumnious, observations against the party, the witnesses, and the attorney in the cause. The law presumes that he acts in discharge of his duty, and in pursuance of his instructions, and allows him this privilege because it is for the advantage of the administration of justice that he should have free liberty of speech." Here the law in its wisdom has two most convenient presumptions:—1st, that an advocate acts in discharge of his duty; and, 2nd, in pursuance of his instructions. With these premises it is not difficult to arrive at the conclusion, "that it is for the advantage of the administration of justice that counsel should have free liberty of speech." Yet, for a moment, let us suppose the legal helmet to drop off—that fallen man does not do his duty—neither does he follow his instructions—what provision has the law for this emergency? In the case of Hodgson v. Scarlett (1 Barn. & Ald. 238), it was argued by counsel, on a motion for a new trial, "As to the authority cited by the other side of Wood v. Gunston, it carries the privilege much too far, for if an action be brought against a counsel, then, according to that case, he is justified, because it will be intended that he spoke by the information of his client; and if an action be brought against the client, he may justify by shewing that he gave no such information to his counsel; so that if that were law, an injured party would be without remedy: there must be some limit laid down. Can it be contended that any thing that has the most remote reference to a case may be said, and that in the most offensive manner? If not, then it ought to be left to the jury not merely to say whether it was pertinent, but whether it was so pertinent as to be justifiable." Should it be said in our presence, "Here then is a piece of juggling, a legal hunt the slipper from right hand to left, from one person to another, until the injured party becomes so bewildered as not to know under which thimble to find his lost pea, and all because the law presumes an impossibility, viz. that counsel are incapable of wrong," what would be our answer? Surely, he who can deal out slander with impunity possesses a privilege, though it may not be a very enviable one. We hope, however, to see the privilege of counsel put upon much higher ground. He must be a dolt who would content himself to be a mere mouthpiece, and nothing short of a coward to assume that character when he is called upon to bear his share of blame. We believe nothing so degrading of the Bar. It was asked with triumph, "Were counsel bound to see that every proposition of law or fact was strictly true before they submitted it to Court?" and answered without pause, "That is impossible." This doctrine ought to be received by the Profession with great caution, and the young advocate particularly ought to look upon it with suspicion. Falsehoods, as palpable as they are base, may pervade the brief from end to end, and stain with the blackest dye the paper on which they are written. Are counsel to spread the malicious poison, which burns the tongue whence it proceeds, amongst the already inflammatory materials of society?—to sow seeds of discord in the unsuspecting heart—to insult the fallen—to add shame to the distressed—to insinuate against the good, and to vilify the innocent?—and all because it is said to be impossible to inquire after truth? We believe men cannot so easily exempt themselves from the obligations of morality. It may satisfy him who has made the law his exclusive study; but he who knows the doctrines of morality will seek some more reasonable cause than apathy for his neglect in the search after truth. Gisborne, in his Duties of Men, says, "If a cause should present itself of an aspect so dark as to leave the advocate no reasonable doubt of its being founded in iniquity or baseness, or to justify extremely strong suspicions of its evil nature or tendency, he is bound in the sight of God to refuse all connection with the business." It may be asked, who, because brief is heaped upon brief, and every moment is consumed in professional occupation, will therefore say he is acquitted of the obligations which morality imposes? It is necessary that a man should adhere to virtue, but it is not necessary that he should be overwhelmed with briefs. It may be difficult to separate truth from falsehood, yet to say that it is impossible, and upon that assertion, not merely to remain inactive, but to spread untested asseverations under the garb of real truths, can be the task of him only who is in reality a degraded mouthpiece. We, however, look upon the members of the Bar as men and moral beings, who are not content to scatter seeds of slander, regardless of their being true or false. No nice distinctions can be admitted in a case of this kind, for morality knows of none. Either counsel have a discretion in receiving instructions, or they have not. If not, Sir T. Wilde is right, and the advocate may be a man and a lawyer, but he is no moralist. If they have, we entreat its exercise for their own and the public advantage. Let us, then, be understood; we would not allow the crime of slander to be shifted from one shoulder to another, but each offender to answer for his own acts and deeds. And that goodly shelter of "being pertinent to the issue," which seems to us like the circle of the horizon, including every thing, let this have some known line of demarcation easily definable by a jury, and not as now, a mere imaginary mark which recedes as you approach. And above all, away with that doctrine which insinuates that counsel are irresponsible beings. Exempt them from the penalties of the English law, if you will, but encourage not a breach of moral duty. And after all it may be doubted whether "scandalous words, or strong or even calumnious observations," are ever necessary for the ends of justice. Slander is but a short-cut to a conclusion of which the premises are seldom proved. In one case a man was called "wicked." Could not the counsel have detailed the circumstances, leaving the conclusion for the judge and jury? and in most cases slander would be spared. It is not enough for a man to keep within the pale of his country's laws. Morality has a boundary-line beyond that over which he is forbidden to step. Our wish is, that that the members of a most learned and honourable profession should be raised above mere professors of language, or irresponsible mouthpieces of others.

LEADING CASES.—No. V.

GRINNELL v. WELLS.

(2 D. & L. 610.)

Action by the father for the seduction of his infant daughter.—Upon what principle does the right of action rest?—Loss of service.

The legal principle upon which the father of an infant who has been seduced is entitled to bring his action and to recover damages against the seducer, though canvassed and considered in a long range of cases, was only finally set at rest in Michaelmas Term 1844. It had, indeed, been the common, almost the universal opinion, that the doctrine laid down in the old cases was the sound doctrine, but the arguments brought forward against it were founded upon reasons entitled to so much respect, that every lawyer was disposed to cling to what at first sight, at any rate, appears to be the juster view, and to abandon a fiction which seems somewhat to favour immorality. The authority, however, of numerous and uniform decisions has proved to be irresistible; and to whatever objections this construction of the law may, in a moral point of view, be open, there is no longer any doubt that the received construction is the right one.

The doctrine again and again laid down in the old cases and by various text-writers is, that the loss of service which in certain cases a father may sustain from the seduction of his daughter constitutes his sole title to pecuniary redress from the seducer, and that unless he alleges in his declaration and proves by his evidence the existence of previous service and the subsequent loss of that service, he has no ground of action whatever. The relation, indeed, of parent and child appears to have no bearing whatever on the rights of the plaintiff. The relation of master and servant is the relation necessary for the support of the action, and if that relation exist and be proved to exist, the right of action immediately arises, even to a stranger in blood. The moral obligation, too, on the part of the parent to maintain his child when unable to provide for herself, and the legal obligation to do so imposed upon him by the Poor Law, seem equally immaterial. Unless the parent be also the master, and the daughter be the servant, the act of seduction itself is no loss to him—as far as he is concerned, the act is not legally a wrongful act. We shall find in the cases to which we propose now to refer ample authority for every one of the points thus briefly stated.

In the old cases of Gray v. Jefferies (Cro. Eliz. 55); Barham v. Dennis (Cro. Eliz. 770), and Russell v. Corne (2 Raym. 1031), which turn, not upon the peculiar injury of seduction, but upon general personal injury to the plaintiff's child, it was held, that "trespass for beating the son lieth not for the father;" and the foundation of the plaintiff's action is there placed, not upon the wrongful act itself, but upon the loss of service, in which the father is supposed to have a legal interest; and in the latter of these cases (Russell v. Corne, 2 Raym. 1032), Holt, C.J. says, "So a man cannot maintain an action against another for assaulting his daughter and getting her with child; but he may maintain an action against another for entering his house and assaulting and getting his daughter with child, per quod servitium amisit." In the note to Petty v. Waight (1 Bulst. 173), is a case mentioned, "where an action of trespass was brought by the master for an assault and battery of his servant," &c. and it was held, "for the omission of these words in the declaration, per quod servitium amisit, the declaration is not good, and the rule of the court was quod quærens nil capiat per billem." In Randle v. Deane (2 Lutw. 1497), Powell, J. says, "un action ne gist pur le master si non que il ad perd le service de son servant." Upon the authority of these cases it was admitted by Davenport, who was of counsel for the plaintiff in the later case of Postlethwaite v. Parkes (3 Bur. 1878), that "no action would lie but by reason of the loss of the daughter's service." That was an action of trespass vi et armis, for an assault upon the plaintiff's daughter and getting her with child, and the declaration concluded with a per quod servitium amisit. The case is thus stated:—"The plaintiff's daughter, being 23 years of age, hired herself to one Saul, as a servant, and went to live with Saul her master, and served him some time. During her service she was gotten with child by the defendant, and becoming big with child and unable thereby to perform her service as she was used and ought to do, she was discharged by Saul, her master, who paid her her wages in proportion to the service she had already done him, and the plaintiff, her father, received her, when no one else would, and lodged and boarded her in his house. She was there delivered of a male bastard child in November following, and the plaintiff, her father, maintained her in her lying-in at his own expense." The points made for the defendant were, that there was no loss of service on the plaintiff's part, and that the father's interest in the child had at any rate ceased at the termination of her infancy. The case ended in a compromise at the recommendation of the Court; but Mr. Burrow concludes his report with this note:—"Lord Mansfield, addressing himself to Mr. Wallace (the defendant's counsel), said to him, 'It is not upon any doubt, in point of law, that I propose this compromise,' meaning, I suppose, that he was clear with Mr. Wallace, 'that this action could not be maintained.' And on this supposition I have ventured to report it, though it was not determined judicially and in form; however, there can be no doubt but that the Court were all of opinion that the action could not be maintained;' and therefore, in compassion to the plaintiff, whose daughter had been injured by the defendant, they wished to save him from the payment of costs." All doubt, however, as to the construction to be put upon that case was subsequently removed by the case of Benett v. Allcott (2 T. R. 166). There, also, the daughter was above twenty-one years of age, and it was contended that, under these circumstances, it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove a special hiring and service (no question being raised that service, to some extent, was necessary to maintain the action); but of this objection Buller, J. speedily disposed, and in doing so very distinctly laid down the general principle of the law. "With respect to the objection that this action cannot be maintained by the father for debauching his daughter above age, per quod servitium amisit, no contract for service having been proved, I take it to be perfectly well settled, since the case of Postlethwaite v. Parkes, that the action will not lie by the father, unless the daughter be proved in some way or another his servant. In that case the ground which influenced the opinion of the Court was, that the daughter was in the service of another person. But in actions of this kind the slightest evidence is sufficient, even milking cows. There instances of actual service were proved, and therefore it is immaterial whether the daughter was of age or not." (Ibid. 168.)

Benett v. Allcott is an important case also, as to the form in which the plaintiff should bring his action. There (as in almost all the preceding cases) the action was trespass for breaking and entering the house of the plaintiff, debauching his daughter, &c. per quod, &c. The defendant on the trial proved a license to enter, and it was contended that, as the trespass had not been established, he was entitled to a verdict,—of which opinion would have been the Court, but in that case the only plea was "not guilty," and they held that, under the general issue, the license to enter could not be given in evidence, and therefore that the trespass was proved, and that the verdict must be for the plaintiff, both for the breaking the house, and for that which was a consequence of it, viz. the debauchment of the daughter. But an action on the case has in more recent times been, and still is, the common form of action in cases of this nature. "An action merely for debauching a man's daughter, by which he loses her service, is an action on the case; but, according to Lord Holt's opinion (2 Raym. 1032), where the offence is accompanied with an illegal entry of the father's house, he has his election either to bring trespass for the breaking and entering, and lay the debauching of the daughter and loss of her service as consequential, or he may bring the action on the case merely for debauching his daughter, per quod servitium amisit." (Per Buller, J. ubi supra.) In Woodward v. Walton (2 New Rep. 476), however, it was held that an action for debauching the plaintiff's daughter, per quod servitium amisit, "is an action of trespass, and that a count for that purpose may be joined with a count for breaking and entering the house." Notwithstanding, however, the authority of this case, the common form of action now in use is an action on the case; and in Grinnell v. Wells, at the head of these remarks, in which all the authorities were carefully considered, no ground of objection was taken to the form of action there adopted.

Next to Benett v. Allcott comes Saterthwaite v. Duerst (n. d. 5 East, 47) (of which a very unsatisfactory report alone remains). It was there also held, that an action on the case would not lie, unless it were laid with a per quod servitium amisit.

The value, however, of Satterthwaite v. Duerst mainly rests upon the language attributed to Lord Mansfield as to the effect of the daughter's age or non-age. He is reported to have said, "It appears very extraordinary that any action should lie to a person on account of incontinence between two others, both of whom may be of full age: for it does not appear here that the daughter was not of age;" and the question whether the father's right to recover is confined to the period of his daughter's minority, seems never to have been directly, though it has been indirectly, decided. For instance, in Harper v. Luffkin (7 B. & C. 387), the daughter (for whose seduction and loss of service the plaintiff, her father, sought compensation) had been married eight years, had had two children, but had been separated five years from her husband, and had, subsequently to the separation, lived with her father and acted as his servant. The defendant moved for a rule to enter a nonsuit, on the ground that there was no service, the husband's consent to his wife's service not having been obtained, and his power to reclaim her being constantly in force. But the Court at once refused the rule, Lord Tenterden observing, that "though the contracts of married women were liable to be defeated at the will of the husband, yet they were in many instances hired as servants;" and that in the case before him, the relation of master and servant had actually existed. There it must necessarily be presumed that the daughter (who had been a wife eight years) was not a minor, but no objection was even raised to the plaintiff's right of action on that ground. And, indeed, if the foundation of the action is the service, it is difficult to discover how the age of the servant can affect the right of the master. (See the case of Speight v. Oliveira, ubi infrà.) If it were possible that the daughter could be of so tender an age as to be physically incapable of rendering any service, it is clear that no action would lie; as it was held in a case where trespass had been brought for an injury to a child only two years and a half old. (Hall v. Hollander, 7 D. & R. 133; 4 B. & C. 660.) The distinction as to age is thus pointed out by Parke, B. in the comparatively recent case of Harris v. Buller (2 M. & W. 542):—"Formerly," says his lordship, "the action of seduction was held not to be maintainable without proof that the relationship of master and servant existed, and in all cases some service was held necessary. That rule was afterwards so far relaxed, that if the child was a minor, but of an age capable of acts of service, such service it was held might be presumed;" but in the cases in which the question of constructive service has been considered, this distinction as to the age of the servant does not appear to have been taken. (Vide infrà.) To return, however, to the long chain of precedent illustrative of the principle upon which this action depends, we must not omit the case of Dean v. Peel (5 East, 45), which has always been considered a high authority. In that case, the loss of service was alleged in the declaration, but the proof at the trial only went the length of shewing that the daughter was in the service of another person at the time of the seduction, without any intention of returning to her father's house; but that upon her seduction she went home, and was maintained by her father during her illness; and upon this state of circumstances it was held that there was no proof of service to the plaintiff, and that the action was not maintainable; Lord Ellenborough drawing a distinction between that case, in which there had been no animus revertendi on the part of the daughter, and the nisi prius cases of Booth v. Charlton and Johnson v. M'Adam, decided by Mr. Justice Wilson, and quoted in argument, in which the daughters had only casually been absent from their father's house, with the intention of returning to it. See also, Harris v. Buller (2 M. & W. 539); Blaymire v. Haley (6 M. & W. 55); Carr v. Clarke (2 Chit. 260); Holloway v. Abel (7 C. & P. 528); Anon. (1 Smith, 333); Mann v. Barret (6 Esp. 32). Although from the above cases it seems clear, as a general rule, that the daughter must be in the service, actual or constructive, of the plaintiff, yet there have been cases in which the fact of the daughter having been engaged in the defendant's, and not the plaintiff's service, has not barred the right of action. Speight v. Oliviera (2 Stark. N. P. C. 493) was a case of this nature; but when considered, it will be found to support, instead of contradicting, the general rule. It was an action on the case brought by a carpenter, whose daughter, of the age of 23 years, had been engaged by the defendant as his servant, to take care of an empty house. During her continuance in his service he seduced her; and the objection raised against the plaintiff on the trial was, that the evidence failed to establish the relation of master and servant between the father and daughter. But Abbot, C.J. said, "that if the defendant did not hire the young woman for the purpose of keeping his house, but with the wicked view of seducing her, then I am of opinion that the relation of master and servant was never contracted between them." The jury believed that the defendant had hired the girl with intent to seduce her; and as there was clear evidence of service to the plaintiff before the period of that hiring, the verdict was entered for him. In that case the criminal design of the defendant annulled the contract of service between him and the young woman; and that contract being annulled, the original service to the plaintiff had never been concluded, and was clearly sufficient to support the action. For this purpose a constructive service is sufficient; and it has been held, not only that no acts of menial service need be proved (Fores v. Wilson, 1 Peake's N. P. C. 77), but that the mere fact of residence in the father's family and under his protection is sufficient. (Jones v. Brown, 1 Peake's N. P. C. 306). In Maunder v. Venn (M. & M. 323), Littledale, J. said, "The right to the service is sufficient;" and cited the opinion of Lord Alvanley in support of the dictum.

As an unavoidable inference from the principle that service is the ground upon which alone this action rests, have arisen the decisions that the benefit of it is not confined to the parent, but extends to any one standing in the necessary relation of master to the injured girl. Accordingly, in Edmondson v. Mackel (2 T. R. 4) the Court refused to disturb a verdict found for the plaintiff in an action brought by the aunt, in whose house the seduced party had resided as servant, though it was proved that the mother was alive, and lived in the same county. The same rule was carried still further in the case of Irwin v. Dearman (11 East, 23). That was an action on the case for damages, charged in one count to be for debauching and getting with child the adopted daughter and servant of the plaintiff, by which he lost her service; and, in another count, for debauching his servant generally, per quod, &c. The plaintiff, it appeared, was an officer in the army, and had taken charge of the infant daughter of a deceased soldier in the regiment, who had been a friend and comrade of his, which daughter he had bred up for several years in his house, where she performed the offices of a menial servant. The defendant suffered judgment by default, and a writ of inquiry having been executed before the sheriff of Middlesex, the only actual damage proved was the loss of the young woman's service for five weeks. The jury gave 100*l.* and a rule was subsequently moved for to set aside the inquisition of damages as excessive, and not supported by law with respect to the count charging in aggravation that the servant was the plaintiff's adopted daughter. In refusing the rule, Lord Ellenborough said, "This has always been considered an action sui generis, where a person standing in the relation of a parent, or in loco parentis, is permitted to recover damages for an injury of this nature, ultra the mere loss of service. But even in the case of an actual parent, the loss of service is the legal foundation of the action. And however difficult it may be to reconcile to principle the giving greater damages on the other ground, the practice is become inveterate, and cannot now be shaken. And having been considered, in the case of Edmondson v. Machell, to extend to an aunt, as one standing in loco parentis, I think that this plaintiff, who had adopted and bred up the daughter of a friend and comrade from her infancy, seems to be equally entitled to maintain the action." (Ibid. 245.) And in Fores v. Wilson (ubi suprà), Lord Kenyon likewise held that a master who was no relation in blood was equally so entitled. (See also Manvell v. Thomson, 2 C. & P. 303.)

The last and the decisive case upon the subject is that which stands at the head of this article. The marginal note in Grinnell v. Wells is as follows:—"In an action on the case for the seduction of a daughter, the declaration must allege a consequent loss of service. The plaintiff declared in case for the seduction of his daughter, that being a poor person, and unable to maintain herself except by her work, the defendant debauched her, and she thereby became sick and unable to work, whereby the plaintiff was forced and obliged, and did necessarily pay sums of money for her maintenance, and in and about her delivery and curing her of her illness:—Held, on motion in arrest of judgment, after verdict for the plaintiff, that the declaration disclosed no sufficient cause of action." In the argument, Sir T. Wilde, for the plaintiff, principally relied upon the obligation imposed upon a father to maintain his poor child, unable to work, by the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 7, under an order of justices. It was not necessary to wait for such order to support his child. (Blythe v. Smith, 6 Scott, N. R. 361.) And as his obligation to support the child had been caused by the wrongful act of the defendant, he was liable for the loss incurred. "If the loss of service will give a cause of action, it must be in a pecuniary point of view; then, à fortiori, an actual pecuniary loss alleged, will be sufficient." The Court, however, having taken time to consider, expressed a confident opinion in favour of the defendant. In the course of the judgment, Tindal, C.J. says: "It is the invasion of the legal right of the master to the services of his servant that gives him the right of action for beating his servant; and it is the invasion of the same legal right, and no other, which gives the father the right of action against the seducer of his daughter." Having stated the facts of Dean v. Peel, above given, his lordship proceeds: "Now this case is in evidence precisely what the present case is in pleading upon the record, and therefore affords a direct authority for the position that where there is absence of any allegation of the loss of service to the father, although there may be an allegation of his being compelled to pay the expenses arising from the wrongful act, the action is, nevertheless, not maintainable." We cannot conclude this note more in accordance with our own feelings and opinion than by quoting the remarks attached by Mr. Starkie to his report of the case of Speight v. Oliveira (ubi suprà). "Although the Courts with an honourable zeal lend every legitimate aid within their reach to give such reparation a pecuniary damages can bestow for injuries of this nature, it is still to be lamented that instances not unfrequently occur when such injuries still remain without redress. The claim to damages in such cases, which is founded upon principles of the strictest justice, the enforcement of which is absolutely essential to curb licentiousness and preserve the morals of society, ought not to depend upon a mere fiction over which the Courts possess no control. It is a reproach to the law of England that the right to damages should not be necessarily conse the injury. Surely it is worthy the attention of the legislature to find a remedy for an evil of such magnitude."

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE BAR AND THE ATTORNEYS.

DEVON QUARTER SESSIONS, JULY 2, 1845.

An incident of considerable moment to the Profession has occurred here to-day.

Mr. BIRD, a provincial barrister, resident at Exeter, appeared as counsel for a prisoner. The first witness for the prosecution having been examined,

Mr. BIRD rose and addressed the Court in a speech of some length, in which he stated, in substance, that he had taken that opportunity of publicly announcing that in the case in which he was then engaged he had adopted a course which it was his intention to pursue for the future. He had received instructions and taken a fee from the prisoner, without the intervention of an attorney. He was satisfied that, according to the ancient laws and customs of the realm, it was his right, nay, his duty, as counsel, so to do. In an elaborate address he proceeded to state his reasons for having adopted this course, and concluded by observing, that the Bar might take whatever steps they should deem right; he wished to have the question tried, and he challenged investigation.

Mr. HOLDSWORTH, having consulted with the other members of the Bar who were in court during Mr. BIRD's address, said, that as the senior member of the Bar then present, on behalf of his learned friends, who felt with him that, after the avowal made by Mr. BIRD, the question could not rest here, he begged to ask of Mr. BIRD if he had taken his brief without a fee, and whether he had taken his instructions from the prisoner in court?

Mr. BIRD replied that he had taken the instructions from the prisoner personally out of court, and that he had received a fee of one guinea for the defence.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir JOHN KENNAWAY) said, that of course he could not take cognizance of Mr. BIRD's conduct; it was a question between himself and the other members of the Profession. He regretted that it had not been done at the assizes, when the judges might have given an opinion of its propriety. The case then proceeded.

DEVON ASSIZES, EXETER, MONDAY, JULY 21.

At these assizes Mr. BIRD again rose, and addressing the learned judge (PLATT, B.) who was presiding in the criminal court, said, that he was desirous of repeating before a learned judge the statement he had made at the quarter sessions. He appeared then as counsel for the prisoner without the intervention of an attorney, and having received his fee directly from the prisoner, out of court. The prisoner was a poor man, and could not afford to pay an attorney also.

His LORDSHIP said he could not interfere. His duty as a judge was to hear any counsel who might appear, and his experience assured him that the honour of the Profession was safe in the hands of its members. He was confident that if a prisoner were poor and unable to pay the expenses of a defence, there was no man at the Bar who would not readily give him the aid of his abilities. It would be hard indeed if a man were to be precluded from the benefits of a defence by counsel because he could not pay an attorney also. It was very different in the case of a prosecution. However, with this he, as a judge, had no concern. It was not a matter for his decision.

After some further colloquy, the case proceeded.

WILL OF THE LATE JAMES WOOD.—At the Gloucester Town Council meeting, on Thursday, the town clerk mentioned a gratifying piece of intelligence—namely, that the appeal case, The Corporation of Gloucester v. The Executors of the late James Wood, which, we need hardly remind our readers, involves the question of legacies to the amount of 200,000*l*. left by the late Mr. J. Wood to the corporation, was positively fixed for hearing on Monday next, in the House of Lords. This information, after so many years of tedious and expensive litigation, suggested the confident hope that at length a final judgment would be given in a case so interesting to every inhabitant of this city; and visions of borough-rates diminished, and much-needed public improvements commenced, floated at once before our imagination. Alas! the "law's delay" has not yet terminated—the passion for retaining fees and refreshers has not yet been sated—the judges of her Majesty's last court of appeal will not yet take so good a thing out of the hands of barristers, proctors, and lawyers—and therefore "hope deferred" must still continue to make sad the hearts" of the rate-payers of Gloucester. Their lordships have, it seems, discharged the order for hearing on Monday, and it is now uncertain whether the case can come on during the present session; the probability, indeed, is quite the other way, and the suit may therefore be supposed to be shelved for at least another year.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.

IN presenting their second annual report, the council of the society congratulate you on the progress the society has made. Our present meeting may in fact be considered as our first anniversary; for the society is not yet eighteen months old, and when we last met, under the name of an annual meeting, it was scarcely constituted. We did, however, even at that early date, anticipate the result to which we have now the gratification of drawing your attention; for we felt strong conviction that the principles and objects of our institution, once understood, could not fail to attract that attention which we deem their importance to deserve. We did not, it is true, look forward to that sudden accession of members, or that rapid accumulation of subscriptions, which has so frequently marked the progress of associations formed for the furtherance of some directly benevolent or other attractive object; for, though we are inferior to none in the importance of the end we seek, we must admit, that it must be pursued through rough and uninviting ways. The impressions we have to produce are of slow growth, requiring much time for their maturity, yet more for the ascertaining of their true value. We cannot seek to attract you by recreation—diversity of labour is admitted to be a species of rest; but the labours to which we invite bear too near an analogy to your daily and professional pursuits to be classed as diversions. Come and work—come and teach—come and learn—are not among the invitations which meet the readiest acceptance. And yet we have succeeded.

We have the satisfaction of stating that the list of new members, admitted by ballot since the last annual meeting, has nearly equalled the number of original members. Our recruits have indeed been principally from the ranks of the law; but we are not without indications, that a more extended view of our object will shortly attract to us persons from other professions, callings, and stations, and that many distinguished members of the Legislature will connect themselves with an institution which, without encroaching on the functions of Parliament, is calculated to facilitate its labours. Many of our senior members have manifested their willingness to open their stores of knowledge; and the juniors have shewn no inconsiderable alacrity in taking advantage of their communications. We always looked forward to this combination as one of the many advantages of this society.

The list of our ordinary members has suffered little diminution—we have to congratulate ourselves on the removal of Mr. Justice Erle and Mr. Baron Platt from the number of ordinary, to that of honorary members, in consequence of their elevation to the bench; in which class also the Chief Baron of the Exchequer has been enrolled. We have, on the other hand, to regret the loss of some amiable and learned colleagues—the sudden death of Mr. Duval deprived the profession of a most learned member, and the cause of law reform (especially as regarding the laws of real property) of an effective advocate. By the no less sudden death of Mr. Commissioner Merivale, an amiable man and very elegant scholar was lost to society; nor can social intercourse be mentioned, without missing at once the good humour, wit, and spirit of Sir Charles Williams.

Consequent on the increase of members, the committee of management will have to report an improved state of your finances; and though they are not yet sufficient to afford an extensive outlay in printing—without which, both the progress of our labours, and their publicity when completed, must be naturally impeded—we are not without hope, that a further improvement in our income may enable us to be more liberal in this branch, and that without the necessity of resorting to any appeal to the public for pecuniary assistance. On this head there has been some difference of opinion in our council; for while some members have contended, and with good reason, that for a public purpose of such permanent importance as the amendment of the law we are well entitled to call on society for those contributions which are always forthcoming in aid of objects of general utility, others have been unwilling to resort to this appeal till they had exhausted their own resources, or at least till the amount of labour performed with our confined means should serve as a basis for calculating the greater benefit which would result from a larger outlay.

To this end, it becomes necessary to advert to the work already completed—to that which is still in progress—and to the probability that some of our suggestions may be adopted by individual Members of Parliament, and that others may be deemed worthy of the notice of the Government, and may thus ultimately obtain the sanction of the legislature. By the constitution of this society, the duty of preparing reports on various subjects—proposed in the first instance by any individual member, who will enter his doubts or suggestions in the rough journal, and then selected for reference by the council—devolves on the various committees of the society, in which committees every member is at liberty to enrol himself. Of these committees there were originally ten, several of which have been already in active operation, and have presented reports, marked by the learning, discrimination, research, and judgment which might be expected from those who assisted in the debate of the subjects, or (which is yet more important) drew up the result of the deliberations.

One of the earliest of these reports was made by the Parliamentary Committee, to which it was referred "to consider the propriety of establishing a board for revising and settling public Bills in Parliament." This report, with the sanction of the society, was communicated by your President to Sir Robert Peel, as Prime Minister, as well as to the Lord Chancellor; and the council have reason to believe that the recommendation is under the consideration of the Government.

The importance of some such measure as is here recommended becomes more and more apparent in every session of Parliament; as in every session political and financial questions, and an overwhelming mass of business connected with public or private speculation, occupy more and more, and jurisprudential measures less and less of the legislative attention. We have seen that Bills for the amendment of the law are usually postponed to so late a period that lengthened discussion upon them becomes impossible; and that they are either hastily thrown out, or passed in so crude and imperfect a state, that a year seldom elapses before "An Act to amend an Act," or "An Act to amend an Act intituled an Act to amend an Act," bears testimony to the imperfection of our legislative machinery. Large views of law reform are but seldom taken—a patch here and a patch there, as insulated evils or inconveniences are occasionally discovered, is all that can be expected; and the maxim of Lord Bacon, "that it is easier to change many things than one," seems to be utterly forgotten.

A responsible board for the preparation of bills would obviate much of this evil; and your council is the more anxious to press this upon your attention, and, through you, upon the attention of those with whom you are in communication on such subjects, as they consider it a main if not an indispensable condition to all sound amendment. Neither is there so much novelty as may at first appear in this proposition. It has been a constant practice to issue commissions of inquiry on various subjects deemed too extensive for the consideration of a parliamentary committee, and the reports of such commissions have been followed by Bills in conformity or supposed conformity with their recommendations; but, as the commission does not continue to follow the Bills through their several stages of parliamentary progress, it often happens that a small and sometimes casual deviation from the original plan totally alters the measure, and that so mischievously, that the supposed authors have felt it necessary to their reputation to repudiate the transformed or deformed offspring.

The committee on equity have been very diligently engaged on the several matters referred to them; and their labours have been facilitated by the liberal use of his chambers, afforded for their sittings by Mr. Spence; a similar accommodation has also been given by Mr. Koe to the debtor and creditor committee.

The first report made by the equity committee was on a reference, made to them in common with most of the other committees, "To consider the expediency of relieving the suitor from the expense of the judicial establishment and of placing this burthen on the general revenues of the country." We have to regret that no other committee has yet made a report on this subject, since it is one which cannot well be debated on any single branch of judicature, without reference to its bearings on many others. The next report was on the reference to consider "whether any safe and effectual means can be adopted for the taking of the accounts of executors and administrators, and the distribution of the personal estate of testators and intestates in any case, so as to diminish the expense which is at present incurred in attaining these objects." This report, presented on the 11th inst. is still under the consideration of the society. We therefore make no further comment on it than to say that it relates to a subject of every day's occurrence, and bears ample marks of the learning and diligence of those who have prepared it.

The common-law committee have made a very elaborate and valuable report on the subject of documentary evidence; it has met with the approbation of the society, and its recommendations are already embodied in a bill now pending before Parliament.

We have the gratification of making a similar statement as to two reports of the committee on the law of property. In pursuance of the recommendations contained in these reports, Bills to facilitate the conveyance of real property and the granting of leases, and for superseding the necessity of assigning outstanding terms, have been introduced in the present session.

The committee on the law of property have also presented valuable reports on the following reference:—"Whether the appointment of new trustees should not vest the trust property in them, and whether the deed of conveyance or assignment might not be dispensed with." The principle recommended in this report has been adopted in a Bill introduced by the Lord Chancellor for regulating charitable trusts. This committee has also presented reports on the following references:—"Whether any facilities can be adopted for appointing new trustees in cases in which there is no power in the instrument, or the power is defective or cannot be exercised;" and "Whether it be possible and expedient to adapt the machinery of the public funds to the transfer of real property;" and also on the draft of a Bill for amending the Transfer of Property Act privately communicated to the committee.

The committee on the law of debtor and creditor has had many meetings on the several subjects referred to them—subjects which include not only the whole law of bankruptcy and insolvency, but the yet more important and intricate question of commercial and general credit. With so large a field before them, we cannot be surprised that they have not yet come to the conclusion of their labours. Festina lente is never so sound a motto as when it relates to interference with the varying transactions of a great trading community.

In addition to the subjects on which reports have been presented, many other questions have been referred to the several committees, and are now under consideration, and in various stages of progress.

The formation of a library has not proceeded as favourably as we anticipated; for though a few members have presented their works, and some facility has been afforded us in obtaining parliamentary papers, we still fall short of even the beginning of such a collection as the uses of the society would require.

Your council have seen with great gratification the success of the Law Review, a quarterly journal of jurisprudence commenced in November last, and which, although not in direct connection with the society, is supporting in an efficient manner, and with the co-operation of many distinguished persons, as well members of this society as unconnected with it, many of the objects of this society.

In conclusion, the council trust that the society will agree with them, that, considering the difficulties which were likely to beset an association of this novel nature, it has met with all due encouragement, and has already proved itself competent to deal with the varied and important subjects which obviously come within its range.

The extent of its utility cannot, however, be ascertained by a transient view, various as are the questions already before it. Interesting as are the inquiries already instituted, important as are the objects already attained or within reasonable hope of attainment, they fall infinitely short of the multiplicity of objects which the future may disclose to us. As inquiry proceeds, fresh fields of usefulness open themselves, fresh prospects arise. By the aid of our association sound opinions may be formed and diffused, rash and inexpedient alterations in the law discussed and prevented, professional opinion ascertained and collected, and general assistance given to the gradual improvement of the law.

TO READERS.

As promised last week, we now present another gratis double number, as compensation for the trespasses which the advertisements have made upon the readers' columns.

THE BAR AND THE ATTORNEYS.

AN incident at the last Devon Quarter Sessions, a short report of which appears among the Legal Intelligence of this week, and a repetition of the same scene at the assizes just concluded, must bring to a speedy and decisive issue the question which has recently excited so much interest in the Profession—namely, whether counsel may communicate with clients, take instructions from them, and conduct their cases, without the intervention of an attorney.

We are bound, at the outset of the discussions which this occurrence must raise, to express our entire conviction that Mr. BIRD is actuated by no mercenary motive, or by no desire to injure the Profession of which he is a member. He entertains peculiar views of the rights and duties of counsel, which he asserts to be based upon the ancient laws and customs of the realm. He is resolved to bring the question to a decisive issue, and he has adopted the bold plan of openly and avowedly violating that which is understood to be an established rule of the Bar, challenging investigation, and calling upon those who object to his proceeding to bring it before the proper tribunal, by whom it may be decided whether his views be right or wrong.

In justice to Mr. BIRD, we are further bound to say, that he has been moved to the adoption of a course so perilous to himself by his belief of the prevalence of a practice which inflicts a grievous hardship upon prisoners and an injustice upon the Bar. He asserts that often, when a prisoner's friends apply to an attorney to defend him, they are told that the costs will be so and so, naming from 5*l.* to 10*l.* or more. If surprise is expressed, the counsel's fee is alleged as the cause. The required sum is paid, the attorney merely copies the depositions upon brief paper, hands them to counsel, with a guinea, or two at the utmost, indorsed as the fee, and pockets the remainder as his own profits.

Mr. BIRD says that he has known some flagrant cases of this, and urged, we verily believe, by honest indignation at the advantage which he believes to be taken of the ignorance of prisoners and their friends, he has come to the resolution of asserting a right which he contends, though dormant, to be still existing, and to appear for parties upon their own instructions without the intervention of an attorney.

We have introduced this explanation of Mr. BIRD's motives, so far as we understand them, in a spirit of fairness towards him, that he may not be classed with those who stoop to professional malpractices, knowing them to be such, with mercenary motives. He has manfully avowed his purpose—boldly demanded inquiry. The question he has raised is, therefore, thrown out for discussion upon its own merits, apart from any personality.

The rule we understand to be this—that counsel shall not take instructions from the party, but from an attorney only, save in the single instance of a retainer by a defendant in a criminal charge given in open court, or, as the phrase is, a brief handed over the bar.

We believe the recent decisions of the Inns of Court in certain cases to have been in conformity with this rule.

It is this rule which Mr. BIRD avows his intention to violate by taking instructions out of court from prisoners in person, and, upon those instructions, acting as their counsel.

The legality of the rule is a question to be decided elsewhere; our province is only to consider its expediency, and the propriety of maintaining it, if it exist, or of establishing it, if it be of doubtful authority.

The inquiry involves the still larger question of the propriety of observing a distinction between the functions of the Attorney and of the Advocate. Into this wide field of investigation we will not now enter, but assume that a distinction, recognised by the practice of centuries and the experience of society in all ages and nations, has a primâ facie claim upon our respect which it will need powerful arguments to overthrow.

Mr. BIRD's proposition at once defeats this existing arrangement. He would destroy all distinction between the Attorney and the Advocate, and permit the latter to discharge the functions of both.

Numberless are the objections that offer themselves to this innovation upon established practice. We can name a few only of the most prominent. The degradation of the Bar is the least of the mischiefs that would spring from this union of functions, although that, as we have more than once had occasion to shew, is to the people a matter of more serious concern than at the first glance might appear. But the indirect evils would be multitudinous. The division of labour is as beneficial in professional as in mechanical pursuits; the attorney who well performed his business could not qualify himself for the duties of counsel; the advocate competent to his task would have no time for the due performance of the work of the attorney. Both duties would be worse done than now; nor would the client at all profit by the change, for still the counsel who performed the work of the attorney would require to be paid for it, in addition to the fee for his labours as advocate.

Then the great advantage would be lost which now is felt in the decorum and calmness with which the business of our courts of justice is transacted. The effect of parties conducting their own causes, with heated personal animosities, may be determined by any man who has spent a morning in a provincial justice-room, or a Court of Requests. The evil would be but one degree removed were counsel to receive their instructions directly from the parties; unavoidably they would catch some of their heat and animosity, and so be unfitted for taking that large and accurate view of a case which enables them to bring it to an issue in the most speedy and satisfactory manner. If any proof of this be wanting, we appeal to the experience of all our readers, whether attorney or counsel, if briefs, however carefully got up by the attorney, do not in the majority of cases, take erroneous views (for this reason, that from his minute knowledge of the case in the getting up of it, the attorney's mind is influenced by facts and conversations and impressions that are not evidence), and if counsel, who come to it without prejudice, and look at the proofs and the proofs only, are not obliged often to adopt a very different course from that recommended by the attorney. According to the present arrangement, the one supplies precisely the defect of the other, and by their combined labours the case is produced in its most perfect shape. But let counsel be his own attorney, and the mischiefs we have described will soon be seen to arise, in company with a host of others we have not space now even to name.

For these reasons, while acknowledging the integrity of Mr. BIRD's motives, and fairly admitting that if the evil of which he complains exist, something should be devised for its cure, we must emphatically protest against the course he has adopted, and urgently call upon the authorities to maintain in its utmost rigour the wholesome rule of professional etiquette at present recognised. That something might be done to put an end to the grievance, if it exist, Mr. BIRD makes the subject of his complaint, we readily acknowledge, but his remedy is worse than the disease.

The colloquy at the assizes must be the subject of a distinct inquiry.

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.

THE Solicitor-General has introduced so many amendments into this project of law, that it has assumed almost a new shape. The additions exceed the original Bill in length, and almost equal them in importance. We give it at length below, and we propose now to present a short summary of the alterations made, with some comments.

In the first place, we must express our regret that no one of the objections which have been preferred against particular provisions of the Bill by experienced members of the Profession has been removed by the amendments. Still the power of imprisonment is restricted to forty days; still there is no provision for the case of conflicting jurisdictions; still the very equivocal clause remains relative to Counsel and Attorneys. Pity it is that Mr. KELLY, when framing his amendments, had not extended his cares a little further, and so have prevented much doubt and difficulty that will assuredly impede the working of a measure substantially so good.

Twelve entirely new clauses have been introduced for the purpose of enlarging and regulating the jurisdiction of Courts of Requests. These clauses are in effect a Local Courts Bill. They provide that one Secretary of State may enlarge or alter the jurisdiction of any Court of Requests; for the appointment of a judge, who must either be a barrister or special pleader, or an attorney of ten years' standing; for appointment of a deputy by such judge, in case of illness; they give power to frame a table of fees, and provide a fund for the erection of court-house and offices, by a poundage of sixpence in the pound upon sums claimed. A power is given to remove suits exceeding 5*l.* into the superior courts, and also to execute warrants and levy executions out of the jurisdiction.

To the bill is attached a table of fees too long to be extracted this week, but we will endeavour to find room for it in our next.

Of the propriety of thus introducing a Local Courts Bill under cover of a Bill having a purpose so much more restricted, we entertain very great doubt. There are so many and such serious considerations connected with any scheme for local courts, that justice cannot be done to the subject at the close of a session amid the accumulation of business, and the consequence must be, either that a necessarily inefficient and incomplete measure will be made law in a hurry, or the passing of a good measure of more urgency upon which it has been engrafted, will be endangered. But remonstrance is now too late. For good or for evil, Lord BROUGHAM's Bill has been saddled with Mr. KELLY's amendments, and they must stand or fall together.

3. Clause (A). How order shall be executed.—And be it enacted, that every bailiff to whom any such order shall be issued shall be thereby empowered to take the body of the person against whom such order shall be made, and all constables and other peace officers within their several jurisdictions shall aid in the execution of every such order; and no protection or certificate, or interim order issuing out of any court of bankruptcy, or for the relief of insolvent debtors, or otherwise howsoever, shall be available to any debtor taken in execution under such order as aforesaid.

4. Clause (B). Imprisonment may cease on payment of debt.—And be it declared and enacted, That no imprisonment under this Act shall in anywise operate as satisfaction or extinguishment of any debt or demand; but any person imprisoned under this Act who shall have paid or satisfied the debt or demand and costs remaining due at the time of the order of imprisonment being made, and all subsequent costs, may be discharged out of custody by leave of the commissioner or judge of the court by whom the order of imprisonment was made.

5. Clause (C). Certain courts to have the like powers in original suits.—And be it enacted, That the judge of every court of requests or conscience, and of every inferior court of record for the recovery of debts, and of every other court for the recovery of small debts, of which the judge is a barrister-at-law or special pleader, or an attorney of ten years' standing of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, in which court proceedings shall be heard for the recovery of any debt or demand within the jurisdiction of the said court, shall have the like powers in the suit instituted for recovery of such debt or demand, of examining the parties to the suit, and upon occasion of pronouncing judgment thereon, if judgment be given for the plaintiff, shall have the like powers of further examining the parties, and in the several cases hereinbefore specified of committing the defendant to prison, which he might exercise under the provision hereinbefore contained, if judgment for such debt or demand had been obtained in his court, and the judgment creditor had obtained a summons for such defendant from the same court under this Act, and all the provisions of this Act shall be deemed to apply to such case as if such summons had been obtained.

6. Where several courts exist in the same town, &c., business not to be transferred from one to the other.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That in any city, town, or district wherein there are several courts for the recovery of small debts, neither of the said courts shall have any power under this Act in respect of any debt which shall have been sued for in the other of the said courts in the same city, town, or district, unless such other of the said courts shall not have a judge qualified as hereinbefore specified.

7. Application to commissioners, &c. need not be made by counsel or attorney. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116.—And be it declared and enacted, That in making application to any commissioner or court as aforesaid, or taking any proceedings under this Act, or under the Act hereinbefore referred to, or under an Act made in the sixth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled, "An Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors," it shall not be requisite for any party, whether creditor or debtor, to employ either counsel or attorney or solicitor.

8. Affidavits in bankruptcy and insolvency may be sworn before keepers of prisons.—And be it enacted, That any affidavit of any prisoner in any of her Majesty's prisons or gaols in England or Wales to be used in matters of bankruptcy or insolvency, or under or by virtue of any statute relating to bankrupts or insolvent debtors, or of this Act, may be sworn before the visiting or other justice, or if within twelve hours none such shall attend, then by the principal keeper or gaoler of such prisons or gaols respectively; and they and he shall be respectively authorized and required to administer the oath upon any such affidavit or affidavits.

9. Interim orders to persons in custody to be granted, upon petition, without delay.—And be it declared and enacted, That it shall not be lawful for the commissioners of bankrupt to refuse the interim protecting order to any person actually in custody and petitioning for the same, or to postpone granting such order for two days, or for any other period of time, upon the ground of enabling the detaining creditor to shew cause against granting such order, or upon any other ground whatever.

10. Clause (D). Jurisdiction of courts may be altered.—And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state at any time, by order to be by him made under his hand and seal, to enlarge the jurisdiction of any such court of requests or conscience, or inferior court of record, for the recovery of debts, or other court for the recovery of small debts, to all debts and demands, whether on balance of account or otherwise, or damage arising out of any express or implied agreement, not exceeding fifteen pounds, and in such cases as he may think fit, to enlarge the district of any such court, or where any part of the district of such court is comprised within the jurisdiction of any other like court, to contract the same and all powers and authorities now vested in any such court the jurisdiction or district

The following is the Bill as amended by the committee:—

A Bill intituled "An Act for the better securing the Payment of Small Debts."

1. Preamble. Creditor obtaining judgment or order in respect of debt not exceeding 20l. may summon debtor before a commissioner of bankrupts or Court of Requests, &c.—Whereas it is expedient and just to give creditors a further remedy for the recovery of debts due to them; be it therefore enacted, by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That if any person is or shall be indebted to any other in a sum not exceeding twenty pounds besides costs of suit, by force of any judgment obtained, or of any order for the payment thereof, or of any costs in any court, which judgment or order shall have been obtained from any court of competent jurisdiction in England, it shall be lawful for the creditor so having obtained a judgment or order to obtain a summons from any commissioner of bankrupts for the district in which such debtor shall reside or be, or from any court of requests or conscience, or inferior court of record for the recovery of debts, or other court for the recovery of small debts, within the jurisdiction of which such debtor shall reside or be, having a judge who shall be either a barrister-at law, special pleader, or an attorney of not less than ten years' standing of one of her Majesty's superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster, which summons such commissioner of bankrupts or such court shall be authorized and required to grant, according to the form in schedule (A) hereunto annexed, upon the application of such creditor by any petition or note in writing, according to the form in schedule (B) hereunto annexed; and the debtor appearing before such commissioner or court at the time to be appointed in such summons, shall be examined by the said commissioner or court, and shall, if the creditor think fit, be interrogated before such commissioner or court by the creditor summoning him, touching the manner and time of his contracting his debt, the means or prospect of payment he then had, the property or means of payment he still hath or may have, the disposal he may have made of any property since contracting such debt; and such creditor shall also, if such commissioner or court shall think fit, be examined by the said commissioner or court touching his claim against the said debtor; and it shall be lawful for such commissioner or court to make an order on the said debtor for the payment of his debt by instalments or otherwise; and in case such debtor shall not attend as required by the said summons, and shall not allege a sufficient excuse for not attending, or shall, if attending, refuse to disclose his property, or his transactions respecting the same, or respecting the contracting of the debt, or shall not make answer thereof to the satisfaction of the commissioner or court, or shall appear to such commissioner or court to have been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt, or of having wilfully contracted it without reasonable prospect of being able to pay it, or of having concealed or made away with his property in order to defeat his creditors, or if he appears to have the means of paying the same by instalments or otherwise, and shall not pay the same at such times as the commissioner or court shall order, then in any of the said cases it shall be lawful for such commissioner, or the chairman, assessor, or other presiding officer of such court, to order such debtor, to be committed for any time not exceeding forty days to the common gaol wherein the debtors under judgment and in execution of the superior courts of justice may be confined within the county, city, borough, or place in which such debtor shall be resident, or to any other gaol or debtors' prison within the same county, which shall by any unrevoked declaration of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state be allowed as a place of imprisonment under this Act: provided always, that in case a day other than the day of issuing such order for imprisonment shall be appointed for payment of the debt, or of any instalment thereof, no order for imprisonment for non-payment of the debt, or of any instalment thereof, shall be made by such commissioner or judge, until it shall be made to appear to his satisfaction that the debtor has made default, and has disobeyed the order for payment by instalment or otherwise.

2. Commissioner, &c. may order payment of debt out of salary, pay, or pension, &c.—And be it enacted, That in making such order for payment as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such commissioner or court; and they shall be authorized and required, to order such debtor to make payment of his debt out of any salary or wages, or pay or half-pay or pension, which he may be entitled to receive after making such reasonable deduction thereout as to the commissioner or court shall seem necessary for the subsistence of the debtor and his or her family, and the not paying as ordered out of such salary, wages, pay, or pension shall be deemed such disobedience as authorizes the said commissioner or judge to order the imprisonment of the debtor: provided always, that no such order of imprisonment shall be made for any longer time than forty days.

whereof shall be so enlarged, or the district whereof shall be so contracted, shall apply and extend to the jurisdiction or district given or limited under the powers of this Act, and that as fully as if such jurisdiction or district had been given by the Act or Acts establishing or regulating such court and its proceedings: provided always, that no such order shall be made in respect of any court which shall not have a judge who is either a barrister-at-law or special pleader, or an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster (such attorney being of at least ten years' standing), and who shall be approved of by the Secretary of State making such order; and it shall be lawful for the commissioners of any court in which there shall be no such judge, or a majority of those who shall be present at a meeting called for the purpose, to appoint a judge qualified as aforesaid, subject to the approval of the said Secretary of State.

11. Clause (E). Who shall be competent to hold the court.—And be it enacted, That no such order shall avail to extend the jurisdiction of any such court for the trial of any cause in the absence of the judge; and that whenever the number of commissioners present at any court shall not be sufficient for the trial of causes according to the constitution of the court before the passing of this Act, the judge shall act alone with all the powers of the court, whether or not enlarged or altered under this Act, and shall determine all questions, as well of fact as of law, in the causes which shall be brought before him.

12. Clause (F). Appointing of a deputy.—And be it enacted, That in all cases of illness or unavoidable absence, the cause whereof shall be entered in the minutes of the court, it shall be lawful for the judge, or, in case of the inability of the judge, for the commissioners, to appoint a deputy, qualified as is hereinbefore provided in the case of the judge, to act for him during such illness or unavoidable absence, and any deputy so appointed, while acting under such appointment, shall have all the powers and privileges and perform all the duties of such judge.

13. Clause (G). Power for judge to frame a table of fees.—And be it enacted, That the judge of any such court, the jurisdiction or district whereof shall be extended under the powers of this Act, shall, subject to the approval of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, frame a table of fees to be payable by the suitors of such court or courts, in respect of every proceeding therein; and a table of such fees shall be put in some conspicuous place in the court-house and in the clerk's office, and the fees on every proceeding shall be paid in the first instance by the plaintiff, or party on whose behalf such proceeding is to be had, on or before such proceeding; and all such fees shall be received by the clerk or clerks of such court, who shall account to the other officers of such court for the amount or proportion thereof, which shall be payable to them respectively; and shall also, when required so to do, render an account of all such fees to the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Secretary of State to lessen the amount of the fees to be taken in any one or more of the courts, the jurisdiction or district whereof shall be extended as aforesaid, in such manner as to him shall seem fit; and again to increase such fees, so that the scale of fees given in the schedule to this Act marked (C) be not in any case surpassed: provided also, that in all cases where any clerk or other officer of any such court shall have been paid by salary instead of fees, such clerk or other officer shall continue to receive such salary, with such reasonable addition thereto, in any case in which under the powers of this Act the duties of such clerk or other officer will become more laborious, as the judge shall direct, with the approval of the Secretary of State; and all sums payable in the name of fees to any such clerk or other officer over and above the amount of such salary, shall be applicable for such purposes and in the manner prescribed by the Act or Acts of Parliament under which such court is constituted.

14. Clause (H). Poundage to be demanded from suitors upon sum claimed.—And be it enacted, That, for raising a fund for providing a court-house and offices for any court of requests, or other court for the recovery of small debts, the clerk or clerks of any such court in which, and while it shall be necessary to raise such fund, shall demand and receive from the plaintiff in every suit brought in that court before he shall issue any summons in that suit, the sum of sixpence when the debt or damage claimed shall not exceed twenty shillings, and for every claim exceeding twenty shillings, one-fortieth part thereof (neglecting any sum less than threepence in estimating such fortieth part) or other such sum, in either case not exceeding the rates hereinbefore mentioned, as the commissioner of her Majesty's treasury from time to time shall order, which sum shall be paid in all cases in the first instance by the plaintiff upon suit brought in such court, and shall be considered as costs in the cause, and the clerk or clerks of the court shall keep an account of all moneys so paid to him or them, and shall account for the same to the judge of such court for the time being, and the amount thereof shall accumulate to form a general fund for such court, and shall be applied in defraying the rent and taxes, stationery and other necessary expenses of holding and carrying on the business of such court, in such manner as the commissioners for the time being shall direct.

15. Clause (I). Lists of unclaimed suitors' money to be made out.—And be it enacted, That the clerk or clerks of every such court shall, in the month of January in each year, make out a correct list of all sums of money, belonging to suitors in the court, which shall have been paid into court, and which shall have remained unclaimed for the space of twelve calendar months before the first day of the said month of January, specifying the names of the parties for whom or on whose account the same were so paid into court; and a copy of such list shall be put up and remain, during court hours, in some conspicuous part of the court-house, and at all times in the clerk's office.

16. Clause (K). All suitors' money paid into court and unclaimed for six years to go into the court fund.—And be it enacted, That all sums of money which shall have been paid into any such court, to the use of any suitor or suitors thereof, and which shall have remained unclaimed for the period of six years before the passing of this Act, and all further sums of money which shall hereafter be paid into any such court to the use of any suitor or suitors thereof, shall, if unclaimed for the period of six years after the same shall have been so paid into court, vest in and belong to the commissioners of such court for the time being, in trust for the general purposes of such court, and shall form a general fund for the payment of all just debts, and the necessary expenses of holding or carrying on the business of such court.

17. Clause (L). Power to remove suits exceeding 5l. into superior courts.—And be it enacted, That any suit to be instituted in any such court wherein the claim or demand shall exceed the sum of five pounds, shall be removable by certiorari or otherwise into any of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, or into the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, by leave of a judge of any one of the said courts, and upon such terms as he shall order.

18. Clause (M). Power to execute warrants and levy executions out of jurisdiction.—And be it enacted, That in all cases where final judgment shall have been obtained in any such court, and a warrant or execution shall have issued against the goods and chattels of the defendant, or an order for his commitment shall have been made under this Act, and the defendant, or his goods and chattels, shall be out of the jurisdiction of such court, it shall be lawful for the officer charged with such warrant, execution, or order of commitment, to apply to any justice of the peace acting for any county, division, or place in which the defendant or his goods and chattels shall then be, upon proof being made upon oath (which oath such justice shall be empowered to administer), that the person or goods and chattels of such defendant is or are believed to be within the county, division, or place where such justice of the peace shall act, such justice of the peace shall sign or indorse his name upon the said warrant, execution, or order of commitment, and thereupon the said officer charged therewith shall take and seize the person or the goods and chattels of the defendant wheresoever the same shall be found within the county, division, or place for which such justice of the peace shall act; and all constables and other peace officers shall be aiding and assisting within their respective districts in the execution of the said warrants, executions, or orders.

19. Clause (N). Interpretation of the word "judge."—And be it enacted, That in the construction of this Act the word "judge" shall be construed to include every person, being either a barrister-at-law or an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, who, according to the constitution of the court, presides in any such court as aforesaid, or acts as judge or assessor therein, whether by the title of judge or barrister or county clerk, assessor, or steward or deputy steward, or by any other style or title whatsoever.

SHAM LAWYERS.

We have received a large number of threatening letters, addressed by a Mr. Kelk, of Newcastle, for the most part to individuals in humble life, who are the more likely to be intimidated by his menaces. We recommend this person to the care of the Newcastle and Gateshead Law Society, to be dealt with as to them may seem meet.

We subjoin a specimen of Mr. Kelk's circulars.

Sir,—Mr. Thompson, of Haswell, and his son, Mr. Isaac Thompson, were with me this morning, and directed me to cause peremptory proceedings to be adopted for the recovery of the amount of your account, in fact they were surprised to hear that I had not already done so; they know you can pay it if you will; this is therefore to inform you that no further application will be made for the same; but if it be not paid at this office by Wednesday, the 23rd instant, a writ will be issued against you in respect thereof.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
William Kelk.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The ninth number of Practice Cases, and the thirteenth number of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, are now published.

The tenth of Practice, the fourteenth of Real Property, and the twelfth of Magistrates' Cases, are in the press.

The second part of Cox's Criminal Law Cases has been published for a week past. It was hastened onward that it might be ready for use on the Circuits now in progress. It brings down all the cases to a very recent date, and very few of them have been reported elsewhere.

We must again request payment of the present year's subscriptions.

A form of agreement for a building-lease has been prepared by counsel, and is now printing.

Many new conveyancing forms are being settled by Counsel for the use of the Society; such as the common trustee clauses in a will, the common covenants and provisos in a mortgage; the trustee clauses in settlements.

We shall be obliged for suggestions for forms that would be useful in practice.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—CONDITIONS OF SALE—INTEREST.

Our readers are well aware that it is now the common practice to insert amongst the Conditions of Sale, a stipulation that if, "from any cause whatever," the contract be not completed on a specified day, the purchaser shall thenceforth pay interest. A doubt has been felt how far the Courts would sanction such a condition in a case where the purchaser has done all in his power, and the blame of the delay rests solely on the vendor. On the one hand, the argument has been, that, whether reasonable or unreasonable, the purchaser had full notice of the condition, and of the consequences which it might entail, and if he choose to purchase under it, it is his own fault, and he cannot justly complain of the results; but, on the other hand, it has been contended, that the purchaser had a right to presume bona fides and reasonable diligence on the part of the vendor; that if the latter could not be prepared, or would not take the necessary pains, to complete at the appointed time, his failure must be considered decided misconduct on his part; and to allow him then to insist upon the condition would be a premium for that misconduct.

The point was brought to an issue in the late case of Greenwood v. Churchill (Law T. March 22). Under an order of the Court of Chancery, property was put up for sale in June 1839; by the conditions (which were very strict), the purchaser was required, on or before the 9th of November in that year, to pay his purchase-money and the amount of certain valuations into court, and he was thenceforth to be entitled to the rents; "but if, from any cause whatever, the purchase-money and valuations should not be paid by the time stipulated, the purchaser should thenceforth pay interest thereon at five per cent." The abstract was to be delivered at a particular time—it was not so; for full a year after, nothing that could be called a useful document was delivered, and at the end of two years and a half the title was not made out; ultimately the purchaser agreed to take it, though still unmarketable, but he objected to pay interest. The question was, under the circumstances could he be compelled to pay it? The Master of the Rolls held that he could, as it was part of his contract. "It is unnecessary to say that the vendor ought not to proceed to a sale without looking to his title and seeing that he is able to make one; but suppose the vendor to have failed in this, the question is, whether such failure is a reason for altering the terms of the contract; and I think it is not; there it is, and the parties must abide by it."

His lordship allowed the purchaser to apply for compensation if he thought he could make out a case, an effectual mode of relief perhaps in that particular instance, the sale having been made under a decree; but it would be little satisfactory to an ordinary purchaser, who must file a bill for the purpose

In Greenwood v. Churchill it will have been observed the purchaser had possession; this circumstance, however, seems of no great consequence, for if the stipulation had been that he should not have possession until completion, but nevertheless should pay interest, it would have been equally part of the contract; and therefore, according to the Master of the Rolls, it would have been enforced. The reasonableness or unreasonableness of the stipulation, and the conduct of the parties, are apparently immaterial.

We have thought it right to draw our readers' attention to this case, that they may be fully aware of the extent of liability which attaches under the condition in question. The circumstances of the case were remarkable, and calculated to test the doctrine, for it seems at the time of sale the vendor had not a shadow of evidence of title. He could not even deliver an abstract; he broke his own agreement in that respect; he alone caused the delay; no blame is cast upon the purchaser; yet having, at the end of four years, consented to take the title, though it was even then unmarketable, he is condemned to pay interest during the whole period. With this decision before him, can a solicitor advise his client to purchase under the condition in question? Can a trustee be advised to make such a purchase? And if not, if this condition be of such a discouraging nature, is a trustee in a sale justified in inserting it?

In Greenwood v. Churchill, of course the purchaser might have abandoned the contract, on finding that the vendor could not give him a title. We have enlarged upon the case, principally to shew that the condition will be upheld by the courts, and that misconduct on the part of the vendor will not prejudice his right to avail himself of it. Cases are repeatedly occurring in practice, in which a vendor, having a perfectly good title, is guilty of scandalous laches in completing. Not long ago, in a case before us, requisitions of an ordinary character were left unanswered for upwards of four months; the defendant's conveyance was also detained a very unreasonable length of time; and eventually the purchaser had to pay six months' interest, though he had used every effort to complete, and there was no reason for non-completion at the time appointed. In such a case a purchaser seems to be substantially without remedy. Surely a solicitor ought seriously to consider before he allows a client to place himself to such an extent at the mercy of a vendor.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

BARRS v. JACKSON.

Dec. 11 and 14, 1843, July 10, 1845.

Letters of administration—Determination of the Ecclesiastical Court—Next of kin.

The grant of letters of administration to the next of kin, after a contest in the Ecclesiastical Court, is conclusive evidence that the administrator is sole next of kin, in a suit in this court for distribution of the intestate's effects. The Court is bound by the express authority of the House of Lords, which decided the same point in Bouchier v. Taylor.

This was an appeal by the defendant from a decree of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, which directed an issue to try whether the plaintiff, Mrs. Barrs, was the sole next of kin of Harriet Martindale Smith at the time of her death intestate. Mrs. Barrs was the only child of the brother of the half-blood of the intestate, and the defendant Richard Jackson was her second cousin. The right to administration had been contested between these parties in the Prerogative Court, which had decided in favour of the defendant Jackson, to whom administration had been granted. The question there was the legitimacy of the plaintiff's father, the half-brother of the intestate. The object of the present suit was for an account of the intestate's estate, that the residue might be paid over to the plaintiff, and, in the mean time, that the defendant might be restrained from selling out or transferring the intestate's stock.

Simpkinson and Heathfield, for the plaintiff.

Purvis and Hubback, for the defendant.

The following cases were cited and referred to: Blackborough v. Davis (1 Peere Williams, 41, and in Salkeld); Blackham's case (1 Salkeld, 290); David v. Froud (1 Myl. & Keene, 200); Long v. Wakelin (1 Beavan, 400); Robins v. Crutchley (2 Wilson, 122, 127); Elmsley v. Young (2 Myl. & Keene, 780); Witty v. Mangles (4 Beavan, 358); Thomas v. Ketteriche (1 Ves. sen. 333); Bouchier v. Taylor (4 Bro. Par. Cas. 708; Toml. ed. JUDGMENT.

July 10.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this case one Harriet Martindale Smith died unmarried and intestate, and a suit was instituted in the Prerogative Court for administration of the intestate's property, the defendant Jackson claiming in that suit as second cousin and next of kin of the intestate, and the plaintiff, Mrs. Barrs, claiming as niece and next of kin of the intestate. The Prerogative Court decided in favour of the claim of Jackson, the sentence being that he should have administration as the next of kin of the intestate. A suit was afterwards instituted in this court by Mrs. Barrs, claiming, as niece and next of kin, the residuary estate of the intestate, Harriet Martindale Smith. The defendant Jackson, in his answer, insists on the sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court in favour of his claim as being conclusive, the very same question put in issue in this suit having been decided by the sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court. The question here, therefore, is, whether the same point put in issue in this cause has been decided in favour of the defendant Jackson by the Ecclesiastical Court, and whether that sentence is conclusive. Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce directed an issue, and against that decision this appeal is brought to this court. It was said in the course of the argument that this question had been decided in the year 1776, in the House of Lords, in the case of Bouchier v. Taylor, which is to be found in the 4th of Brown's Parliamentary Cases. If the point has been raised and decided in that case by the House of Lords, that being the ultimate court of appeal, this Court is bound by that decision. It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider, with some degree of attention, the case of Bouchier v. Taylor. I will here state the facts of the case. Alice Merchant as first cousin, and Dr. Bouchier as first cousin once removed, had been competitors in the Prerogative Court for administration to Mrs. Millington, an intestate; and Alice Merchant dying during the suit, her executors became parties, and a sentence was pronounced, declaring that they had failed in proving her next of kin, and therefore directing administration to be granted to Dr. Bouchier. Several years after, Taylor, who was Alice Merchant's residuary legatee, and not a party to the suit about administration, filed a bill in Chancery against Dr. Bouchier for a distribution, and though he had pleaded the sentence, the then Master of the Rolls granted an issue to try whether Alice Merchant was next of kin; and his order, on appeal, was confirmed by Lord Chancellor Bathurst. The question in that case was, whether the decision in the suit for administration in the Ecclesiastical Court was conclusive and binding on the parties. It was not a suit between the same original parties to the administration, but a suit against one of those parties by a person claiming under the other, which, in effect, was the same thing. The decision in that case proceeded solely upon the same point as in this case, viz. which of the two parties is next of kin. When that suit came on, the sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court was pleaded in bar. The plea was ordered to stand for an answer, with liberty to except. Exceptions were taken to the answer. Dr. Bouchier appealed to the Lords, and before them two points were made, one being whether the sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court was not conclusive; the other, whether the special circumstances of the case did not make an issue improper. When the case was brought to the House of Lords by appeal, Lord Bathurst was still Lord Chancellor. Lord Mansfield was present, and was the only person who took part in the discussion, and the House of Lords reversed the decree of Lord Chancellor Bathurst, on both grounds, in his presence. If the decision in that case is well founded, it is binding on this Court. It was said that nothing appeared upon the face of that decree to shew the grounds upon which the Lords decided that case. As to that, it is to be remarked that it is not the usage of the House of Lords to state on the face of their orders the grounds of their decisions. In order to know the grounds of their decisions, the reports of the House of Lords must be looked into, and what was said by their lordships in pronouncing their judgments on the cases brought under their consideration. In 1776 there were no reports of cases in the House of Lords. Mr. Brown only made abstracts from the appeal cases lying on the table of the House, and therefore the grounds of the decision cannot be known from the abstract of the case in Brown. But it so happens that the grounds of that decision upon both points are known, from the circumstance that Mr. Hargrave was counsel in the case, took a part in the argument, and was present at the decision given by the House of Lords. There can be no better evidence than Mr. Hargrave's on the matter, which is to be found in his Law Tracts. I will here read from Mr. Hargrave's work the account he gave of the grounds on which the House of Lords decided the case, in these words, viz.: "There are two general grounds on which the appellants conceive the issue to try whether Alice Merchant was the cousin-german and next of kin of the intestate, Ann Millington, ought to have been refused. One is, that the sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court, by which the letters of administration were granted to the appellant, Dr. Bouchier, excludes the Court of Chancery from the power of directing an issue. The other is, that if the Court had the power, yet, under the particular circumstances of the present case, it ought not to have been exercised in favour of the respondent." From these reasons it appears to me that the decision would be the same, although the objects of the two suits were different, the one suit being for distribution and the other for an administration. If I was satisfied that the representation made in respect to the decision of the case of Bouchier v. Taylor was correct, and had no reason to doubt it, the point arising in this case has been decided by the ultimate court of appeal, and I am bound by it. It was then said that the judges in the House of Lords had, in the same year (1776), in the judgment delivered on their behalf by Lord Chief Justice De Gray, in the case of The Duchess of Kingston, expressed an opinion at variance with the decision in Bouchier v. Taylor. No opinion of the judges can be taken as against the opinion of the House of Lords, unless so far as it is adopted and made part of a judgment given by the House of Lords. That case is a different one to the case of Bouchier v. Taylor. That suit (The Duchess of Kingston) was a suit for jactitation of marriage. It was a case decided between Mr. Harvey and the Duchess of Kingston. The suit was not between the Crown and the Duchess of Kingston, but the prosecution for bigamy was between the Crown and the Duchess of Kingston; and the sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court was held not conclusive in the prosecution for bigamy. There is, therefore, nothing at all in that case at variance with the decision in Bouchier v. Taylor. It was then said, that, from the form of the sentence in the present case, it is not to be held conclusive. Mr. Jackson proves he was next of kin, and he was granted administration, and the sentence in his case is the same as that in Bouchier v. Taylor. It appears to me that nothing turns on the form of the sentence; the sentence is a decision founded on the facts proved before the Court, a mere technical form of expression on the facts which were proved, for the purpose of obtaining the administration. It is material to observe, that before the case of Bouchier v. Taylor was decided, the point had been decided in a case (Thomas v. Ketterick) before Lord Hardwicke. In that case the parties were both considered to be next of kin in equal degree. Lord Hardwicke said there, that the question as to the conclusiveness of the sentence could not be argued, the decision of the Ecclesiastical Court being conclusive of itself. I consider the case of Thomas v. Ketterick a much stronger case than Bouchier v. Taylor. A suit for distribution might have been instituted in the Ecclesiastical Court as well as in the Court of Chancery, both courts having a concurrent jurisdiction in the matter; and the sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court in such a case would be held to be conclusive. I have consulted judges of the highest authority on this point, and I am informed that a sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court unappealed from is conclusive. It is true that Lord Hardwicke agreed with the decision of the Ecclesiastical Court; but even if he differed in opinion, he still would be bound by the sentence. Blackman's case (1 Salkeld, 290) was cited in the course of the argument. That was a case before Lord Holt. It is remarkable that Lord Mansfield, in giving the decision in Bouchier v. Taylor, relied on and read the language of Lord Holt, from the case in Salkeld. I will not enter into the general arguments which have been addressed to the Court upon the case; for it is unnecessary, inasmuch as this case so closely resembles the case of Bouchier v. Taylor. If the question in this case is decided by the decision of the House of Lords in Bouchier v. Taylor, I am bound by it, whatever difference of opinion I might entertain on the matter; and therefore, for these reasons, the appeal must be allowed.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT

CREED v. PERRY.

Wife's reversionary interest—Chose in action—Surrender by tenant for life—Reduction into possession.

A husband and his wife were entitled in her right to a share of a reversionary interest in a certain fund held upon trust for her benefit, subject to the life estate therein of A. T. her mother. For the purpose of reducing the reversionary share of the wife into possession, they both agreed with A. T. for the surrender to them of her life interest, which she, A. T. consented to do. The trustees, however, refused to transfer the fund, except under the indemnity of the Court. Held, that with the consent of the wife such transfer might be made.

By an indenture of settlement dated the 10th of May, 1811, and made upon the intended marriage (which afterwards was duly solemnized) between Charles Hawkins and Ann Taylor, one of the defendants (formerly Ann Creed, widow of Thos. Creed, deceased), after reciting that the said Thos. Creed at the time of his death had three children by a former wife, namely, Mary, Jane, and Thomas, who were all then living, and were infants, and that the defendant Ann Taylor (then Ann Creed) had four children by the said Thos. Creed, namely, the plaintiff Ann, the wife of William Raydon, another of the plaintiffs, George Samuel, and the plaintiff William Creed, all likewise infants; it was witnessed that Joseph Sutton Loder and Samuel Creed (trustees of the settlement), their executors, administrators, and assigns, should stand possessed of two sums of 662*l.* 10s. Navy 5 per cent. Annuities, and 500*l.* 4*l.* per cent. Annuities, and the interest divided and annual produce thereof respectively, upon trust to pay the dividends, interest, and annual produce thereof to the said Ann Taylor for life, for her sole and separate use, but not by way of anticipation, with remainder after her decease upon trust for the benefit of the seven children of Thomas Creed, in equal shares, to be vested interests in them respectively, as and when they should severally attain the age of twenty-one years, being a son or sons, or attain that age or be married, being a daughter or daughters, which should first happen, and to be transferred and assigned to them respectively, at the ages, days, or times aforesaid, if the same should happen after the decease of Ann Taylor; but if the same should happen in her lifetime, then the shares were to be transferred and assigned immediately after her decease, with a proviso for the benefit of survivorship among the children.

Charles Hawkins died in the year 1820; and Ann, his widow, afterwards intermarried with George Taylor, who died several years since, and before the filing of the bill. In the year 1827 Jane Creed, one of the three children of Thomas Creed, intermarried with W. F. Morgan, and died in the month of October, 1827, leaving W. F. Morgan, her husband, her surviving, to whom letters of administration of her estate and effects were duly granted. One of the children of Thomas Creed died under the age of 21.

The trust funds were now vested and standing in the names of J. A. Perry and R. Hill, two of the defendants, as executors of the will of Joseph Sutton Loder, the surviving trustee, under the settlement of marriage of 10th May, 1811, who regularly paid the dividends of the trust fund as they arose to him, Taylor, until the month of April, 1843.

A bill was now filed by Thomas Creed and Mary Creed, two of the above-named children of Thomas Creed, against Ann Taylor, as the administrator of Thomas Creed, her former husband; and by a decree in the suit dated the 26th of June, 1844, it having appeared that the plaintiffs and the defendant, W. F. Morgan, by their counsel had consented to waive all further claim on the estate of the intestate Thomas Creed, and all benefit under the settlement above mentioned, it was ordered that the trustees should sell so much of the 695l. 12s. 6d. New 3½ per cent. Bank Annuities, and 500l. 3½ per cent. Reduced Annuities, not exceeding three 7th parts of such trust-funds, as might be sufficient to raise and to pay each of the plaintiffs, and the defendant W. F. Morgan, the sum of 70l. in full satisfaction of all claims and demands of the plaintiff and W. F. Morgan under the settlement, or otherwise in respect of the estate of the said intestate.

The proportion of the stock directed by the above decree had been sold, and the sum of 70l. was paid to each of the plaintiffs and W. F. Morgan, and there now remained standing in the names of J. A. Perry and Robert Hill upon the trust of the settlement the two several sums of 419l. 9s. New 3½ per cent. Bank Annuities, and 500l. 3½ per cent. Reduced Bank Annuities, together with an arrear of interest which had accrued since the month of April, 1843.

The parties who were interested in the trust-fund were, the defendant, Ann Taylor, as tenant for life, George Creed (out of the jurisdiction), and the plaintiffs, Wm. Raydon and Ann his wife, and William Creed, who were respectively entitled, upon the decease of Ann Taylor, to the residue of the fund.

The plaintiffs being desirous of reducing their reversionary interest in two-thirds of the remaining trust funds into possession, and having them forthwith paid to them, entered into an arrangement with Ann Taylor, who agreed to surrender her life estate in the said two-thirds to the plaintiffs, or to them and J. A. Perry and Robert Hill, in order that such reversion might be reduced into possession; but the trustees refused to join in any such arrangement, except under the direction and indemnity of the Court, alleging that it was doubtful whether in the event of W. Raydon dying in the lifetime of his wife, and before the decease of Ann Taylor, the plaintiff Ann Raydon would not, on the death of Ann Taylor, and notwithstanding such surrender of the life estate therein of Ann Taylor, be entitled to have one-third part of the trust-funds paid over to her. The plaintiffs, however, charged that the effect of such surrender would be to reduce the reversionary interest of the plaintiffs, W. Raydon and Ann his wife, in the trust-funds into possession. They therefore prayed that the said two sums of 419l. 9s. New 3½ per cent. Bank Annuities, and 500l. 3½ per cent. Reduced Annuities, might be sold, and that upon payment by J. A. Perry and R. Hill, to Ann Taylor, of the sum of 69l. 5s. 5d. being the amount of interest, dividends, and annual proceeds then in their hands, which had accrued due on the trust-funds since the month of April, 1823; and upon Ann Taylor surrendering her life interest in two third parts of the trust-funds in such manner and to such persons as that the same might be merged and extinguished; that J. A. Perry and Robert Hill might be ordered to pay one third part of the proceeds of such sale to the plaintiff, Wm. Creed, and the other two third parts thereof to the plaintiffs, Wm. Raydon and Ann his wife, or to the plaintiff W. Raydon, in right of his wife, and that the remaining one third part might be paid into court, to the separate account of the said G. Creed, and the interest and dividends directed to be paid to the said Ann Taylor for her life.

Tillotson, for the plaintiffs, referred to 2 Hayes' Convey. 640, and to the case of Bean v. Sykes, cited there; also the case of Zachlan v. Adams (Law Journal).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR conceived that it was competent for the Court to decree a transfer of the fund, but that a petition for that purpose ought to be presented, according to the usual practice, for the payment of the wife's share.

Monday, June 9, 1845.
Ex parte KRAUS.

Legacy act—Power of executor, or other personal representative, to pay money due upon a legacy in the Court—Under what circumstances deterred from so doing—Contingent legacy.

The 32nd sec. of 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, called the Legacy Act, directs that "where by reason of the infancy or absence beyond the seas of any person entitled to any legacy, or to the residue of any personal estate, or any part thereof, chargeable with duty by virtue of this Act, the person or persons having or taking the burden of any will or testamentary instrument, or the administration of such personal estate, cannot pay such legacy or some part thereof, although he, she, or they may have effects for that purpose, or cannot pay such residue or some part thereof, although he, she, or they may have the same, or some part thereof, in his, her, or their hands, it shall be lawful for such person or persons to pay such legacy, or residue, or any part or parts thereof respectively, or any sum or sums of money on account thereof, after deducting the duty chargeable thereon, into the Bank of England, with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to be placed to the account of the person or persons for whose benefit the same shall be so paid, &c. And such money, when paid in, shall be laid out by the said Accountant-General without any formal request for that purpose, in the purchase of Three per Cent. Consols, which, with the dividends thereon, shall be transferred and paid to the person or persons entitled thereto, and otherwise applied for his or their benefit, on application to the Court of Chancery by petition or motion of course in a summary way."

Held, that under the provisions of the 32nd sec. of the above Act, an executor is not entitled to pay into the Court of Chancery the amount of a contingent legacy.

The testator Kraus bequeathed to the petitioner, a foreigner residing abroad, a legacy of 500l., provided he should be living at the death of the testator's widow. Several years since the executors invested the sum of 500l., after deducting the legacy duty, in the purchase of 600l. and a fraction Consolidated Bank Annuities, under the provisions of the above-mentioned Act. The testator's widow survived her husband, and died in the month of May, 1844, and the petitioner now claimed to be absolutely entitled to the stock in question, and prayed that the same might be transferred to him.

Tripp, for the petitioner, contended that the 32nd section of the Act embraced all cases, while the legacy duty was payable under that Act, whether they were contingent legacies or not, and that the petitioners had therefore a right to the stock, with all dividends due thereon.

Heathfield, appearing for the executors, submitted that the legacy being contingent upon the petitioner surviving the widow, it did not come within the provisions of the 32nd section.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR conceived that the Legacy Act only authorized the executor, under the 32nd section, to invest the property where the legatee took an absolute interest in the fund, and not where the legacy was merely contingent, and that therefore the legatee was only entitled to claim the bequest of 500l. after deducting the legacy duty, and was not entitled to the stock or the dividends thereof.

ROLLS COURT.

MERYON v. COLLETT.

Deed—Construction—Limitation to executors or administrators.

By a marriage settlement a sum of stock is vested in trustees for the settlor and his assigns, "for his and their own benefit," during the joint lives of him and his wife: and if he should survive, then to transfer the same to him, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for his and their own use and benefit: but if the wife should survive, then after her death to transfer it to his executors or administrators for their own use and benefit. The settlor died intestate before his wife, and she took out administration to his estate: Held, that she was not, as administratrix, entitled to the trust fund for her own personal enjoyment, but was only a trustee thereof for the next of kin.

The words "for his and their own use and benefit," in the first two cases, are surplusage, and if they mean any thing, must be taken to express more distinctly the extent of interest limited; and the words "their own," &c. in the last case, may be taken more emphatically to shew the amount of interest taken by the executors.

By the marriage settlement of George Marshall and Ann his wife, made after the marriage, but in pursuance of articles entered into before it, after reciting the covenant of G. Marshall to convey hereditaments of 300l. annual value to trustees upon trust to secure Ann Marshall an annuity of 200l. and that it not being convenient to do so, he had transferred 4,000l. Navy 5 per Cent. Annuities into the names of the trustees for that purpose, it was declared that the trustees should stand possessed thereof and of the dividends, on trust, during the joint lives, for George Marshall and his assigns, "for his and their own entire use and benefit;" and in case George Marshall should survive, then upon trust, after the decease of Ann Marshall, to transfer the 4,000l. &c. to George Marshall, his executors, administrators, and assigns, "to and for his and their own use and benefit;" but in case Ann Marshall should survive her husband, then on trust to pay the interest to her for life, and after her decease, to transfer the principal "to" the executors or administrators of George Marshall, to and for their own use and benefit." There was a provision that the same should be accepted by Ann Marshall in lieu of the annuity covenanted to be limited to her, and in lieu of dower.

In August 1816, George Marshall died intestate, leaving him surviving Ann Marshall, his widow, and four children, viz. George, Mary, Sarah (afterwards the wife of William Henry Smith), and Eliza (who married Charles Lewis Meryon); and administration to his estate was taken out by his widow. In 1822, the 4,000l. stock was converted into 4,200l. Navy Four per Cent. Annuities; and in September 1824, the trustees transferred to the widow 1,400l. stock, being one-third of the 4,200l. stock, to which, ever since the death of George Marshall, she was considered to be entitled under the Statute of Distributions. In 1825, George Marshall, the son, died intestate and unmarried, leaving his mother and sisters him surviving, and the former took out administration to him.

In 1834, Ann Marshall, Mary Marshall, and W. H. Smith and his wife, sold to John Collett their interest in the fund for 1,575l., and shortly afterwards the stock was transferred into the joint names of Richard Cox, the surviving trustee, and Collett. In October 1834, Collett purchased from W. H. Smith the share of Mrs. Meryon in the trust-fund for the sum of 550l. on the faith of Smith's representation that he had authority from Mr. and Mrs. Meryon to make the sale. On the 27th November, 1834, Cox died, and Collett thereupon sold out the stock, and appropriated the proceeds to his own use.

In January 1835, Ann Marshall filed her bill in the Court of Exchequer against Collett, claiming to be entitled to the whole of the fund under the ultimate limitation of the deed of settlement to the executors or administrators of George Marshall, in case Ann Marshall survived him, and impeaching the sale of 1834 on the ground of ignorance of her rights, but she was unsuccessful. (Marshall v. Collett, 1 Y. & C. 232.)

In July 1835, Anne Marshall died, and Mary Marshall took out administration de bonis non to her father and brother, whose assets respectively were found sufficient to pay their debts, &c.

Collett having sold out the stock, Mr. and Mrs. Meryon filed their bill against him and Mary Marshall, denying the power of sale assumed by Smith, and praying for a declaration that they were entitled to five-sixteenths of the 2,800l. stock, being two-thirds of the original sum. Collett alleged that Smith had authority, and submitted to the Court whether Ann Marshall was not entitled to the whole fun as administratrix to her husband, and, if so, she claimed it as a purchaser; but no evidence was gone into on either side. The authority to Smith not being proved, the argument turned on the limitation in the settlement.

Turner and Greene, for the plaintiffs, contended that the point was set at rest by the decision in Marshall v. Collett (1 Y. & C. 232). They cited also Hames v. Hames (2 Kee. 646).

Kindersley (with him James), contrà, contended that the administratrix, Ann Marshall, was entitled under the settlement to take beneficially. They cited Sanders v. Franks (2 Mad. 147); Collier v. Squire (3 Russ. 467); Evans v. Charles (1 Anstr. 128); Palin v. Hills (1 Myl. & K. 484).

White, for Mary Marshall, the administratrix, asked for his costs.

Turner, in reply.

The MASTER of the ROLLS. [His lordship having stated the facts, proceeded.]—The defendant, Mr. Collett, has not proved that the contract alleged to have been entered into with W. H. Smith was made by the authority of the plaintiffs, and his defence has entirely failed on that ground, and therefore the question between the parties depends on the construction of the deed of settlement. The professed object and the only real intention of that deed was to secure to Mrs. [illegible] her life, in lieu of the rent-charge agreed to be [illegible] by the articles; and in case she survived her husband, then after her decease the trust-fund was to revert to his executors or administrators. Three events are provided for by the deed, and in reference to each of the three states of things words are used which imply a beneficial interest in the persons to whom they are applied. In the first place, the trustees were to permit George Marshall and his assigns to receive and take, to and for his and their own entire use and benefit, the dividends and interest of the stock during the joint lives of George Marshall and his wife; and, secondly, in case he should survive her, they were to transfer the stock unto George Marshall, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to and for his and their own use and benefit; and, thirdly, in case Ann Marshall should survive him, then after her decease the trustees were to transfer the stock unto the executors and administrators of George Marshall, for their own use and benefit. In the first two cases, the words "to and for his and their own use and benefit" are mere surplusage, and a limitation to himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, would have had just the same effect without the superadded words, which must have been inserted for the purpose of shewing more distinctly the amount of interest intended to be given; and it is probable that George Marshall, when he used the words in the first two cases, meant nothing more by them. It is more probable also, in the third case, that the only object of the words in question was to express more emphatically the amount of interest in the fund given to the executors or administrators, and to secure to them the transfer thereof, and at the same time also to relieve the trustees from themselves being put to the necessity of looking to the application of the fund by the executors or administrators, by whom it was to be received, the fund being, in so far as the trustees were concerned, to be considered as belonging to George Marshall. I do not think, however, that the object or effect of the words is to give the fund to the executors or administrators for their own personal enjoyment, but only that they might make a proper application of it for the benefit of the next of kin of George Marshall. Such cases as this always involve much difficulty, because words are used the ordinary meaning of which is in opposition to the intention of the deed; but the construction must be in accordance with the object and intention of the parties. I must therefore declare that the whole of the fund in this case belonged to and was part of the personal estate of George Marshall, and that it does not belong to his personal representative beneficially. The plaintiffs are therefore entitled to the relief they have prayed, to have the fund restored, and to a declaration that they are entitled to their original share and also the additional part or share which accrued on the death of George Marshall, the younger; they are also entitled to the costs of the suit. The costs of Mary Marshall must be paid by the plaintiffs, and added to their own costs.

April 24 and June 30.

HALCOMBE v. ANTROBUS.

Practice—Orders of course—Discharging for irregularity—Jurisdiction—Vice-Chancellor's causes—General orders.

A common order to revive a suit obtained after the time fixed by a Vice-Chancellor's order, without mentioning that circumstance to the officer, will be discharged for irregularity, though the defendant's delay in entering his appearance was the cause of its not being obtained in time.

Where an order of course is alleged to be irregularly obtained at the Rolls to revive a suit before another branch of the Court, the jurisdiction of the Master of the Rolls extends only to the question of the irregularity, and he cannot enter into the consideration of the circumstances or merits of the case, if there be any to be considered, except in so far as they may bear upon the incidental costs.

There are three rules applicable to all such cases of orders irregularly obtained:—

1. A party obtaining an order of course must state every fact material to the making of that order.
2. An application to discharge for irregularity must depend on the question of irregularity, though there are merits; and,
3. The merits and circumstances which ought to be considered in the branch of the court in which the cause is, ought not to be drawn into the Rolls Court.

The suit in this case had been originally instituted in the Equity Exchequer in 1828, and had, after the passing of the Act 5 Vict. c. 5, been transferred to the court of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce. It had now become abated, and, on a motion by one of the defendants to revive or dismiss, it was ultimately ordered by the Vice-Chancellor, on the 20th of February last, that the plaintiff should in three weeks file his bill of revivor and supplement, and should in six weeks apply for an order to revive the said suit, with liberty to apply in the meantime. The plaintiff accordingly filed his bill of revivor and supplement on the 11th of March, and on the 13th the subpœna was served on the defendant's solicitor, who undertook to appear, but did not enter his appearance till March 31. By the 10th order of Dec. 21, 1833, the defendant has eight days after appearance to a bill of revivor within which to shew cause against reviving the suit, which time did not expire in this case till the 8th of April; but the six weeks allowed by the Vice-Chancellor for obtaining the common order to revive expired on the 3rd of the same month. On the 10th of April, the plaintiff served the defendant with notice of motion for further time before the Vice-Chancellor, but on the 12th he abandoned that notice, and on the 15th obtained at the Rolls, as of course, the common order to revive, and on the 16th served the defendant with an attachment. In the common order so obtained, it was recited that the suit had abated, that the bill of revivor had been filed, and that the time for shewing cause against the revivor had expired without cause shewn, but no notice was taken of the order of the Vice-Chancellor, nor of the other proceedings in the matter. The defendant now moved to discharge the common order, on the grounds of irregularity and the suppression of facts which it was material to have stated on applying for the order.

George L. Russell, in support of the motion, contended that the order should be discharged, because it was obtained after the time allowed by the Vice-Chancellor's order had expired, and when the defendant was in a position to move that the bill be dismissed, and the costs paid under the original order, and because in obtaining it the plaintiff had not fully stated the circumstances of the case to the secretary at the Rolls. He cited St. Victor v. Devereux (6 Beav. 584) to shew that suppression of material facts is a sufficient ground for discharge.

Turner (with him Cole), contrà.—The defendant's solicitor, though he undertook to appear, did not do so til the 31st of March, three days before the expiration of the time to obtain the order to revive. By this course, and by the operation of the 10th Order of December 1833, we were prevented from obtaining the order within the time limited; and yet the defendant now comes here to discharge the order of course. If the defendant had been active, he might have anticipated us, and might have obtained the order to dismiss immediately on the expiration of the time limited, without giving us notice. (Dobede v. Edwards, 11 Sim. 454.) By allowing us to obtain our order before he obtained his to dismiss, he has waived his right to do so now. (Fernes v. Hutchinson, 1 Russ. & Mylne, 22.)

G. L. Russell, in reply, said the plaintiff had shewn by his conduct that he knew he could not get the order of course, for he had given notice of motion to obtain further time. The defendant had delayed answering, purposely to prevent the time for demurring from running out much before Easter Term. They accuse us, too, of not being sharp in our practice, and of not obtaining the order immediately. Between the 4th and 15th April, we could not obtain an order, as the courts were not sitting. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Suppose you had made an application on the 4th, could you have got an order to dismiss?] Yes, it is an order of course; and we did not undertake to appear sooner. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—There was liberty from Vice Chancellor Knight Bruce to apply.]—Yes, but we say an order of course is not such as comes under the liberty given by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, which is that only of an application for further time. Besides, the several matters should have been recited in the order to revive.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I do not know what is, if this is not, sharp practice. It is said the solicitor for the defendant did not undertake to appear in a given time. What are we to say of a solicitor so undertaking to appear, and knowing the duty to be performed by his adversary eight days after his appearance, who nevertheless does not appear till a day so late that the order to revive cannot be obtained within the time limited? This result, to be sure, was no part of the scheme of the solicitor; he had another object in view, viz. to prevent the time from running out too soon; but the fact is, he did thereby diminish the time for discharging the duty rendered necessary by the order of the Vice-Chancellor. The order to revive was not obtained till the 15th of April, though it might have been obtained previously; but the objection is, that it was not taken out within the time allowed by the Vice-Chancellor. If that is not sharp practice, I mistake the meaning of the term. It is said, however, that matters stated in the order were not so stated at the time it was obtained, and that there are merits and special circumstances in the case, and therefore, even if the order were regular, it was obtained irregularly, and ought to be discharged. As to that I shall reserve my judgment.

JUDGMENT.

Monday, June 30.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This is a petition to discharge an order of course made in this court on the 15th of April, for the revival of a suit, on the ground of irregularity. This cause is now pending before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, and an order was made by him on the 20th of February, that an order to revive should be obtained within six weeks, which expired on the 3rd of April, but the defendant not appearing till the 31st of March, the order of revivor could not, by the 10th General Order of the 21st of December, 1833, be obtained till the 8th of April. Under these circumstances, the 3rd of April passed without an order being made, so that the order of the 20th of February, dismissing the bill with costs, became operative; but, under the circumstances, Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce might have enlarged the time for obtaining the order to revive if an application had been made to him for that purpose. I may presume that the delay of the defendant was the cause of the plaintiff's default. That delay may have been caused by accident or absence, and I cannot conclude that it was wilful; but whatever may have been the cause of it, the defendant would not be allowed to take advantage of it in a court where the merits could be considered. The plaintiff did not apply to Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce to enlarge the time, but on the 15th of April he applied at the Rolls for an order of course to review the suit, on an allegation that the time for shewing cause against such order had expired without cause shewn; but on that occasion the order of the 20th of February was not mentioned. By reason of that omission, an order to revive was irregularly obtained, and must therefore be discharged. It is said the defendant is not entitled to take advantage of the irregularity in obtaining the order, and I should be of that opinion if I had to consider anything more than the irregularity, but my jurisdiction extends to nothing but the question of irregularity. If there be merits and circumstances in the case, as in St. Victor v. Devereux, which deserve to be considered, they may be brought under the consideration of the Lord Chancellor or the Vice-Chancellor. A motion before the Lord Chancellor may be at the same time a rehearing from me and an original motion on grounds not relied on before me; and he may take into consideration evidence which I have not before me, and facts and circumstances which are not before me and over which I have no jurisdiction. The Lord Chancellor may also think the application of the parties not within the rule of Lord Cottenham, and he may support the order of course on the merits of the whole case, or he may, without entering into the merits, discharge my order discharging that order of course, and so open up the way to the Vice-Chancellor's adjudicating on the subject, the Vice-Chancellor having no jurisdiction over any order made here. There is nothing in that case to prevent the Vice-Chancellor from making an order to revive, on a proper application being made to him; and if the order now made be acquiesced in, the Vice-Chancellor may, upon an application, also make an order to revive if he thinks fit. Upon occasions of this kind there are three rules applicable; first, a party obtaining an order of course must state every fact material to the making of the order; secondly, an application to discharge for irregularity must depend on the question of irregularity, though there be merits; and thirdly, the merits and special circumstances which ought to be considered by the Vice-Chancellors are not to be drawn into this court. I am not aware that the first rule has ever been doubted; the second was established by Lord Cottenham; and the third is the necessary consequence of the General Orders of the 5th of May, 1837. I have therefore no jurisdiction to take the merits or special circumstances into consideration on the question of discharging the order for irregularity; but they may have weight on the incidental costs. Having regard, therefore, to the special circumstances, the order must be discharged without costs.

Thursday, May 29.

BATE v. BATE.

Where a transfer of stock has been obtained from a party far advanced in years, that circumstance primâ facie entitles the executors of the transferror to an inquiry, and it will be ordered that the fund be brought into court to abide the final issue of the suit.

Roupell (with him Bagin) moved, on the part of the plaintiffs, for an injunction to compel the defendant, Sarah Bate, to re-transfer to the plaintiffs a sum of 40*l.* Long Annuities, standing in her name in the books of the Bank of England. The plaintiffs' bill alleged that they were the executors of the will of Mary Bate, made on the 24th of December, 1835, by which, after bequeathing some small legacies, she gave the residue of her property to the children of her brother, John Bate. Mary Bate died in January 1845, and the will was proved by the plaintiffs in the course of the same month. On investigation of the state of her property, the executors found that an annuity of 40*l.* in the Long Annuities, of which she had been possessed, had, in the month of October 1844, been transferred to the defendant, Sarah Bate, a daughter of the plaintiff William Bate, who had resided with the testatrix. The bill further alleged that the transfer was a contrivance of Sarah Bate; that she got the testatrix, who was then imbecile, to make the transfer when she went to the bank to receive her dividends; that Mrs. Bate, though able to write, had signed the transfer as a markswoman, and in the presence of one clerk only, instead of two, according to the usual practice at the bank. After the executors discovered these facts, Sarah Bate agreed with the plaintiffs to retransfer the annuity in consideration of the sum of 200*l.*; but a few days after this agreement the solicitor for Sarah Bate wrote to the plaintiff's solicitor, withdrawing the offer to retransfer. The present application was made on the grounds of the imbecility of the testatrix, and the tacit acknowledgment by the defendant of the absence of any right, as manifested by the agreement.

Kindersley (with him Speed) contended that the testatrix was not imbecile at the time of the transfer, and that she consulted a Mr. Forster, a stock-broker, about it, and had gone to the bank with him; that the clerk asked her if she knew the effect of what she was going to do, and she said she did; and that being unable from cold to sign her name, she made her mark in the presence of the stock-broker, who said it would be sufficient.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Cases of this kind, where a party has been about the person of the testatrix in the capacity of companion or domestic, and has obtained a transfer of a large portion of her property without any valuable consideration, are always more or less open to suspicion. The circumstance of the testatrix being so old (83 years) when the transfer was effected, primâ facie called for inquiry; and as it was a case of suspicion, it was advisable to have the facts proved. The plaintiffs undertaking to reply forthwith to the answer and to go on with the suit, let the money be brought into Court, and let the defendant, Sarah Bate, be allowed to receive the dividends, without prejudice, till the hearing of the cause.

DOWDEN v. HOOKE.

Practice—Married woman—Suing in formâ pauperis—Rule—Security for costs.

Where a married woman instituted a suit by her brother as her next friend, who had been a mercantile clerk, and who, though not at the time in employment, swore he did not owe 5l. the Court refused, upon the application of one of the defendants, to order proceedings to be stayed till the next friend should be changed or security given for costs.

The alleged rule of Court that the next friend of a married woman, as contradistinguished from that of an infant, must be a person of substance, has no foundation; there are instances of an order having been made, and that, too, upon due consideration, to permit a next friend of a married woman even to sue in formâ pauperis.

This was a motion on behalf of J. Anderson, one of the defendants in this cause, to stay all proceedings till either a new next friend of the plaintiff, a married woman, should be appointed or security given for payment of costs, and to refer it to the Master to approve of a security. The plaintiff, Mrs. Sarah Watts Dowden, sued by her brother, Archibald Weir, as her next friend, and charged H. P. B. Hook and J. Anderson, the trustees of a marriage-settlement, whereby 200*l.* was settled to her separate use, with a breach of trust.

In support of the motion, it was stated on affidavit that Mr. Weir had been a mercantile clerk, but was then out of employment, and dependent on his mother for support. Both the plaintiff and Mr. Weir, however, denied this, and Mr. Weir stated that he was perfectly solvent, and did not owe 5*l.* in all the world; that he had held valuable situations, and was promised and expected a lucrative appointment. The plaintiff also stated that she had no relations or friends more respectable or influential than her brother, and who were also willing to become her next friend; and in the event of her next friend being changed, or her being compelled to give security for costs, she would be unable to obtain her just rights in consequence of her poverty. The plaintiff's solicitor, Mr. Sparks, also stated on affidavit that Mr. Weir was a gentleman of education, and competent to hold an office of trust and responsibility.

Prior, for the motion, contended for a difference between the next friend of a married woman and that of an infant; the one must be a person of substance, but no regard is paid to the circumstances of the other. He cited Pennington v. Alvin (1 S. & St. 264), and Drinan v. Mannix (3 Dru. & War. 154).

Rolt, contrà, denied that the next friend of a married woman must in all cases be a person of substance; that is only so if he be a stranger; but if he be a relation, no inquiry is made as to his circumstances. Security is never asked from any plaintiff sui juris within the jurisdiction (Ogilvie v. Herne, 11 Ves. 608), why should it then be required from a married woman, who must in that case, as she is not permitted to sue in formâ pauperis, be shut out from relief altogether? As to the cases, there is no distinction between the next friend of a married woman and of an infant; besides, the cases in reference to married women are few; Pennington v. Alvin is a gross case, and in Drinan v. Mannix it appears to have been principally relied on. He cited Anon. (1 Ves. jun. 409); Squirrell v. Squirrell (2 Dickens, 765); Fellows v. Barrett (1 Keen, 119); Anon. (1 Atk. 570).

Prior, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

The MASTER of the ROLLS stated the facts, and then proceeded:—The application is supported by the two cases of Pennington v. Alvin and Drinan v. Mannix. The latter case is grounded upon Pennington v. Alvin, which decided that where the next friend of a married woman, who had taken the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, but was detained in prison (the husband having got damages against him in an action for seduction), proceedings might be stayed till he should be changed, or security given for costs, and that upon the ground that the suit of a married woman by her next friend is substantially her own suit. This is a decision which, as Sir John Leach says, cannot easily be departed from, and it has been adopted by Sir Edward Sugden in Drinan v. Mannix. Such authority is sufficient to sustain any rule of practice, considered as a general rule of the Court; but the consequences to married women, if it were carried out to the full extent now contended for, appear to be very serious, and in many cases such a rule would prevent married women from instituting suits to establish their just claims, and would indirectly amount to a denial of justice. I have made inquiries, and have found two cases in which a next friend of a married woman has been allowed to sue in formâ pauperis. The first is the case of Collyer v. Young, in which an order to sue in formâ pauperis was made on the 25th of October, 1843, and the second is Valentine v. Walker, in which the date of the order is the 19th of May, 1834. In the latter case, which was eleven years after Pennington v. Alvin was decided, the order was not made ex parte and of course, but after the matter had been brought under the notice of the Court, and on consideration by Sir John Leach himself. It appears then, from these cases, that a married woman may sue in formâ pauperis, and it seems, therefore, too much to contend that she cannot sue by a next friend who is perfectly solvent, and who is personally answerable for the costs. Under these circumstances, there is reason to believe that the case of Pennington v. Alvin depended more on the special circumstances of the case than appears by the report. I refuse the application, but without costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

COMPTON v. BLOXHAM.

Construction of will—Gift to executor.

Where a testator, by his will, gave certain property to his brother and sister, whom he appointed executor and executrix, and throughout the will the relationship of his brother to himself was always mentioned with his brother's name, it was held, that, although the brother did not prove the will, he was still entitled to the legacies.

John Bloxham, late of Amesbury, in the county of Wilts, deceased, duly made and executed his last will and testament in writing, bearing date 26th day of July, 1826, which, so far as is material, was in the words and figures, or to the purport or effect following; that is to say, "As it's probable I may die before my wife, it's my will, as soon as I die, my sister Jane Bloxham, my executrix, my brother Charles Bloxham, my executor, take possession immediately of the oak chest of drawers and the little writing-desk in my usual sitting-room, with all its contents; the oak chest of drawers in the dressing-room, the middle room on the ground-floor fronting the street, with all its contents; the ash chest of drawers in my bed-room, with all its contents; the wearing clothes of every description to be given to my brother Charles Bloxham. The silver plate being in the oak chest of drawers in my dressing-room, it's my will that six silver table-spoons and six silver tea-spoons to be left for the use of my widow. At her death, the whole property, the house I now live in, the garden behind the house, the little garden opposite the house, it being all free land, and goods and furniture of every description, with all my books of every sort, to be given to my said sister, Jane Bloxham, my executrix; and to my said brother, Charles Bloxham, my executor, their heirs and assigns, for ever; my monies in the funds, 1,600*l.* in the 3*l.* per Cents reduced, and 1,200*l.* in the New 4*l.* per Cents, to be equally divided between my said sister Jane, and brother Charles Bloxham, on condition my said sister Jane resides in my house after my death to direct and manage all my wife's affairs, to receive her monies and pay her debts, until my wife think proper and is capable of directing her own affairs."

The testator died in the month of December 1827, and the will was proved by his sister, Jane Bloxham, alone. A question arose in the cause, whether Charles Bloxham had, by not proving the will, forfeited his interest under it.

Shapter, for the plaintiff, cited Reid v. Devaynes (2 Cox, 285); Stackpole v. Howell (13 Ves. 417); Calvert v. Sebbon (4 Bea. 222); Piggott v. Green (6 Sim. 72); and Cockerell v. Barber (2 Russ. 585).

W. P. Wray, Glasse, and Wray, for other parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I do not see a single instance throughout this will where Charles Bloxham's name is not accompanied by a description of him as the testator's brother. Looking at the whole will, I think that the testator did not intend that the assumption by Charles Bloxham of the office of executor should be a condition precedent to his taking this legacy. In arriving at that conclusion, I think it immaterial whether the will does or does not dispose of the residue, and I think it also immaterial whether Jane Bloxham and Charles Bloxham took as joint tenants or tenants in common, or not. However these two questions are decided, I am of opinion that, according to the terms of this will, Charles Bloxham will take this legacy.

ANDERSON v. STATHER.

Foreclosure suit—Parties.

An equity of redemption was settled by the mortgagor upon the marriage of his daughter, and by the settlement the daughter was entitled to a rent-charge, and the children of the marriage were entitled to portions to be raised out of the mortgaged estates. The daughter and children were out of the jurisdiction. It was held that they were necessary parties to a foreclosure suit instituted by the mortgagee.

By indentures of lease and release, dated the 26th and 27th of March, 1818, certain freehold estates were mortgaged by Shillito Stather to William George in fee to secure 4,000*l.* and interest. A further charge for 1,000*l.* and interest was executed in the month of September following, and two further charges were made upon the property before the year 1828. The mortgage securities were afterwards transferred to Anderson, who entered into possession of the estates. This suit was instituted by Anderson for the purpose of obtaining a foreclosure or sale of the estates. The bill charged that Henry Johnson and others claimed an interest in the estates, and by the answer of Stather it appeared that, by indentures of lease and release, dated the 1st and 2nd October, 1828, being the settlement made upon the marriage of Stather's daughter with Henry Johnson, the equity of redemption of the estates was conveyed to trustees to the use of Stather until the marriage, and afterwards to the use and intent that the intended wife should receive a rent-charge of 200*l.* a year out of the estates, with powers of distress and entry for the purpose of securing the same, and subject thereto to the use of the trustees for 500 years for securing the rent-charge, with remainder to such uses as Stather should appoint, with remainder to Stather for life, with remainder to the use of a trustee to bar dower, with remainder to the use of Stather in fee. The trusts of the term of 500 years were then declared to be for further securing the rent-charge, and for raising 4,000*l.* for portions for the children of the marriage. The marriage took place, and there were two children of the marriage, who were alleged to be necessary parties to the suit. These children were living with the father and mother in the United States of America.

Parry and Bevir, for the plaintiff.

Follett, for the principal defendant, objected that all the proper parties were not before the Court. He cited Fell v. Brown (2 Bro. Ch. Ca. 275); Palk v. Clinton (12 Ves. 48); Brown v. Blount (2 Russ. & Myl. 83); Farmer v. Curtis (2 Sim. 466); and Willats v. Busby (5 Bea. 193).

Selwyn, for the trustees of the term of 500 years.

Parry, in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The owner of the estate, Mr. Stather, makes a mortgage and a further charge to the plaintiff. After having done so, he makes a settlement. The persons interested under the settlement are out of the jurisdiction. The daughter and her children have the first charge; they have an immediate interest in the equity of redemption. There is no one here (though I do not know whether that is material) who is pari passu with, or on a level with them. They stand first; Mr. Stather is the next. If Mr. Stather does not redeem, he will absolutely lose all right. The only mode is to pay the amount now due. On the payment so made he will have a transfer or acquisition of the security. That, however, may prove no security at all, for the person first entitled may have paid the mortgage, and then may come in and take the estate. The cause must therefore stand over.

Follett and Selwyn then applied for the costs of the day, but

The VICE-CHANCELLOR directed that the costs should be reserved.

Thursday, July 3.

STOOKE v. VINCENT.

Practice—Exceptions for impertinence.

Where exceptions have been filed for impertinence, but not referred within due time, it is irregular to file other exceptions to the same matter.

In this case the defendant filed exceptions for impertinence to the plaintiff's bill, but by accident no order for referring them was obtained within six days. After the expiration of the six days, another set of exceptions to the bill for the same alleged impertinent matter was filed, and an order of reference was obtained.

Russell and Moore now moved that the second set of exceptions should be taken off the file, and the order for referring them be discharged.

Crawford, for the defendant, mentioned the 21st and 22nd articles of the 16th order of May 1845.

The Vice-Chancellor said, that there being one set of exceptions on the file, he thought it irregular to file another set, and that he should therefore grant the motion, with costs, unless Mr. Crawford should be able to shew any authority in support of his argument.

Note.—The case was not mentioned again.

Friday, July 4.

Glover v. Cockerill.

Practice—Misnomer—Service of copy of bill.

A defendant, upon whom a service of a copy of the bill had been made, having been misnamed in the bill, the Court allowed the memorandum to be entered in the proper name of the defendant, upon the production of an affidavit that the person served was the person named as defendant in this bill.

Lloyd applied for leave to enter a memorandum of service of a copy of the bill upon a defendant, whose name in the bill was misspelt. In the affidavit of service the name was spelt correctly, and Lloyd, in applying to the Court to have the memorandum of service entered, requested that it should be made in the correct name of the defendant.

The Vice-Chancellor said, that he thought that the bill should be amended as to the name of this defendant, so that the memorandum should correspond with the bill. His Honour, however, afterwards said that if an affidavit were produced, shewing that the copy of the bill was served upon the defendant named in the bill, he would make the order asked.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Fannin v. Anderson.

Where a declaration omits to aver that the time in which a contract is to be fulfilled has elapsed, the fault is cured by pleading over, and the objection must be taken by demurrer.

The Statute of Limitations does not run where one of several co-defendants is beyond seas.

A rule nisi for a new trial had been obtained last Term.

This was an action for breach of contract in not supplying the plaintiff with porter to be bottled within twelve months.

Peacock shewed cause on May 2nd, as agreed. The Statute of Limitations was pleaded. The contract was made on the 29th of December, 1836, and the declaration bore date the 9th of January, 1844, and did not state that twelve months had elapsed before the commencement of the suit. It was contended that the date sufficed, and that the declaration must be presumed to be made on the day it bore date (Owen v. Waters, 2 M. & W. 91; Way v. French, 3 Bos. & P. 173); that though not evidence of any material fact in a declaration, its date is good evidence of the time of its delivery. It was also contended for the plaintiff, that one of the co-contractors, a defendant, having been beyond the seas, the Statute of Limitations, 21 Jas. 1, c. 16, according to the words of 4 Anne, cl. 18, c. 192, did not run. The words in this latter statute applied, it was contended, to those who might be sued, and not to the actions enumerated in the preceding clauses. Here some of the co-defendants were absent, and the principle which applies to co-plaintiffs does not apply to co-defendants, whom the plaintiff has no power to compel to appear; and it would be a great grievance to deprive him of his remedy against a solvent defendant, who stayed away to evade his liability, the other co-defendants at home being, perhaps, insolvent.

Crompton, contrà.—The case of Owen v. Waters only goes to this, that the declaration proves the commencement of the suit; but dates laid under a videlicet are not material. (Horne v. Newlands, 1 Ad. & Ell. 49; Stavert v. Eastwood, 11 M. & W. 197; Parkinson v. Whitehead, 2 M. & G. 829.) [Patteson, J.—I do not find the time stated at all in that case.] They do not say the time has elapsed, and how are we to plead? Suppose we traversed this, how could we do this if they had brought the action within six months? [Patteson, J.—Why could you not plead it affirmatively?] We might do so, but that would shew that they have not included that in their declaration which it was material for them to aver. The statute clearly runs where any defendant is within seas.

JUDGMENT.

During the sittings after last term Lord Denman, C. J. gave judgment.—The question in this case was, whether the declaration was good by reason of the want of an averment that the defendant did not within twelve months from some day supply the plaintiff, &c. We think the declaration is good, notwithstanding that objection. It is true that, if the action were really brought within twelve months, the defendant could not safely traverse that averment, unless he had actually supplied the plaintiff with 500 hogsheads of beer before the action, and therefore before the time had elapsed within which he was bound to supply them. But the informality of the averment which might put the defendant into that difficulty should have been pointed out as a cause of demurrer. In Parkinson v. Whitehead (2 M. & G. 829), a case much resembling the present, there was no averment that the defendant, within two years, would build houses; the only averment was, that he did not, nor would build them, and that they were still unbuilt. Again, the objection is cured by pleading the Statute of Limitations—a plea which must be false, if at least twelve months from making the agreement had not elapsed. The case is, therefore, within the principle of Crook v. Crook and Others, in Siderfin, 108. The question there arose as to the sufficiency of the rejoinder; but depended upon the construction of 4 Anne, ch. 18. In that case an absence beyond the seas of one of several co-contractors against whom there was a cause of action, prevented the Statute of Limitations, the 21 James 1, ch. 15, from running. For the plaintiff it was contended, the words "or any of them," in the statute of Anne, referred to the persons liable to actions, and not to the actions enumerated in the clause; but we are fully satisfied, on considering the language of the clause, they are compatible with the corresponding sections of the statute of James; and those words, "or any of them," refer to the actions, and not to the persons. No case appears to have been decided by the statute of Anne; but on that of James it was adjudicated, in a case reported in 4 T. R. 516, that if one of several co-plaintiffs be "within seas," the statute does run. The reason given by the Court is, that one plaintiff can act for the others, and use their names in an action, and therefore the protection of the statute is not wanted. With respect to the defendants, however, the reason does not apply. The plaintiff cannot bring an absent defendant into court by any act of his, and therefore if he be compelled to sue those who are "within seas" within six years, without joining those who are absent, he may jointly recover against insolvent persons, and lose his remedy against the solvent ones who are absent. On the other hand, if he sues out a writ against all the others, and continues that without declaring or persists in outlawry, or declares against the absent parties, and declares against those who are within the seas, he is placed in precisely the same situation as if the statute of Anne had never passed, and is obliged to incur fruitless expense, the avoiding of which seems to have been the object of the statute of Anne. That statute seems to have been passed in order to keep the plaintiff's remedy alive, for such object was easily attained before the statute by suing out the writ and continuing it. We think the statute continues to render such a form unnecessary, wherever, by reason of the absence beyond the seas of any of the intended defendants, the plaintiff cannot have his remedy against those whom he is entitled to sue, when indeed he might be under the risk of a plea in abatement if they were within the jurisdiction of the Court. On the whole, we think the distinction taken in the argument between co-plaintiffs and co-defendants is a sound distinction, and the plaintiff, in this case, is entitled to our judgment.

Carter v. Price.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Denman, C.J.—We have looked at the affidavits in this case, and we think this party being a surety, and having acted upon the authority of the case in Tidd, which must be considered now as overruled, the rule ought to be discharged, but not with costs.

Reg. v. Inhabitants of New Sarum.

Where a new district has been added to a city or borough by the Municipal Corporation and Reform Act, which includes a bridge formerly repaired by the county, the liability to repair is still upon the county, and not upon the city or borough.

This was an indictment against the inhabitants of the borough of New Sarum, for neglecting to repair a certain bridge called "Harcourt's Bridge," which was tried at the Wilts Lent assizes for 1844, and a special verdict taken by consent. The facts found were, "That Harcourt's bridge is a common public bridge, situate wholly within the parish of Fisherton Anger, in the Queen's common highway there, and used by all persons on foot, and with horses, carts, and carriages; that the bridge, and the approach thereto on the south side, are out of repair; that King William the Fourth, by letters patent, dated the 3rd of June, 1836, granted a separate court of quarter sessions to the said borough; that the city of New Sarum was first incorporated by a charter of King Henry the Third, and comprised the three parishes of St. Edmund, St. Thomas, and St. Martin; charters were subsequently granted to the city by King James, in 1611, by King Charles the First, in 1630, and King Charles the Second, in 1675; that previously to the passing of the statute 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, the whole of the parish of Fisherton Anger, in the county of Wilts, was without the boundaries of the city; that the bridge called 'Harcourt's Bridge' is an ancient bridge, and the same bridge and the highway adjoining, for the space of 100 yards on each side thereof, are situate in the parish of Fisherton Anger, and the same has always been repaired by and at the expense of the county of Wilts, and no other person has repaired the same. Since the passing of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, no repairs have been done. The limits of the city described in the statute 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 64, include, in addition to the three parishes of St. Thomas, St. Edmund, and St. Martin, parts of the parishes of Fisherton Anger and Milford. Harcourt-bridge and the highway adjoining, for the space of 100 yards, are situate in the part of the parish of Fisherton Anger included by the statute of the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 64, within the limits of the borough."

It was now (April 28) argued upon a concilium, by Cockburn, Q. C. (with him Butt, Q. C. and Barstow, for the Crown).—Even, independent of the liability thrown upon the borough by the Municipal Corporation Act, the fact of annexation suffices. Where the boundaries of a city were enlarged by royal charter, and a part of the county annexed to the county of the city, the enlarged part is parcel of the old county of the city for the purposes of repairs of existing bridges. (R. v. Norwich, 1 Stra. 177; R. v. St. Peter, York, 2 Lord Raym. 1249.) This was an ancient bridge; and annexation by Act of Parliament must have equal effect with annexation by charter. Then by 22 Hen. 8, c. 5 (Statute of Bridges), the jurisdiction of magistrates to enforce the repair is essential to the liability, and by 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 76, the magistrates of the county are deprived of all jurisdiction within the city or borough thus enlarged. The county magistrates having no power to assess for the repair of this bridge, if the city is not liable, no one is, because none but the city magistrates can exercise jurisdiction. By the 1 Anne, c. 18; 12 G. 2, c. 29, the power of justices of towns corporate is recognized. The 92nd section of the Municipal Corporation applies, for here the town corporate has a court of quarter sessions, and its magistrates exercise all the powers of county magistrates, and there is a borough-rate which is applicable to all corporate buildings. This bridge is a corporate building. If the borough is exempt, the bridge must decay, or the county is to pay for the benefit of the borough. By sec. 117, the borough is liable to contribution for certain county expenses, but there is no mention of bridges.

Crowder, Q. C. (with him M. Smith), contrà.—The 7th section of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, is confined "to the purposes" of the Act. The cases cited are distinguishable. In R. v. St. Peter's, the annexation was before the Statute of Bridges; and in R. v. Norwich, there had been a previous liability. Sec. 111 does not apply, and the 117th only applies where the 111th does. The 92nd section does not give power to the borough magistrates to make the rate. It is a casus omissus; and even if the borough had built the bridge, it would not have been bound to repair it. He cited Beardsworth v. Torkington (1 Q. B. 782); R. v. Green (2 Q. B. 96, 2 Inst. 700, Com. Dig. Chemin, b. 2); R. v. Stoughton (2 Saund. 158, n.); R. v. Hendon (4 B. & Ad. 628); R. v. Ecclesfield (1 B. & A. 348).

Cockburn, in reply.—The instances given in the 92nd section do not exclude other purposes. He cited R. v. Gloucester (4 A. & E. 689).

Cur. adv. vult.

At the sittings after Trinity Term, Lord Denman, C.J. delivered judgment in substance as follows:—

Lord Denman, C. J.—This was an indictment for the non-repair of a bridge, and the highway for 100 yards adjoining it. At the trial a special verdict was found. It appeared that the district had been incorporated with the city by statute, but was situate without the borough. The metes and bounds set out by 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 64, were adopted by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76. But the 2 & 3 Wm. 4 had no reference to a case like the present, but was only to settle the boundaries for election purposes. Nor did the 5 & 6 Wm. 4 contemplate a case like this. It had been made alio intuitu altogether, as appears by the title and the Act itself. The 92nd clause, which provides for the payment of certain of the county expenses, does not contemplate or refer to any payment for such a purpose as this; and the 114th provides also for expenses of prosecution in places like New Sarum. Reliance has been pla[illegible] on the Statute of Bridges; but that imposed no new liability, and under that statute, before the annexation, the city of New Sarum was clearly not liable. It was always repairable by the county. An Act of Parliament, therefore, could alone impose this liability; and there is no reason for saying that 5 & 6 Wm. 4 has this effect. It was passed wholly without reference to it, and this is an unforeseen case; and although there might be inconvenience and inconsistency in relieving a parish from the county-rate, without imposing on it the discharge of the duties for which the county-rate was levied, it is better to suffer the inconvenience than to change the legal liability. If the inconvenience is one that called for remedy, it is for the legislature to interfere. There must, therefore, be judgment for the defendants. Judgment for the defendants.

[Note.—The judgments in this and the following case of Reg. v. Greenaway are not reported verbatim, as the Court sat some minutes before the usual time, and they were delivered before the reporters came in.]

Reg. v. Greenaway and Another.

Reg. v. Cary.

Parish officers are bound to produce rate-books before magistrates at petty sessions in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum, although the object is to establish the settlement of the pauper in their parish.

Pashley (with whom was Corner) moved for an attachment against the overseers of St. Giles, Camberwell, for disobedience to a Crown Office subpœna duces tecum, by which they had been commanded to produce before a certain magistrate of the metropolitan police district the rate-books of their parish for certain years therein named. The object was to prove that a pauper was settled in their parish through a derivative settlement from his father, who had occupied a tenement therein.

The parish officers attended, but without the rate-books, and justified their refusal—1, That a Crown Office subpœna could not be issued for petty sessions; 2, That they were not bound to produce evidence against their own parish; 3, That they were parties, and not bound to give evidence against themselves.

It was now contended that the practice as to the subpœna for this purpose was clear and ancient; that it was a branch of the jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench to prevent any failure of justice; that the overseers of the parish were not parties, for it was only an inquiry touching the legal rights of the pauper, and it did not appear where he would be removed to; that the evidence was necessary, for mere loose evidence of the payment of the rates was insufficient; that at any rate the parties were bound to bring the books, even if they were not bound to produce the books in evidence.

The following authorities were cited amongst others: Corner's Crown Practice, 256; R. v. Lydeard St. Lawrence (11 A. & E. 616); R. v. Coppull (2 East, 25); Pickering v. Moyes (1 B. & C. 262); R. v. Ring (8 T.R. 585); R. v. Branell (1 A. & E. 598); R. v. Orton (suprà); Doe v. Thomas (9 B. & C. 293); Geary v. Hopkins (2 Ld. Raym. 851); Blackie v. Porter (1 Taunt. 386); Sampson v. Lattenham (5 Mod. 15); R. v. Great Farringdon (9 B. & C. 541); May v. Gwynne 4 B. & A. 301).

M. Chambers and Bovill shewed cause in the first instance. There is no authority to support such a subpœna as this. It is not a matter pending in any court of record, nor was there any court at all when the writ issued. But can one parish force another to produce evidence against itself? There is no difference between forcing parol evidence or documentary. But a rated inhabitant could not be a witness. Then the overseers, as the official representatives of the inhabitants, could not be. The cases where title-deeds had been inspected were distinguishable, for they were held by the party as trustee. The statutes removed a disability, but did not deprive them of a privilege; they were in effect parties, and not compellable to produce. (R. v. Woburn, 13 E. 395; R. v. Hardwicke, 11 E. 578; Worrell v. Jones, 7 B. 395, were cited.)

In the other case, a rule nisi had been obtained for an attachment against Mr. Carey, the overseer of Waldron, in the county of Sussex.

Creasy now shewed cause.—R. v. Orton only shews what is not a proper notice to make secondary evidence admissible. By the order being asked for against another parish, the parish is made a party. It ought not to give the same power as a bill in equity. (Miles v. Dawson, 1 Esp. 405; Paterson v. Hublthwaite, 4 Esp. 43, were cited.)

Cobbett, contrà.—They are not parties, and are bound to produce. (R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707; 1 Stark. Ev. 87-90; Amy v. Long, 7 East, 473.)

At the sittings after Trinity Term, judgment was delivered in substance as follows by Lord Denman, C.J.—We think that the overseers were bound to produce the books, in obedience to the subpœna. Whether they should have been read when produced, is a question for the Court before which they are produced. The overseers of the parish to which a removal is to be, are not parties before the removing justices. The rules will be absolute, but the attachment will not issue, on the understanding that the parties will obey.

Hargreaves v. Wood.

Evidence of default of account under a bond.

The facts in this case fully appear in the judgment, which decides no point of law.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Denman, C. J.—This was an action on a bond dated 18th April, 1842, to secure a faithful discharge by the defendant, Charles Wood, of the duties of the office of agent for the Glaisdale Working Man's Co-operative Society. By the condition, it appears that the nature of the duties was to render a true account to the plaintiffs, as the directors, or such persons as they should appoint, of all moneys and other property, and otherwise faithfully discharge the said office. The breach assigned that the defendant Charles Wood received from members and others, on behalf of the said society, goods and chattels of the value of 2,800*l*. and was liable to account for the same, but that he did not render an account of 80*l*. 9*s*. parcel of the said sum. To this declaration the defendant pleaded several pleas, traversing the different allegations contained in the declaration, the most material being the fifth and ninth, in the former of which it is alleged that the said Charles Wood did render an account of the sum of 80*l*. 9*s*.; and in the latter, that he did, when requested, pay over the said sum. From the evidence, it appears that Charles Wood had been, from the month of August 1841, agent for the society, and that his duties before and after the execution of the bond were precisely of the same description. It further appeared, from the notes of the learned judge, that a deficiency was discovered on taking stock in the month of August 1842; and that such deficiency was 112*l*.; but in what manner, or at what time, the deficiency was occasioned, was left on the stock-taking quite uncertain. It might have been occasioned before the 18th of April 1842, the date of the bond, for which default the defendant (the defendant Joseph especially, who is only surety) would not be liable, as the bond is clearly prospective only in its operation. It further appears, however, from the notes, that after the first stock-taking the defendant Charles remained in his office a fortnight longer, and, at the end of it stock was again taken, on which second occasion the deficiency amounted to the sum of 128*l*. making an increase in such deficiency of 16*l*. in the interval. Upon this evidence the learned judge directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff for the sum of 80*l*. 9*s*. with liberty to move to reduce it to the sum of 16*l*. or enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant. A motion has been accordingly made, and the subject thereupon discussed. We are of opinion that the rule should be absolute for reducing the verdict to the sum of 16*l*. For the larger sum, we think, the verdict cannot stand, and, for the reason already given, that the period of the breach of duty by the defendant Charles Wood, except as far as regards the fortnight between the first and the second taking of the stock, was left quite in uncertainty; but the stock having been twice taken while the defendant Charles remained in his office after the date of the bond, will afford some evidence of breach of duty within the meaning of the condition. Therefore, for the sum of 16*l*. the verdict ought to stand; but it must be reduced to that sum. The two cases of Cousin v. Page (2 Cr. M. & Ros.) and another case in 2 Mee. & W. were cited in argument. On examination, we perceive nothing decided in either which is adverse to the conclusion to which we arrive. In one, the action was debt for 100*l*. and the declaration alleged payment by the defendant of 89*l*. and it was thereupon held that the plaintiff, in order to recover anything, must shew a debt beyond 89*l*. which point is so obvious that it seems difficult to discover how any question could possibly be raised upon it. In the case of Cousin v. Page also, the action was debt for goods sold and delivered, and the second plea stated, as to parcel of the demand, to wit 338*l*. the defendant paid to the plaintiff, and he accepted, a certain sum in satisfaction of the said parcel of demand, the Court held that the defendant must prove payment to the amount of 338*l*. to entitle himself to a verdict upon that plea, because there was an admission that such an amount was due. And if an attempt had been made in this case to recover beyond the amount of 89*l*. the principle of those cases, so far as they proceed upon the effect of admissions on the record, might have been applicable to shew that plaintiffs could not so recover. The use attempted to be made of the cases was, that the default of the defendant, Charles Wood, upon the occasion of his first taking stock having been found to be 112*l*. and upon the second 128*l*. such evidence was contradictory to the admission on the record, that no more than 89*l*. was due. The answer, however, is, that the evidence was adduced for no such purpose, but to shew that there was actual default within a certain period, a fortnight, of the defendant Charles Wood's continuance in the office, in order to entitle the plaintiffs to recover the sum of 16*l*.; for that sum we think the verdict ought to stand.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

Tuesday, July 22.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Holroyd.)

Re Williams and Staines, Bankrupts.

Joint estate.

Where two partners became bankrupt, but, previous to the partnership, one of them had carried on business separately, and had a separate stock, and had incurred separate debts in respect thereof, which stock was afterwards dealt with by the partners as if it had been the stock of the partnership:

Held, that such stock was to be treated in bankruptcy as joint stock, and was divisible amongst the joint creditors.

The facts of this case, so far as they have any bearing upon the point decided, are stated in the judgment.

The question arose some time since before his Honour, when he took time to consider, and now delivered his judgment as follows:—

The question in this case is, whether certain property now in the hands of the assignees is to be administered as the separate property of Williams, or as the joint property of the firm of Williams and Staines. It appears that Williams and Staines entered into partnership in November 1844, as wine merchants, agents, and auctioneers; Williams having been in business prior to that time as a wine merchant. At the time of the partnership Williams had a stock of wines, and had incurred debts in respect thereof; after the partnership, the wines appear to have been dealt with as the joint property of the partnership. Williams says that, on the formation of the partnership, it was agreed that his separate debts should be discharged out of his separate property, but Staines denies there was any such agreement. Articles of partnership were drawn up, but they were never executed. Staines does not appear to have had any capital at the time of his entering the concern. As far as can be collected from the unexecuted articles of partnership, they are at variance with the agreement as stated by Williams. But whether there was such an agreement or not, the wines were used as the joint property of the partners; that is, orders were given to the partnership, which were supplied from the stock, and thus it was actually dealt with as partnership property. In March 1845, Williams and Staines assign their property to trustees for the benefit of their creditors, consisting of the wines and effects of the joint concern. Staines had not any property but what he acquired from his partner Williams. This assignment, therefore, again shews a dealing with the property as if it was that of the partnership. This case must be decided with reference to the law as it is in bankruptcy, and as laid down by Lord Eldon in Ex parte Hunter (2 Rose's Reports, 382). He is there reported to have said—"There is scarcely any partnership in which the members of it are not entitled to different interests, and yet, upon a bankruptcy, their creditors take it as the promiscuous joint property of them all." It is difficult to say how this rule first obtained, but it cannot now be controverted. This doctrine was more decisively laid down in a recent case, Ex parte Murton (1 Mont., Deac. & De Gex, 261), where it was said by Sir George Rose, "There is no difficulty in arriving at a proper decision in this case if we only consider for a moment the principle on which all these cases are governed. That principle is, where property is dealt with by the members of a partnership as joint property, notwithstanding the legal title may be in one partner, it shall be in bankruptcy held to be distributable among all the joint creditors of the partnership." This decision, I think, is directly applicable to the present case. From the evidence given, I consider that these wines have been dealt with by the bankrupts as joint property, and are therefore divisible, according to the rule in bankruptcy, amongst the joint creditors. It may be hard on Williams that the property, in respect of which his separate debts were incurred, should be taken to pay the joint creditors, leaving no funds to pay his separate creditors, but such is the rule. It is true, Williams stated that the property had been kept separate, but it was separate so far only as that there was nothing to mix with it—there was no other property. Orders were given to the house in the character of partners, and goods supplied from the stock, and this seems to me to make a joint property.

Saturday, July 26.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque.)

Re Hyde, an Insolvent.

A society formed for the purpose of opposing fraudulent bankrupts and insolvents is not entitled to be heard against an insolvent in this court.

Insolvent came up this day for his final order. The interim order was granted by Mr. Commissioner Goulburn, who was now absent from town. A Mr. Buchanan, the solicitor for a society calling itself the Society for opposing Fraudulent Bankrupts and Insolvents, was about to oppose, when Sturgeon, for the insolvent, objected to his being heard without having a specific retainer from some creditor to oppose. He held in his hand a printed prospectus of the society, copies of which had been sent to no less than nine of the creditors of the insolvent, with a letter from the secretary, inviting them to oppose the insolvent, and offering each to save them harmless from further costs of opposition if they would inclose a post-office order for one pound. None of these creditors were members of the society. The solicitor for the society contended it was not usual to call for the retainer, and that when the case was heard before Mr. Commissioner Goulburn on the meeting for the interim order, that learned Commissioner had decided in favour of the society being heard.

His Honour said, I am very sorry to differ from Mr. Commissioner Goulburn, or any of my brother commissioners, and I am glad I am now speaking in the presence of another commissioner (Mr. Commissioner Fane), but I will not permit opposition from any society; I feel very strongly upon the point, being convinced that such societies are oppressive towards the unfortunate. They have no conscience, and I will never listen to any of them. I generally find, when a creditor comes before me, he is not altogether devoid of a feeling of compassion for the debtor, and is guided in his opposition by the circumstances of the case.

The insolvent was afterwards opposed by the same solicitor for a creditor, when his Honour said there was not the slightest ground for the opposition.

Final order granted.

Wednesday, July 30.

Re Eagle, an Insolvent.

Where a final order for protection has been granted to an insolvent upon condition of his paying certain sums at stated periods, and he has omitted to do so, his petition for protection is dismissed of itself without the intervention of the Court.

Insolvent had obtained a final order for protection, conditional upon his paying into court a sum of money quarterly for a given period for the benefit of his creditors. Two quarters had elapsed, and the insolvent had not made any payment into court. An application was now made to the commissioner (due notice having been given to the insolvent) to dismiss the insolvent's petition on the before-mentioned grounds. On behalf of the insolvent, it was stated that he was very poor, and, as an excuse for his non-performance of the condition of the order, it was proposed to put in an account of his receipts and disbursements since the order was made, to shew his inability to comply with the terms of the order. It was also proposed by the insolvent to make up the instalments now due by periodical payments.

His Honour said—The order of the Court has not been complied with, and it would be trifling with the Court to listen to such a proposal. The Court has nothing to do with any proposals—they are matters for the consideration of the creditors; and as the order was conditional, and has not been complied with, the petition is dismissed of itself, without the further interference of the Court. Any of the creditors can proceed against the insolvent as if no order had been made. If such order should be pleaded by the insolvent, it would be a sufficient answer that the condition had not been complied with.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

DURHAM SUMMER ASSIZES, 1845.

Durham, Saturday, July 26.

(Before Mr. Baron Rolfe.)

Reg. v. James Brice and Another.

Previous conviction.

The prisoners were jointly indicted for robbery on the 1st day of July, 1845, and the indictment at the end contained the following charge:—"And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that at the general quarter sessions of the peace of our sovereign lady the Queen, holden, &c. on Monday, the 14th day of October, 1844, the said James Brice was then and there convicted of felony." Both prisoners were convicted of the robbery.

Liddel was about to prove the former conviction against Brice, when

Mr. Baron Rolfe interrupted, and said, as the date in which the robbery was laid was quite immaterial, the indictment did not shew with sufficient certainty that the felony of which he had been previously convicted was committed before the robbery, and would not allow the proof to be gone into of that charge.

Burn, attorney for the prosecution.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

Cornwall, Tuesday, July 29.

(Before Mr. Justice Erle.)

Reg. v. Pomeroy.

A statement made by a prisoner which he refused to sign, but which received the magistrate's signature, as proved by a party present, may be given in evidence without calling the magistrate's clerk, and this, although such statement was so made by the prisoner in reference to another charge than that for the support of which the statement is sought to be given in evidence.

The prisoner was indicted for receiving goods, he knowing them to be stolen. There was a second indictment against him, for breaking and entering a church, and stealing certain articles therefrom.

When examined before the magistrate upon this second charge, he made a confession with regard to the first charge. This was taken down by the magistrate's clerk in the usual manner, was read over to the prisoner, and then received the magistrate's signature. But the prisoner refused to sign it. The magistrate's clerk was not in court, to prove these facts, which were sworn to by the constable who had been present at the examination. The confession was proposed to be given in evidence.

Edwards, on the part of the prisoner, objected, contending that the stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, which made these confessions evidence, on the authority of the magistrate's signature, only applied when the confession was made upon an examination having reference to the charge for the support of which the confession was sought to be given in evidence. He cited R. v. Vaughan (5 Str. Tr. 25), and other cases collected in Arch. Prac. p. 122, 9th ed.

Erle, J. overruled the objection, deciding that it mattered not for what purpose the confession was made, if it were made before a magistrate, taken down in the regular manner, and received the magistrate's signature, it thereby became valid evidence, and could be used against the prisoner, by having the magistrate's signature, upon the trial of any other charge than that upon the examination in reference to which the confession was made.

Hughes, for the prosecution.

Edwards, for the prisoner.

Summary.

The Small Debts Bill, with the Local Courts Bill of the Solicitor-General tacked to it, has passed the Commons, but there is a rumour that the Lords will not consent thus to have an entirely new subject-matter introduced and made law without being subjected to the regular forms that insure discussion and examination. Should this be so, a measure much required, and otherwise of great utility, will be destroyed by this most unwise attempt to pass a Local Courts Bill by a side-wind.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN CHANCERY.

"A Bill for amending certain Acts of the 4 & 5 Vict. for facilitating the administration of justice in the Court of Chancery; and for providing for the discharge of the duties of the subpœna office after the death, resignation, or removal of the present patentee of that office."

Whereas an Act was passed in the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 94, intituled "An Act for facilitating the Administration of Justice in the Court of Chancery," whereby power was given to the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellor, or one of them, to make, from time to time, and at any time within five years from the passing of the said Act, any rules, orders, and regulations for the purposes in the said Act mentioned; and it was thereby enacted that all such rules, orders, and regulations should be laid before both Houses of Parliament, if Parliament should be then sitting, immediately upon the making or issuing of the same, or if Parliament should not then be sitting, then within five days after the next meeting thereof: and another Act was passed in the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 52, whereby it was enacted that every such rule, order, or regulation made in pursuance of the said recited Act should, from and after the time in that behalf to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, and if no time should be so appointed, then from and after the making thereof, be binding and obligatory on the said court, and be of like force and effect as if the provisions therein contained had been expressly enacted by Parliament; and it was thereby provided, that if either of the Houses of Parliament should, by any resolution passed at any time before such House of Parliament should have actually sat thirty-six days after such rules, orders, and regulations should have been laid before such House of Parliament, resolve that the whole or any part of such rules, orders, or regulations ought not to continue in force, in such case the whole, or such part thereof as should be so included in such resolution, should, from and after such resolution, cease to be binding and obligatory on the said court; and it was thereby also provided that no such rule, order, or regulation as aforesaid should by virtue of the said Act be of the like force and effect as if the provisions therein contained had been expressly made by Parliament, unless the same should be expressed to be made in pursuance of the said Act and of the now-reciting Act; and that every such rule, order, or regulation so expressed to be made in pursuance of the said Act, and of the now-reciting Act, which should not be laid before both Houses of Parliament within the time by the said recited Act limited for that purpose, should from and after the expiration of such time be absolutely void and of no effect: And that an Act was passed in the 5 Vict. c. 5, intituled "An Act to make further Provisions for the Administration of Justice," under the authority of which two additional Vice-Chancellors have been appointed; and it is thereby enacted, that from and after the appointment of the Vice-Chancellors, under the said now-reciting Act, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with the advice or consent of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors for the time being, or any two of them, and he was thereby authorized and empowered to do all such acts, and to make and issue all such rules and orders, as by any Act or Acts of Parliament then in force, the Lord Chancellor, with the advice or consent of the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellor for the time being, or one of them, was empowered to do, make, or issue: And that rules, orders, or regulations have from time to time been made in pursuance of the said two first-recited Acts, but it is expedient to extend the time limited by the said first-recited Act for the making thereof in manner hereinafter mentioned.

1. That the term of five years, which under and by virtue of the said first-recited Act now stands limited as the time within which any rules, orders, or regulations thereby or by the said two other Acts authorized and required to be made, must be so made, shall be and the same is hereby extended to ten years from the passing of the said first-recited Act, as if such term of ten years had been originally contained in that Act.

2. That all rules, orders, and regulations to be hereafter made under the provisions of the said first-recited Act shall for all purposes be deemed and taken to be general rules and orders of the High Court of Chancery.

3. And whereas by another Act passed in the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 94, intituled "An Act for the Regulation of the Proceedings and Practice of certain Offices of the High Court of Chancery in England," it was enacted, that from and after the death, resignation, or removal from his office of the present patentee of the subpœna office, all the duties of such office should be performed by the clerk of the affidavits, who should thereupon receive and account for, in manner thereinafter mentioned, all the fees then receivable by the said patentee: And whereas since the passing of the last-mentioned Act four clerks of records and writs have been appointed, by whom the business of issuing writs of injunction and writs of dedimus potestatem is now discharged: And whereas it is expedient that the duties of the patentee of the subpœna office should be performed and the fees of that office should be received by the said clerks of records and writs: Be it therefore enacted, that so much of the said Act of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 94, as provides for the execution of the duties and for the receipt of the fees of the subpœna office by the clerk of the affidavits shall be and the same is hereby repealed; and that after the death, resignation, or removal from his office of the present patentee of the subpœna office, the said clerks of records and writs, or any one of them, shall, in place and instead of the said clerk of the affidavits, perform all the duties of the subpœna office, and shall receive all the fees now receivable by the said patentee of that office, and shall pay the same into the Bank of England, to be placed to the account there standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," at such times and under such regulations as the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors for the time being, or any two of them, shall by any order direct: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, by any rule or order to be made under the provisions of the said two first-recited Acts, to fix such earlier time for transferring the execution of the duties and the receipt of the fees of the subpœna office to the clerks of records and writs as he shall think fit.

4. That this Act may be amended or repealed in the present session of Parliament.

Costs of Private Bills.—A bill has been passed by the House of Lords, and brought down to the Lower House, entitled "An Act to enable the Houses of Parliament to order Recognizances for Costs in Local and Personal Bills." It simply enacts that, for the better securing landowners and others against oppression and expense, it shall be lawful for either House of Parliament to make an order for the requiring of recognizance to any amount to be acknowledged by the promoters or petitioners for local and personal Acts to the Crown, conditioned for paying the costs and expenses of any parties whose costs and expenses such House may order to be paid, as being incurred in opposition to the passing of such Acts in such Houses respectively.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

CRIMINAL LAW REPORT.

Friday, July 25.—The Lord Chancellor laid upon the table the last report of the Commissioners on Criminal Law. (Hear, hear.) This report (the noble and learned lord observed) related to procedure, not an unimportant part of the subject; and with this report the commissioners concluded their labours. The commission had issued when he (the Lord Chancellor) was not in office, and the gentlemen had been selected by his noble and learned friend (Lord Brougham), who then held the great seal, and he (the Lord Chancellor) had had no concern in the appointment of the commissioners. Nevertheless, it was his duty, in the situation he held, to bear his testimony to the admirable manner in which the duty had been discharged which was intrusted to the commissioners. It was impossible to read their reports without feeling strongly the industry, the intelligence, the accuracy, and the acuteness which they had applied to this complicated subject, and admiring the comprehensive and masterly manner in which they had treated every part of it. If their lordships should be pleased to legislate on the subject of the criminal law in the next session of Parliament, or upon any future occasion, it would be quite unnecessary to apply to any other source for information upon the subject, for they had ample and abundant materials for legislation in these admirable volumes of reports. He had felt it to be his duty to bear his testimony to the manner in which these reports had been executed by those gentlemen, and to express his gratitude, as well as that of the public, for the excellent service they had rendered to the country, and for the industry and talents displayed by them. (Hear.)—Lord Brougham agreed in the observations which had been so eloquently and impressively expressed by his noble and learned friend, and which rendered it unnecessary to add his humble meed of approbation. It was true that the commission had been appointed at the time when he held the great seal; but his noble and learned friend had added one or two distinguished names, Sir Edward Ryan, late Chief Justice of Bengal, and Mr. Vaughan Richards. It was not possible to estimate too highly the merits of the other commissioners—Mr. Starkie, Mr. Bellenden Kerr, and Mr. Amos, who had returned from India. The services of Mr. Starkie, one of the most learned criminal lawyers this country had ever produced, had been given to the commission unremittedly, most liberally, and with the utmost possible benefit to the object in view. We had now a whole criminal code, and compiled in a manner so satisfactory, that little more remained for their lordships to do, in order to give the people of this country a digest of criminal law which would be invaluable to the public, and especially to judges, than to reduce these admirable documents (he meant the reports) into the form of a statute. He could not conclude these few observations without remarking, that although the commissioners were now functi officio, he must implore her Majesty's government, and his noble and learned friend in particular, whose department it was, not to omit an opportunity of securing the services of all or any of these commissioners, or any other commissioners, for the formation of a board for systematically and constantly revising the statutes from time to time passed by both Houses of Parliament, including the private Acts, which required more revising and looking into dark corners, and contained more extraordinary provisions, than any one to whom it had not occurred to search into their recesses could possibly imagine; for example, the other day, in a railway Bill, power was given to the company to make its own rate-books. And public Bills were prepared, part by one department and part by another; so that it was often impossible for the unfortunate judges to reconcile and interpret them. Nothing could more facilitate that labour than the board he proposed—not for the first time; or rather, he threw out the suggestion for the consideration of the Government during the long vacation.—Lord Campbell concurred with his noble and learned friends in their appreciation of the labours of the commissioners, and hoped that their reports would not be allowed to be covered with dust. There was no country on the continent of Europe which had not had its criminal laws reduced to writing and published, for the information of those who had to administer, as well as those who had only to obey them. There was nothing in our laws which prevented the same course being adopted here.—The Lord Chancellor said that, although the commissioners had concluded their labours with reference to the special duties assigned to them, they had other duties to perform.—Lord Brougham said, he had done his best to prevent the reports being covered with dust; he had brought forward a bill founded upon them, and if the government did not next session bring forward a bill to carry the reports of the commissioners into effect, he would; he only doubted whether the measure should be contained in one digest, or in two, like the French Code Criminel and the Procedure Criminelle.

WRITING THE LIVES OF PEERS.

Monday, July 28.—Lord Campbell said that he should take the opportunity of calling the attention of the House to a subject of one of the standing orders, and with respect to which he had given notice. The standing order was to the effect, that any person presuming to publish the works, or life, or will, of any deceased lord of Parliament, without the consent of the heir or executor of such noble lord, should be deemed guilty of a breach of the privileges of that House. He should best discharge his duty on that occasion by referring to the history of the standing order. It took its origin in consequence of the proceedings of the well known Edmund Curll—the infamous, the dauntless, the shameless Edmund Curll. In 1720 died John Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham, a celebrated poet of that day, and Curll published an advertisement in a London paper, called the Daily Journal, in which he announced that he intended to publish a libellous life of the deceased nobleman. In consequence of this, the family of that nobleman interposed, and caused a complaint to be made to that House on the subject. He found this stated in the journals of the House of the date of the 22nd June, 1721-22, and that the advertisement was read, announcing that the life and works, in prose and verse, of John Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham, would be published on a certain day named by Edmund Curll, over against Catherine-street. This person was ordered to attend next day. The journals for the next day stated that the House being informed that Curll was in attendance, he was called in and examined as to the advertisement, and was ordered to withdraw. The House then came to this resolution:—That it is resolved by the lords spiritual and temporal in Parliament assembled, that any person presuming to publish the works, life, or will, of any deceased peer, without the consent of his heir or executors, was guilty of a breach of the privileges of that House. Curll was then reprimanded by the Lord Chancellor for allowing the advertisement to be printed, and also forbidden to publish the work. He could not find that the committee appointed on that occasion ever made any report to the House, though he had made diligent search on the subject. On the 31st of January following the matter was, however, again taken into consideration, and the resolution was duly passed as a standing order. That was the order now appearing on their lordships' books, and which had remained in force to this hour. He found that the order was not intended to remain as a dead letter, for an attempt had been made to enforce it in the year 1735. In that year the same Edmund Curll issued another advertisement, which was published in the daily journals, and which gave great alarm to the members of their lordships' House. On the 12th day of May, 1735, this advertisement was brought under the notice of the House. It was published in the Daily Post Boy of the 12th of May, and was to the effect that there had been just published Mr. Pope's literary correspondence for thirty years, namely, from 1704 to 1734, being a collection of letters written by him to the right honourable the Earl of Halifax, the right honourable the Earl of Burlington, and many others —printed by Edmund Curll, in Rose-street, and sold by all booksellers. It was ordered by the House that the gentleman usher of the black rod should go and seize all the copies of the book, and that the said Edmund Curll, together with John Halford, for whom the newspaper had been printed, do attend the bar of the House next day. The parties accordingly attended on the following day, and being examined, were ordered to withdraw. The gentleman usher of the black rod then reported to the House what he had done under their lordships' order.

He stated that he had ordered all the copies of the book found at Mr. Curll's house to be seized, and that he believed they might be 500 in number. A committee was appointed, to whom the copy of the book presented by the gentleman usher of the black rod was referred; and Edmund Curll was ordered to attend the committee. The Earl Delawarr brought forward the report of the committee in the House, and it appeared from it that this was an illegal seizure, that no letters from any deceased peer were contained in the publication, and that the committee did not think it contrary to the standing order, and they therefore recommended that the books which had been seized should be restored to Edmund Curll. The report was read by the clerk attending the House, and agreed to, and the books were given back to the publisher. He was not aware that there had been any other seizure under this standing order, though there had been many lives of deceased peers and of deceased prelates, members of their lordships' House, published on various occasions, without the leave of the friends or representatives of the deceased parties. His noble and learned friend, who, he regretted to perceive, was not then present (Lord Brougham) had published lives, powerfully and ably written, of several deceased members of that House, more especially of Lord Chatham and Lord North, and he had no doubt without the consent of the heirs and representatives of those noblemen. He (Lord Campbell) had also employed many laborious hours, without, he hoped, incurring the censure of that House, in writing the lives of the predecessors of his noble and learned friend on the woolsack, both spiritual and temporal. —The LORD CHANCELLOR: Not down to the present time, I hope (a laugh).—Lord CAMPBELL said he hoped many years would pass before any one could have an opportunity of writing the life of the present Lord Chancellor as a deceased peer. (Hear, hear.) The standing order did not apply to the life of any except a deceased peer. In fact, it only followed the rule de mortuis nil nisi bonum. It must, if enforced, serve as an entire prohibition against writing the lives of some Chancellors. For instance, St. Swithin had been Lord Chancellor to King Ethelbert, and St. Thomas à Becket was also Lord Chancellor of England, and who the heirs or personal representatives of these deceased members of their lordships' house might be he had been unable to discover. Besides, he considered the standing order unnecessary, inasmuch as the law allowed an indictment to be laid for a libel reflecting on the memory of a deceased person, and a very remarkable action of that kind was tried in the early part of the reign of George II. He considered this standing order one having a strong tendency to bring into disrepute the necessary privileges of their lordships' house, and he therefore begged to move that it be rescinded.—The motion was agreed to.

THURSDAY, July 31.—Their lordships met at half-past four o'clock, when the Royal assent was given by commission to the following Bills:—The Spirit Duties (Guernsey and Jersey) Bill; the Stock and Unclaimed Dividends Bill; the Church Building Acts Bill; the Militia Enrolment Bill; an Act for the relief of persons of the Jewish religion elected to municipal offices; an Act to amend the law respecting defamatory words and libels; an Act to stay execution of judgment for misdemeanors upon giving bail in error; an Act to extend the indemnity of members of art unions against certain penalties; an Act to facilitate the completion of a geological survey of Great Britain and Ireland, under the direction of the First Commissioner for the time being of her Majesty's Woods and Works; the Loan Societies Bill; the Bill to amend an Act of the seventh year of King William IV. for preventing the advertising of foreign and other illegal lotteries, and to discontinue certain actions commenced under the provisions of the said Act; the Turnpike Roads Bill; the Highways (England) Bill, the Shrewsbury and Holyhead Road Bill, the Rothwell Gaol Bill, the Turnpike Acts Bill, the Turnpike Trusts Consolidation (South Wales) Bill, the Drainage Bill, the Colleges (Ireland) Bill; an Act to enable archbishops and bishops in Ireland to charge their sees with the costs incurred by them in defence of their rights of patronage in certain cases, and also to enable tenants for life and other persons having limited interests in estates in Ireland to charge said estates with the costs incurred by them in asserting their rights to ecclesiastical patronage in certain cases; the Unlawful Oaths (Ireland) Bill; an Act for making further regulations for more effectually securing the correctness of the jurors' books in Ireland; the Union and Division of Parishes (Ireland) Bill; an Act to Amend certain Regulations respecting the Retail of Spirits in Ireland; the Drainage (Ireland) Bill; the Wear Valley Railway Bill; the Aberdeen Railway Bill; the Norwich, Brandon, and East Dereham Railway Bill; the Bristol and Exeter Extension Railway Bill, enabling the company to make several branches connected with the existing line; an Act enabling the London and Birmingham Railway to take a lease of the West London Railway, and extend the same to the River Thames; the South-Western Extension Railway Bill; the Dundee and Perth Railway Bill; the Edinburgh and Northern Railway Bill; the Aberdare Railway Bill; the Clydesdale Junction Railway Bill; the Scottish Central Railway Bill; the Caledonian Railway Bill; the Newcastle and Berwick Railway Bill; the Hawick and Roxburgh Railway Bill; the Liverpool, Wigram, Bolton, and Bury Railway Bill; the South-Eastern Railway Bill (branch to Tunbridge Wells); the Thames and Medway Canal Company, in conjunction with the Gravesend and Rochester Company's Bill; the Newport and Pontypool Railway Bill; the Perth and Forfar Railway Bill; the Manchester and Leeds Railway Extension Bill; the Manchester, Leeds, Wakefield, Pontefract, and Goole Railway Bill; the Falmouth Harbour Bill; the Cromford Canal Bill; the Sheffield Waterworks Bill; the St. Helen's Improvement of Town Bill; the Bermondsey Improvement Bill; the Westminster Improvement Bill, the title of which is, "An Act for improving Parts of the City of Westminster;" the Tacumshin (in the county of Wexford) Lake Bill; an Act for extinguishing small tithes and Easter offerings within the parish of St. Matthew, Bethnal-green, in the county of Middlesex, and for providing a fund for the payment of the stipend of the rector of the said parish; the Morden College Bill; the Hawkins Estate Bill; the Mainwaring Estate Bill; the Lord Monson's Estate Bill; the Gildart Estate Bill; and an Act to dissolve the marriage of Richard Heaviside, esq. with Mary his now wife, and to enable him to marry again, and for other purposes.—The Lords Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, Lord Wharncliffe, and the Duke of Buccleuch.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

JUDICIAL POWERS OF MAGISTRATES.

MONDAY, July 28.—In answer to a question from Mr. Hendley, Sir J. GRAHAM said that although cases might occur in which magistrates might act singly in a judicial capacity, yet it would be a sound discretion to make such cases rather the exception than the rule; and where a penalty was to be levied, he thought it would be well to do so in the presence of other magistrates and the clerk, where it was possible. When cases occurred in which a delay would defeat the ends of justice, then it would often be necessary for a magistrate to act singly.—Mr. HENLEY wished to be informed whether or not it was the intention of the right honourable baronet to bring in a measure next session relative to those cases where a magistrate was called on to act singly in a judicial capacity.—Sir J. GRAHAM was not prepared to introduce any such measure.—In answer to Mr. HUME, Sir J. GRAHAM said he had no intention of introducing a measure to relieve the county magistrates from those duties. On the whole, he thought that they were most useful to the country from the manner in which they discharged their duties.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

AN occurrence at Exeter has been severely, but not more severely than justly, commented upon by the daily papers. Our readers are aware of the trial that there took place, of ten men for murder and piracy, of whom seven were convicted, and sentenced to be hung. Mr. Serjeant MANNING, by whom they were defended, raised some questions of law, arising out of the construction of treaties and other points of extreme doubt and difficulty, upon which, not the lawyers only, but nations, are at issue. The learned judge (PLATT, B.) who presided refused to reserve these points for the consideration of the fifteen judges, but took upon himself summarily to decide them, although himself the junior member of the Bench, and necessarily wanting in the advantage of long experience; and although no less than seven lives depended upon his right construction of a doubtful point of law, that would perplex and divide the most sage and learned lawyers in Europe. We must join the Chronicle in emphatically protesting against the course adopted by the learned Baron; and we call upon Sir JAMES GRAHAM to respite the execution until the points raised have been formally considered and decided by the ultimate tribunal for appeal on reasonable doubts upon points of law raised at the trials of criminals. Nobody will say that the points raised by the counsel for these prisoners do not admit of reasonable, nay, of very great, doubt; and justice and humanity demand that they should have the advantage which in such case the law gives them—a formal decision of the assembled judges of England. We protest against the plan of hanging first and trying afterwards.

THE STAFFORDSHIRE MAGISTRATES—CASE OF ELIZA PRICE.

THE report of Mr. F. Newman Rogers, the commissioner appointed to inquire into certain allegations contained in the petition of Eliza Price of ill-treatment towards her on the part of two constables of the county of Stafford, and into the manner in which the magisterial business of the Kingswinford district, in Staffordshire, has been conducted, has been presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of her Majesty. The report fully bears out the statements already before the public as to the improper conduct of magisterial business in that district, and is accompanied by a letter from Sir James Graham to the Earl of Talbot, the lord-lieutenant of the county, of which the following is a copy:—

"Whitehall, 30th June, 1845.

My Lord,—I think it necessary to bring under your lordship's notice several matters affecting the administration of justice in the county of Stafford, which have come to my knowledge in consequence of the inquiry recently instituted by me into the complaint of Eliza Price. I have the honour to inclose a copy of Mr. Newman Rogers's report upon this subject, to which I beg to direct your immediate and particular attention.

"It appears that, in the Seisdon division of the county, two petty sessions are periodically held for the same district within a short distance of each other; the one at Wordsley, and the other at the Cross Inn, Kingswinford. This concurrent jurisdiction of two benches of magistrates within the same division has led to conflicting judgments, collision, and disputes between the magistrates concerning their clerks' fees. It is obviously important at once to put a stop to such proceedings; and I beg, therefore, to impress upon your lordship how essential it is that immediate steps should be taken to separate, into two distinct divisions, the populous district which is now made a subject of contention between two benches of magistrates. Until this can be legally effected, I would suggest to your lordship that the magistrates should be enjoined to act, by agreement, within certain parishes, or to adopt by anticipation the division, which I learn is about to be proposed by a committee of magistrates.

"I regret to find that it has long been a practice in the county to detain prisoners during the night chained at the stations, and even at public houses and beer-shops. It would appear, moreover, that, in subjecting persons taken into custody to this mode of detention, no reference has been made either to the nature of the offences with which they were charged, or to their condition, or the probability of their attempting to escape. I am informed that this practice, though it has been recently abandoned by the constables of the police force, is still resorted to by other constables; and I would particularly recommend that, through your lordship's suggestions to the magistrates in quarter sessions, such directions may be given to the parish constables as will at once put an end to this practice, which I consider indefensible.

"It is, at the same time, represented to me that there is a great want of proper places of temporary confinement, and there is good reason to believe that such irregular proceedings may, in many cases, have arisen from the neglect to provide convenient lock-up houses; I beg, therefore, to call your lordship's attention, and, through your lordship, the attention of the county magistrates, to the 12th section of the 3rd and 4th of Victoria, c. 88, which empowers the magistrates to erect suitable buildings for this purpose.

"Two other irregularities appear in the course of the inquiry, which do not seem to be confined to the particular case out of which it arose. I allude to the performance of judicial duties (not mere ministerial acts) by magistrates in their private dwellings—a practice which I consider open to serious objections, and which I am happy to learn has for some time been decreasing among county magistrates. The grant of warrants also in trivial cases, where the attendance of the parties against whom a complaint is made might be secured by summons, is a course which may unnecessarily entail upon innocent persons the degradation of criminal custody, and frequently a useless loss of their time. I am afraid that the result of this examination proves the existence of dissensions among the magistrates acting in this district of the county of Stafford, which are at variance with the public interest, and inconsistent with the due administration of justice.

"In reference to the particular case complained of, I have learned with much surprise that Mr. Briscoe, whose conduct the petition of Eliza Price brought specially under the notice of Parliament, has been in the habit of executing blank warrants of commitment, and of sending them a distance of seven miles to his clerk, by a constable, with instructions which it is not clear were always in writing, to fill them up. I am sure it is unnecessary to call your lordship's attention to the serious abuses which such an irregular proceeding might produce, or to the injurious effect which so great an informality must have upon the administration of justice.

"There is one other point to which it is necessary

I should advert; I am of opinion, that part of the irregularity which this case has disclosed, would not have arisen, had the clerks to the magistrates acting at the Cross Inn Petty Sessions been fully qualified persons, and I trust that your lordship will deem it right to impress upon the magistrates how necessary it is that they should be assisted in the important business which belongs to the Petty Sessions by clerks who possess every qualification necessary to fit them for the discharge of such duties.

"After full inquiry and consideration, I regret that I cannot avoid expressing my disapproval of Mr. Briscoe's conduct. I do not attribute to him the improper treatment of Eliza Price, while in the custody of the constable. But I have already expressed to him my opinion that it was a harsh proceeding to issue a warrant for her apprehension on a charge of common assault, instead of a summons to appear at the petty sessions. His proceedings, moreover, as a magistrate, are shewn to have been marked by great irregularity. And I request that your lordship will impress strongly upon him the necessity of exercising great caution in his future magisterial duties, of strictly adhering to those legal forms of proceeding which are important to the proper administration of justice, and of preventing, by a more vigilant superintendence of those who may act under his orders, any unnecessary harshness in the execution of the law.

"I have the honour to be, my lord,
"Your lordship's very faithful servant,
"J. G. Graham.

'Earl Talbot, lord-lieutenant of the county of Stafford, &c. &c."

Fees (Criminal Proceedings) Bill.—The Bill of Mr. Escott having been thrown over, in accordance with the request of the Home Secretary, that functionary has, in fulfilment of his promise to that effect, introduced a new Bill "for the abolition of certain fees in criminal cases." It simply goes to enact that the provisions of the Act of the 55 Geo. 3, cap. 50, respecting the discharge of certain prisoners without payment of any fee, do and shall extend to all persons who are now, or who hereafter shall be, charged with or indicted for any felony, or as an accessory thereto, or with or for any misdemeanour, before any court of criminal jurisdiction in England, against whom no bill of indictment shall be found by the grand jury, or who, on their trial shall be acquitted or discharged by proclamation for want of prosecution; and that it is not and shall not be lawful to demand or take from any persons any fee for their appearance to the indictment or information, or for allowing them to plead thereto, or for recording their appearance or plea, or for discharging any recognizances taken for any such persons, or any surety or sureties for them. The second clause enacts, that whereas by the recited Act it was provided that the clerks of the peace or clerks of the court should receive the amount of the fees theretofore payable to them respectively, which were abolished by the said Act, out of the rates of the county, district, hundred, riding, or division, or out of the public stock of the city, town, cinque-port, or liberty of which they were severally the officers, no such payment shall be made out of any such rate or stock in satisfaction of any of the fees abolished by the said Act, to any clerk of assize or clerk of the peace appointed after the passing of this Act, or to any of their deputies.

...nty Treasurers.—The abstracts of the accounts of the several county treasurers of England and Wales, which have just appeared in print, shew that the gross total amount of their receipts was, in 1843, 1,232,518*l.*, and in 1844, 1,193,068*l.* Their gross total disbursements amounted, in 1843, to 1,111,255*l.*; and in 1844, to 1,071,062*l.* Of their receipts, in 1844, 126,808*l.* accrued from balances in hand; 699,327*l.* from county rates; 163,265*l.* from police rates; 103,035*l.* from treasury allowances; and 100,631*l.* from miscellaneous sources.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

We have been subjected to more difficulties and delays in the completion of the judgments in consequence of the reporters being scattered all over the country at their various circuits; and we are not yet sure that some have not been lost in following them from town to town. This, however, is an inevitable evil. The professional questions now before the public are treated of elsewhere. Probably they will serve to amuse during the long vacation.

REVIEW OF THE CASES DECIDED IN ALL THE COURTS OF COMMON LAW,

During Easter Term and Vacation, and Trinity Term and Vacation, 1845.

In the same manner as last year, we now present a review of the decisions in general law which have been given by the Courts of Common Law during the last two Terms. Notwithstanding they have sat long and worked hard, there are not many of very great importance. The constitutional question at issue in Howard v. Gossett is that which has attracted most attention; and it may be considered as the decision of the year. There are many points of practice and technical questions also decided, but on the whole, the terms have, we think, been somewhat barren.

ABATEMENT.

The points of pleading which fall within the scope of these summaries being so few, it will, perhaps, be better to notice them under separate heads than under the general term. We therefore mention here, that the argument of Mr. Peacock convinced the Court of Exchequer that the form of conclusion to a plea of abatement for nonjoinder given in Mr. Serjt. Stephen's most valuable book is correct, for that it ought to pray judgment of the writ as well as of the declaration. (Davis v. Thompson, 5 Law T. 130.) The affidavit need not state the residence of the party omitted at the time of the commencement of the suit, but only at the time of plea pleaded in pursuance of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 8. (Bannister v. Bachelor, 5 Law T. 73.)

ANNUITY.

No Acts of Parliament have caused more injustice by the opportunities given to technical objections than those as to the enrolment of annuities; and the extreme caution requisite in transactions of this kind is illustrated by the case of Abbot v. Douglas (5 Law T. 151). There the Court of Common Pleas decided that the statement in the memorial of the consideration, if pecuniary, must be as minute and precise under the 53 Geo. 3, c. 141, as under the old Act of 17 Geo. 3, and that therefore, where a draft upon a banker, payable on demand, formed part of the consideration, and was described as a "draft" only, it was an insufficient statement of the consideration, for which the judgment upon the warrant of attorney was set aside. Poole v. Cabanes (8 T. R. 328) and Morris v. Wall (1 Bos. & P. 208) were similar decisions upon the former statute. We may here mention the novel application which was made and granted in Hall v. Lack (5 Law T. 238) by the Court of Queen's Bench. Through inadvertence, a rule had been drawn up setting aside the annuity-deed as well as the judgment upon the warrant of attorney, upon objections which did not bring the case within the operation of the 6th section of the Act, under which alone the Court has power to set aside by order the deed of annuity. The application to amend the rule was, however, not made until the ensuing Term, and it was contended that there was no power to amend. The Court, however, considering the peculiar circumstances of the case, and that the grounds of objection were incorporated with the rule, and thus the error of the Court made manifest, allowed the amendment, upon payment of costs, with, however, an express warning that they would not allow this to be drawn into a precedent. They held also, that the rule to amend was in substance an application to the memory of the Court, and therefore it needed not to be drawn up upon reading the Master's report upon which the original rule had been granted. It should be observed that Mr. Justice Patteson corrected an omission in the report of Ex parte Lewis (2 A. & E. 135) by stating that the judgment proceeded also upon objections under the 6th section of the Act.

ARBITRATION.

Time for making awards.—To judge from the number of applications made each Term to upset awards, arbitrations seem not a very satisfactory mode of settling disputes, but objections have not been very successful during the last two Terms. Andrewes v. Andrewes (5 Law T. 202) decides that where a period for making the award is limited to a certain time "next after the reference," the day upon which the reference is made must be excluded; so that where the reference was upon the 1st of March, and the award was to be within a calendar month next after the reference, it was in time upon the 1st of April. Re Higham (9 D. P. C. 203), to say nothing of Hardy v. Ryle (9 B. & C. 603) and numerous other cases, would have seemed to us quite sufficient authority as to the mode of calculating the period for making an award. In the case first mentioned, an umpire was appointed to make an award two months "next after the matters were referred to him," and this time was enlarged for three months further. Patteson, J. held that the day of his appointment was clearly to be excluded. The general rule is, that in all periods to be calculated from an act done, the day of doing the act is excluded.

Awards not to be set aside for mistakes which are not apparent.—The extreme eagerness with which a decision, however closely it may approach the extreme verge of the law, is caught at to support some attempt to carry the boundary still further, is illustrated by the case of Hagger v. Baker (5 Law T.; 14 L. J. 227, Ex.). The Court of Common Pleas having in one instance held that they could interfere to correct gross negligence of arbitrators in subtracting one sum from another, instead of adding them together (Re Hall v. Hinds, 2 M. & Gr. 847), it was attempted in Phillips v. Evans (12 M. & W. 309; 13 L. J. 80, Ex.) to set aside an award where the arbitrator had admitted he had made a mistake in fact. This was refused, and the general rule upheld, that, for mistakes not apparent upon the award, no remedy is to be found. But in the principal case, Re Hall v. Hinds was again called in requisition to set aside an award, because the arbitrator (a barrister) had received as evidence what was clearly inadmissible, viz. the books kept by the plaintiff himself in the way of his business. The Court of Exchequer discharged the rule with costs; and although it was mentioned as a matter of fact, that the arbitrator was not shewn to have formed his judgment upon this inadmissible evidence, yet there is no ground for supposing that this would have made any difference in the decision of the case. The case of Re Hall, said Mr. Baron Parke, "has gone quite far enough."

Of a similar nature was the application in Harlow v. Read (5 Law T. 175), where it was held to be no objection to an award that the arbitrators stated they had considered the decision of the umpire, when in fact they had never consulted the person called the umpire at all, nor had he ever had any power, because the arbitrators had never differed.

Waiver.—As proceeding with the arbitration with knowledge that the time has expired, and has not been enlarged, is a waiver of the objection, so proceeding with knowledge that the witnesses on the other side have not been examined upon oath according to the terms of the reference, is a waiver of the objection to the jurisdiction, notwithstanding that at the time it was pressed upon the arbitrator that he had no power so to examine them. (Allen v. Francis, 5 Law T. 178.)

ATTORNEY AND SOLICITOR.

We omit here the cases that have arisen as to taxation under the new Act, because we propose to collect these separately, in continuation of our "Practical Notes upon Statutes," (see 3 Law T. 332); but there are some others of professional interest which we will now notice. The first is upon

The liability of attorneys upon personal undertakings.—The courts most properly exercise a summary jurisdiction over their officers, and on more than one occasion have interfered to enforce the fulfilment of several obligations which have been contracted by attorneys in the course of their professional employment, although no strict legal liability may have been incurred. Thus it is no answer to an application to compel an attorney to pay over money he has received, that the debt is barred by the Statute of Limitations. (Ex parte Sharpe, 5 D. P. C. 717.) And so the protection given by the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, to prevent ignorant persons being entrapped into signing warrants of attorney, is not extended to attorneys. And the recent case of Re Hilliard (5 Law T. 58, 59) confirms the previous decisions of Re Greaves (1 C. & J. 374, n.) and Re Paterson (1 D. P. C. 468), and establishes that an attorney will be compelled to perform any undertaking given by him in the course of his employment as such, notwithstanding it be insufficient to ground an action upon. In that case, an undertaking by the defendant's attorney to pay the debt and costs within a certain time was summarily enforced. It is satisfactory to have another decision upon this point, as it is of very great practical importance that attorneys, who are so often obliged, in the course of business, to trust to the promises and undertakings of their opponent attorney, should know that they have the power to punish any who may endeavour to avoid the fulfilment of such promises upon any technical objection. The Courts will look to what justice and honesty require, and compel the performance of it. It must, however, be always remembered, that this jurisdiction is only exercised where the undertaking has been given in the capacity of an attorney. (See Walker v. Arlett, 1 D. P. C. 61.)

Right to withdraw from suit.—As an attorney has the peculiar privileges of his general lien to secure his costs, so he is bound to continue a cause once commenced to its termination, unless he can shew satisfactory reasons for discontinuing it, and give due notice of his intention to do so. (See Nicholls v. Wilson, 11 M. & W. 106.) It is important, therefore, to remark any decisions as to what is sufficient notice. Smith v. Rocke (5 Law T. 243) was one upon this point. There, an attorney, who had been retained to conduct the defence of an action brought against a party, obtained a verdict for his client. A rule for a new trial was subsequently obtained, but two assizes having passed without any further step being taken by the plaintiff to proceed to a second trial, the attorney sent in his bill of costs, which the defendant promised to pay. This was held to be a reasonable notice to his client of his intention to determine the contract between them, and to retire from the further conduct of the suit, and that the promise to pay the bill was a concurrence by the defendant to the termination of the relation of attorney and client which had subsisted between them, and consequently the attorney was entitled to recover in an action for the amount of his bill.

Is a sham attorney liable to be indicted?—This important question was mooted in Reg. v. Buchanan (5 Law T. 238). An indictment which had been preferred under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 2, against a Mr. Buchanan for practising as an attorney at Quarter Sessions, had been removed by certiorari to be quashed, but the Court refused to say that it was so palpably bad as to justify this proceeding; at the same time intimating no opinion as to its validity. The main argument relied on against it was, that being an indictment under the statute, there was nothing in the statute to warrant a criminal proceeding. The subsequent clause points out a specific remedy, and therefore it was said the rule that acting contrary to the statute is an indictable offence, did not apply. It was curious that no precedent of any indictment could be found; and it was argued that it was only an offence created by statute. We should be inclined to advise, in any future instance, that a count be added, charging the acting as an attorney as an obtaining money under false pretences. It might possibly also be a cheat at common law, as affecting, or tending to affect, public justice.

BANKRUPTCY.

Notice of act of bankruptcy.—It has not yet been decided whether a general notice to the creditor, that a party has committed an act of bankruptcy, is a sufficient notice to exclude the protection of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29. It was touched upon in Ramsey v. Eaton (10 M. & W. 22), but not decided, although Parke, B. intimated his opinion that no notice of a specific act of bankruptcy was necessary. So also did Lord Abinger, in Hocking v. Acraman (12 M. & W. 170), where the Court of Exchequer decided that notice of a docket being struck was not notice of an act of bankruptcy. Again it was discussed in Conway v. Nall (5 Law T. 127; 14 Law J. 165, C. P.); but again it was unnecessary to decide it. From the decision, however, that was given, and the observations of the judges, the inference seems to be that such a general notice would be insufficient. The plaintiffs had issued execution upon a judgment, and a seizure had taken place upon the 3rd of April, about one o'clock. Early in the morning, the same day, the following letter was received by the plaintiffs in the original action:—

GENTLEMEN,—To save you expense, I think it right to inform you that Mr. John Nall, of this place, grocer, has committed an act of bankruptcy. He signed a declaration of insolvency yesterday; my clients, Messrs. Robinson and Broadhurst, bankers here, are the principal creditors, and are in possession of all his property for the equal benefit of his creditors. Nall will be declared bankrupt immediately. I have sent for a fiat. I am afraid he is deeply in debt, and his estate will produce but a small dividend; he however states otherwise.

I am, Gentlemen, yours, &c.

To Messrs. Conway and Co. JOHN GILLETT.

The Court of Common Pleas held this to be only a notice of a declaration of insolvency having been signed, and that was only a notice that an act of bankruptcy was probably about to be committed for that, until it was filed and signed as required by the statute, the act was not complete. They thus adhered to the very letter of the statute, and Cresswell, J. remarked, that had the words been, "notice that he had become a bankrupt," a general notice might suffice; whence it seems to follow, and also from the modern strictness of construing Acts of Parliament, that there must be distinct notice of some act of bankruptcy committed. We do not think that Rothwell v. Timbrell (1 D.N.S. 778) militates against this view. There the creditor had notice of a distinct act done, which no doubt, like every other act, admitted of two constructions; but it was an act such as is ordinarily an act of bankruptcy; and assuming it to be proved to be such act, no more specific notice could well have been given. But a mere general threat that A B has committed an act of bankruptcy would open a wide door to fraud and collusion, in order to deprive a creditor of the fruits of his judgment, for proof of any of the numerous acts which render a man a bankrupt would support the allegation, and such a notice would be given upon every occasion upon the chance of subsequent inquiries ripping up some such act, and would indirectly revive many of the hardships of the old doctrine of relation. In every case, therefore, we would advise that the notice be as distinct as possible, and given to the parties themselves, or their attorney acting in the business; for notice to the sheriff would not avail. (See cases above cited.)

Effect of setting aside an execution upon warrant of attorney.—After the elaborate arguments in Graham v. Witherby and Graham v. Lynes (5 Law T. 263), and the time apparently given by the Court to the consideration of the question, the point decided in Goldschmidt v. Hamlet (1 D. & L. 501) may be looked upon as thoroughly established. The effect, then, of setting aside an execution upon a warrant of attorney is to transfer the property seized to any judgment creditors who may have delivered valid writs of execution into the sheriff's hands, and not to the assignees in exclusion of such creditors. This being so, assignees will be less willing to dispute such executions, and judgment creditors ought in no case to forbear delivering their writs, because the sheriff happens to be already in possession, under what is supposed to be more than sufficient to swallow up the proceeds.

CONTRACT.

There are several useful cases to be noticed under this heading. We shall notice, separately, under the head of "Fraudulent Representation," the principles which govern that class of actions, as decided by Ormerod v. Hutt (5 Law T. 2).

Executor of trustee.—An executor of a trustee is not liable to the cestui que trust in an action for money had and received by the testator, when the only proof is, that there was a surplus in the testator's hands after satisfying the purposes of the trust. There must be a distinct statement of the account, to divest the transaction of its fiduciary character and give a court of law jurisdiction. As long as he is a trustee, he is no debtor. Where the one relation begins, the other ends. (Bartlett v. Dimond, 5 Law T. 56.)

Master and servant—What will justify a dismissal.—The distinction between moral and legal duties is often confused by persons who indulge in vituperation of the law, because its decisions may work injustice; and Turner v. Mason (5 Law T. 97) is a good illustration of the value of this distinction, and that the province of the courts of law is necessarily limited to strict legal duties and legal liabilities, and does not include what moral philosophers call imperfect obligations. An action was there brought by a servant against her master, for improperly discharging her without payment of a month's wages. The defence was, that the plaintiff had absented herself without permission and against orders, for a day and a night. The replication set up that the plaintiff had done so for the purpose of seeing her mother, who was dangerously ill. The Court of Exchequer held the replication bad, for they could not decide what was proper and morally right, but what was a breach of performance of a lawful contract. As to the case put by Parke, B. in Jacquot v. Bourn (7 D. P. C. 348), of a refusal to work during church-time on Sunday, it would, we apprehend, be determined by the application of the nearly obsolete statutes relating to the observance of Sunday, upon which subject we would refer our readers to a very curious and learned work entitled Feasts and Fasts, lately published.

In the recent case of Calder and Salter Hibble Bridge Company v. Billing (5 Law T. 56), it was decided that a bye-law prohibiting parties from navigating their canal on a Sunday was void, however proper and desirable it might be to prevent Sunday traffic.

Knowledge of misconduct at time of dismissal.—Lord Denman, in delivering the judgment of the Court in Ridgway v. Hungerford Market Company (3 A. & E. 171; 4 Nev. & M. 797), intimated his opinion that a master dismissing his servant for misconduct not only need not state at the time the ground of his dismissal, but need not even be aware of it at the time of such dismissal. This doctrine, which was not necessary to the immediate decision, was not acceded to by Parke, B. in Cussons v. Skinner (11 M. & W. 172), who, after expressing his assent to the point decided, that a statement of the offence was unnecessary, continued: "But it would be necessary for the defendants who justify the discharge to shew that at the time the discharge took place, in January 1841, they knew at least of this act of misconduct." In Mercer v. Wall (5 Law T. 304), however, the point was incidentally discussed, and while, in that particular case, proof of knowledge was held necessary because expressly averred in the plea, the other part of the doctrine was confirmed in the following words:—"It is not necessary that the defendant should be aware of the offences, and should prove at the trial that he knew of them, because if an offence could be proved to have occurred before, which would warrant him in dismissing the plaintiff, and which shewed the plaintiff had no right to continue in his service, the plea would be well proved in proof of the fact, without proof of knowledge." In the course of the argument, his lordship said that he had always looked upon it as a kind of personal disability. This, however, may still be considered as a question not absolutely decided, for it has not yet been directly the point at issue in the case, although there can be no doubt what the Court of Queen's Bench would hold.

Money had and received.—It is important to the practitioner to observe the cases which occur upon the right to recover money which has been once paid, either under ignorance or mistake, or under such circumstances as not to be deemed voluntary. Valpy v. Manly (5 Law T. 94), therefore, demands a place in our summary. The sheriff had entered under a fi. fa. against the bankrupt before the fiat, but did not actually seize until after the fiat. He then took an inventory, and was proceeding to sell, but, to prevent the sale, the assignees paid the amount claimed, and brought their action to recover the amount. They were held to be entitled to recover, for there was a claim of right by the sheriff, and power to enforce it; and without the payment, the goods would not have been obtained. We think, however, that the latter part of the judgment of Tindal, C.J. seems to imply that an urgent necessity for the goods is an ingredient to constitute the right of recovering money paid for the goods, and we therefore quote the opinion of Bayley, J. which was confirmed by Holroyd, J. in Shaw v. Woodcock (7 B. & C. 73). It had been argued, that to enable parties to recover money paid with a knowledge of the facts, two circumstances must concur: that the owner must have an immediate pressing necessity, and the claim of lien must be clearly void; but Bayley, J. laid down the principle as follows:—

If a party has in his possession goods or other property belonging to another, and refuses to deliver such property to that other unless the latter pays him a sum of money which he has no right to receive, and the latter, in order to obtain his property, pays that sum, the money so paid is a payment made by compulsion, and may be recovered back. There is no authority to shew that the two things mentioned in argument are required in order to make the payment compulsory. E. W.

LEADING CASES.—No. VI.

13 M. & W. 343 affirming judgment in S. C. 11 M. & W. 778.)

DAVIDSON v. COOPER (in Error).

Effect of an alteration made in a deed or written instrument—Mode of pleading.

IN continuing our notices of important cases which have been recently decided by the courts of law, we think it desirable to advert in the first instance to a decision of the Court of Exchequer Chamber, in affirmance of the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, which decision is clearly in accordance with the dictates of common sense, and establishes a principle which is essential to the security of persons incurring liability on written documents, and to the maintenance of good faith in mercantile transactions.

The general principle here alluded to is this:—That any material alteration in a written instrument made subsequently to its completion, and without the privity of the party whom it affects, renders such instrument void, and precludes the party who would have been otherwise entitled to sue from recovering upon it. In Pigot's case (11 Rep. 26), which is the leading decision on this subject, it was resolved that "when any deed is altered in a point material by the plaintiff himself, or by any stranger without the privity of the obligee, be it by interlineation, addition, rasing, or by drawing of a pen through a line, or through the midst of any material word, the deed thereby becomes void." If, therefore, a bond be made for 10*l.* and after sealing the bond this amount be altered to 20*l.* by the obligee, and without the privity of the obligor, the bond is thereby rendered void. (11 Rep. 27.) With respect to an immaterial alteration, it was further resolved in the same case, that even this will avoid the deed if made by the obligee, or with his privity, but otherwise if made by a stranger without his privity. This latter resolution, however, must, it will appear from the ensuing remarks, be somewhat qualified in its application at the present day.

The mere statement of the rule laid down in Pigot's case seems sufficient to shew that it must be equally applicable to instruments not under seal as to deeds; and accordingly, in Master v. Miller (4 T. R. 320), affirmed in Error (2 H. Bla. 140), the rule was applied to a bill of exchange, and it was held that even an innocent holder for a valuable consideration could not recover on a bill in which an alteration had been made after acceptance, whereby the day of payment was accelerated. The reason of the general rule applicable to the guilty party is observed by Lord Kenyon to be, that "no man shall be permitted to take the chance of committing a fraud without running any risk of losing by the event when it is detected;" and if this objection would prevail in an action brought by the party with whose connivance the alteration was made, it must be equally fatal to the claim of one who derives his title under that party. "Wherever," says Ashhurst, J. "a party takes a bill under such suspicious circumstances appearing on the face of it, it is his duty to inquire how the alteration was made; he takes it at his risk, and must take it subject to the same objection as lay against the party from whom he received it. Upon the whole, there seems to be no difference between deeds and bills of exchange in this respect in favour of the latter; but, on the contrary, if there be any difference, the objection ought to prevail with greater force in the latter than in the former, for it is more particularly necessary that bills of exchange, which are daily circulated from hand to hand, should be preserved with greater purity than deeds which do not pass in circulation." "When it is admitted," observed Eyre, C. J. (2 H. Bla. 143), "that the alteration of a deed would vitiate it, the point seems to me to be concluded; for by the custom of merchants a duty arises on bills of exchange from the operation of law, in the same manner as a duty is created on a deed by the act of the parties."

Precisely on the same principle which guided the judgment of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer Chamber in Master v. Miller, was decided the case of Powell v. Divett (15 East, 29), where it was held that a sale-note was vitiated by a material alteration made by the broker subsequently to the bargain evidenced by it, such alteration having been made at the instance of the vendor, and without the consent of the purchaser. The effect of the document in this case was destroyed by the fraudulent interpolation procured by the vendor's own act, the reason of the decision in Master v. Miller not being confined to negotiable instruments, but much more general in its application, and extending to all written mercantile contracts. (Sanderson v. Symonds, 1 BroJ. & B. 426, 431.)

Where, then, an alteration is material, we apprehend that little difficulty can arise in applying the rule of law above laid down, whether or not an alteration is to be considered as material, and whether, if immaterial, the instrument is thereby avoided, are questions which it may not, under particular circumstances, be very easy to solve. In Sanderson v. Symonds, already cited, an action of assumpsit was brought on a maritime policy of insurance effected on a vessel during her voyage to, and "during her stay" at, a particular place. Subsequently to the execution of the policy, the insured inserted after the word "stay" the words "and trade," and the objection was consequently taken that the instrument was thereby rendered totally void; but the Court held that the alteration was clearly immaterial, and that the policy was not vacated by it. "If a deed," observed Dallas, C.J., "be altered in a material point by a stranger, it is rendered void; if it be altered in an immaterial point by a party, it becomes, in some cases, void. The original rule was not intended so much to guard against fraud, as to insure the identity of the instrument, and prevent the substitution of another without the privity of the party concerned." In like manner, where a parol contract was entered into by which the defendant became tenant to the plaintiff of a farm from year to year, but afterwards signed an agreement containing certain stipulations as to the mode of tillage, and the agreement on being produced contained an erasure in the term of years mentioned in the habendum, which was altered from seven to fourteen, it was observed that although, according to the general rule, it lies upon the party producing a document to explain any alteration apparent on the face of it, yet, in the present case, the duration of the term therein mentioned was immaterial, being altogether dehors the agreement, and quite independent of the contract entered into by the parties, and that, consequently, the agreement might be received in evidence without any explanation of the erasure. (Earl of Falmouth v. Roberts, 9 M. & W. 469.)

Having, then, under the given circumstances of the case, determined whether or not the alteration is material, we must, in the event of having decided that it is so, proceed to consider in what manner this defence should be raised on the record. Now it seems to result from the authorities that, with respect to one important class of cases, viz. actions on bills of exchange and promissory notes, the two following rules must be observed: 1. Where the alteration is such as to render a new stamp necessary, or to cause a variance between the bill declared on and that produced; where, in fact, the alteration is such as to put an end to existing liabilities, the defence may be given in evidence, under the plea that the defendant did not accept the bill or make the note. But, 2ndly, when no objection can be taken respecting the sufficiency of the stamp, and where the document, when produced in evidence, agrees with the statement of it in the declaration, the defence that the bill or note has been altered must be specially pleaded by way of confession and avoidance; for the defendant, on such a defence, confesses that he made the contract; but he avoids it by shewing that the contract was afterwards vitiated by the alteration.

Of the first of the above rules an example occurs in Cock v. Coxwell (2 Cr. M. & R. 291). In that case the bill was declared on as altered, and a plea of non-acceptance was held sufficient; for this plea in substance is, "I did not accept the bill in the manner you charge;" and the plaintiff himself establishes this plea by proving a bill in the form in which the defendant did not accept it. (See Baker v. Jubber, 1 Scott's N.R. 26; Crotty v. Hodges, 5 Scott, N.R. 221.) Calvert v. Baker (4 M. & W. 417) may, perhaps, be supported on the ground that the alteration of the bill in that case was such, in the opinion of the Court, as to render a fresh stamp necessary. (Per Parke, B. 11 M. & W. 787.) In illustration of the second rule above laid down, we may refer to Mason v. Bradley (11 M. & W. 590), which was an action by the payee against the maker of a joint and several promissory note—plea, that the defendant did not make the said note modo et formâ. At the trial it appeared that the defendant signed the note in question as a surety, on the faith that six other persons would sign it as co-sureties with him, and these six persons did accordingly sign the note; but on the note being produced at the trial, it appeared that the name of one Jephson, the last person who had signed, had been cut off from the note; it was held that this defence could not be given in evidence under the above plea, but ought to have been pleaded specially as shewing that the original liability of the parties to the instrument had been altered by the removal of the name of one of them. (See also Bell v. Gardiner, 4 Scott, N.R. 621.)

In a recent and important case, bearing directly upon the subject under consideration, the plaintiff declared on a guarantee, and the defendant pleaded non assumpsit. On the trial the instrument appeared to have been interlined so as materially to alter its effect, but without the interlineation it corresponded with the declaration. The jury found that the interlineation was made after the instrument was executed; and Lord Denman, in delivering judgment, observed that in this case there was a valid contract, which was avoided by a subsequent act; that nothing was adduced to shew that the original contract was void in its inception; that the promise, denied by the defendant, was established by the evidence, and that the defence arising from matter ex post facto ought to have been specially pleaded. (Hemming v. Trenery, 9 A. & E. 926, recognised 11 M. & W. 787.)

Having thus shortly directed attention to some of the most important modern decisions relative to the subject here treated of, we shall proceed to consider, as concisely as may be consistent with its importance, the case of Davidson v. Cooper (11 M. & W. 778, affirmed in error 13 id. 343), which will be found very clearly to elucidate the law applicable to the case where a written instrument has been altered without the assent of the party whose interests are affected by such alteration. This was an action of assumpsit on a guarantee brought against two defendants by the registered public officer of the Commercial Bank of England. One of the defendants (Brassington) pleaded non assumpsit only to the declaration; the other defendant (Cooper), in addition to the general issue, pleaded, inter alia, that after the said guarantee had been signed by the defendants, and whilst it was in the possession of the banking copartnership, it was, without the knowledge or consent of the defendant (Cooper), by some person or persons to him unknown, altered in a material particular, and its nature and effect materially changed by such unknown person or persons putting and affixing, and causing and procuring to be put and affixed, to the said guarantee, two seals by and near to the respective signatures of the defendants, and as and for the respective seals of the said defendants to the said guarantee, and thereby wrongfully causing the said guarantee to purport to have been respectively sealed by and to be the deed of each of the said defendants; and that the said guarantee, by reason of such alteration as aforesaid, was rendered void and of no effect. To this plea, the plaintiff replied that the guarantee was not altered modo et formâ, whereupon issue was joined. At the trial before Rolfe, B. a verdict was found for the plaintiff under the direction of the learned judge, leave being given to the defendants to enter a verdict for them on two grounds, the latter of which was that the affixing the seals to the guarantee after its execution, and whilst it was in the possession of the plaintiff, vitiated it altogether. On behalf of the plaintiff, it was contended, both before the Court of Exchequer and that of Exchequer Chamber, that the alteration in the guarantee had not the effect of making it a deed, because there was no delivery of it as such, and consequently that there was no material alteration; and with respect to the defendant Brassington, it was further urged that the defence relied on, if available at all, ought, at all events, to have been specially pleaded, and could not be given in evidence under non assumpsit; and this view of the case was adopted by the Court of Exchequer, on the authority of Hemming v. Trenery, above referred to. With respect to the first-mentioned objection, however, the Court decided that the alteration was in a material particular, and that the nature of the instrument was thereby materially changed. In affirming this judgment, Lord Denman, C. J. remarked that the rule in question can only be explained on the principle that a party who has the custody of an instrument made for his benefit is bound to preserve it in its original state; that it is highly important, for preserving the purity of legal instruments, that this principle should be borne in mind, and the rule adhered to; that in the particular case then under consideration, the addition of the seals gave a different legal character to the writing, and would, if made with the consent of all interested, completely change the nature of the relation towards each other of the parties to it and the remedies upon it; and that the argument grounded on the want of delivery was beside the real question, inasmuch as no addition to the instrument after execution could make its legal effect different from what it had originally been. The above case seems so clearly to exemplify the rule of law to which we have sought to direct the attention of the reader, that we shall dismiss it without further comment; and in conclusion observe, that when a deed is destroyed by time or accident, the party entitled under it may nevertheless have his remedy, and will be excused from making profert of the deed, by alleging and proving that it has been so destroyed. In this case it will be a matter of fact for the jury whether there be or be not sufficient evidence that the deed did exist, and the defendant may raise this question by pleading that the deed is not his, or by traversing the allegation of its loss or destruction. (Per Ashurst, J., Read v. Brookman, 3 T. R. 158; Dr. Leyfield's case, 10 Rep. 92, a; see also 1 Wms. Saund. 6th ed. 9, a, note c.) "It does seem," remarks Lord Kenyon (3 T. R. 156), "to militate against every idea of reason and justice, to say that, because deeds which are in their nature perishable cannot always be preserved, a party who is to derive a benefit or title under them shall be bereaved of that title in the event of their being lost." So in Dr. Leyfield's case, suprà, it is said that, where a man's deeds and muniments are destroyed by fire, profert of the deed pleaded may be dispensed with; and we may observe that the case of fire is here only put by way of instance; and if the deed be destroyed by any other accident, the reason of the rule which excuses profert will equally apply (Anon. case, Palmer, R. 403, cited 4 T. R. 331, 339; 1 Chitty on Pleading, 7th ed. 379; Hodgson v. Warden, 2 Dowl. & L. 232; 1 Wms. Saunds. 6th ed. 9, a.)

Lastly, where a deed, at the time of execution, has blanks in it which are subsequently filled up by the party taking under the deed, or by a third person, in this case, if the blanks are such that the instrument, when executed, is incapable of having any operation, and is in fact no deed, it cannot afterwards become operative in consequence of being completed and delivered by a stranger in the absence of the party who executed it, and without an express authority under seal. (Hibblewhite v. M'Morine, 6 M. & W. 200, overruling Texira v. Evans, cited 1 Anstr. 228; and see the cases cited and distinguished per Parke, P. delivering judgment, 6 M. & W. 215.)

THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF PROCEEDING AGAINST A TRADER-DEBTOR

CHAP. III.

GENERAL REMARKS.

18. The provisions of this section of the statute afford creditors a very easy and expeditious way of either forcing their debtors to a settlement of their debts, or, in default of their so doing, of issuing a fiat against them, founded upon the act of bankruptcy created by this statute. This provision appears to have been substituted for that contained in the old Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 5, which enacted that traders subject to its provisions had committed an act of bankruptcy by lying in prison upon mesne process for the space of twenty-one days. Arrest upon mesne process, however, having been abolished generally by the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, the act of bankruptcy contained in the 8th section of the latter statute was created, in lieu of that in the old Bankruptcy Act. But however advantageous to the interests of the creditor its provisions have proved, it cannot be denied that they press with an undue severity upon the unfortunate debtor; for, supposing that the debt claimed was really due, what possible benefit could be gained by involving his sureties in a bond of so general and indefinite a character as that pointed out by the statute? Indeed, a debtor must be possessed of friends more than usually sincere if he could find two persons willing, on his account, to bind themselves to pay the amount of any debt for which judgment might be at any time obtained, in any action which might at any time thereafter be brought against him. This is, indeed, a bond, the obligations of which may possibly never be at an end! On the other hand, if the creditor had not in reality a valid claim upon his debtor, he would scarcely venture to issue a fiat which must, in such a case, be eventually superseded. The practice, however, has shewn that, in some instances, unfortunate traders have been declared bankrupts under this statute upon a claim of debt altogether unfounded, either through their unwillingness or inability to involve their friends in such an extensive obligation as the bond required. The provisions of this section, although they are not repealed, and still continue in full force, should a creditor choose to avail himself of them, are almost entirely superseded in practice by those contained in the New Bankruptcy Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 122), the law and practice under which will be fully treated of in the second part of this work.

PART II.

Under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, ss. 11 to 20.

STATUTE.

19. If any creditor of any trader within the meaning of this or any other statute relating to bankrupts, now or hereafter to be in force, shall file an affidavit in the court, authorized, as hereinafter provided, to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the district [to be described as hereinafter mentioned] in which such debtor shall reside, or in the Court of Bankruptcy, if such debtor shall not reside in any such district, in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed (A, No. 1). of the truth of his debt, and of the debtor, as he verily believes, being such trader as aforesaid, and of the delivery to such trader, personally, of an account in writing of the particulars of his demand, with a notice thereunder requiring immediate payment thereof, in the form specified in the schedule (A, No. 2), it shall be lawful for the Court in which such affidavit shall be filed, as the case may be, to issue a summons in writing, in the form specified in the said schedule (A, No. 3) calling upon such trader to appear before such Court, and stating in such summons the purpose for which such trader is called upon by such summons to appear, as hereinafter provided. (5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 11.)

WHAT TRADERS ARE LIABLE.

20. The first step to be taken by the creditor in proceeding against his debtor under this statute is to satisfy himself that such debtor is a trader subject to the bankrupt laws. By 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 2, it is enacted, "That all bankers, brokers, and persons using the trade or profession of a scrivener, receiving other men's moneys or estates into their trust or custody, and persons insuring ships or their freight, or other matters, against perils of the sea; warehousemen, wharfingers, packers, builders, carpenters, shipwrights, victuallers, keepers of inns, taverns, hotels, or coffee-houses; dyers, printers, bleachers, fullers, calenderers, cattle or sheep salesmen, and all persons using the trade of merchandize by way of bargaining, exchange, bartering, 'commission, consignment,' or otherwise, in gross or retail, and all persons who, either by themselves or as agents or factors for others, seek their living by buying and selling, or by buying and letting for hire, or by the workmanship of goods or commodities, shall be deemed traders liable to become bankrupt, provided that no farmer, grazier, common labourer, or workman for hire, receiver-general of the taxes, or member of, or subscriber to, any incorporated commercial or trading companies established by charter or Act of Parliament, shall be deemed, as such trader, liable by virtue of this Act to become bankrupt."

And in addition to the traders made liable to the bankrupt laws by the above statute, it is enacted by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 10, "That all livery-stable keepers, coach proprietors, carriers, shipowners, auctioneers, apothecaries, market-gardeners, cow-keepers, brickmakers, alum-makers, lime-burners, and millers, shall be deemed traders, and liable as traders to this and the other statutes relating to bankrupts."

For the numerous decisions on this subject, the reader is referred to Montagu & Ayrton's Bankruptcy, 2nd ed. 1—17; and Archbold's Bankruptcy, by Flather, 10th ed. 45—56.

CHAPTER II.

THE PARTICULARS OF DEMAND AND NOTICE REQUIRING PAYMENT.

21. If the debtor fall within either of the classes of traders referred to above, the creditor's next step is to make out and deliver to such trader personally an account in writing of the particulars of his demand, with a notice thereunder, requiring immediate payment thereof.

PARTICULARS OF DEMAND.

22. By General Rules and Orders, Nov. 12, 1842, rule 20, it is ordered, that "the particulars of demand and notice, under the aforesaid Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 122), shall, in cases where the debt demanded is claimed to be due to a partnership firm, be signed by or in the name of one of the partners on behalf of himself and partner or partners, adding, after such signature, the style or firm of partnership and place of business as follows; that is to say, 'John Thompson, for self and partners, trading under the style or firm of , at , in the county of and in cases where the debt demanded is claimed be due to any one person, or to two or more persons not being partners in trade, such particulars of demand and notice shall be signed by or in the name of every such person by his Christian and surname, and his or their residence or place of business as follows; that is to say, 'Edward Jones, residing at , in the county of .'"

By General Rules and Orders, Nov. 12, 1842, rule 21, it is ordered, that "such particulars and notice shall be directed to the party or parties intended to be summoned, by the Christian and surname of each of them (or when the Christian name is not known, then by the initial letter or letters or by some contraction of the Christian name and by the surname), and also by the place of residence, in the same form as mentioned in the last rule, and shall also contain in the body thereof a statement of the name or names of all the persons from whom the debt is claimed to be due, whether the whole of them shall be summoned or not, or (in the case of partners) the style or firm of partnership and place of business, in the same form as mentioned in the same rule." And by General Rules and Orders, Nov. 12, 1842, rule 22, it is ordered, that "the account in such particulars of demand shall be expressed with reasonable and convenient certainty, as to dates and all other matters, and where credit is given in such account to the debtor, the notice shall require payment of the difference or balance only which appears to be due on such account."

To E F, of .

The following are the particulars of the demand of the undersigned A B, of , against you, the said E F, amounting to the sum of pounds [here copy the account].

Take notice that I, the said A B, hereby require immediate payment of the said sum of pounds Dated this day of , in the year of our Lord .

(Signed) A B.

The particulars of demand are the account as it stands between the parties, but they need not set out all the items of the account separately, with dates to each item. In Ex parte Serle, the particulars of demand were in the following form:—

April	. To goods delivered as per monthly account . .
May	. To goods
June	. To goods

On the traders appearing to the summons, they were objected to as not being sufficient, but the commissioner (Fane) held that they were sufficient. He said, "The account states, 'To goods delivered as per monthly account;' you have had that account, and must know what the goods were." (5 Law T. 153.)

CHAPTER III.

THE AFFIDAVIT AND SUMMONS.

23. The creditor having served his debtor with the particulars of his demand and notice requiring payment, he must next file an affidavit in the District Court of Bankruptcy, in which his debtor resides, or in the Court of Bankruptcy, if the debtor does not reside within the jurisdiction of any district court, of the truth of his debt, and of his debtor, as he verily believes, being such trader as aforesaid, and of the delivery to such trader personally, of an account in writing of the particulars of his demand, with a notice thereunder requiring immediate payment thereof, in the form specified in the schedule 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 11.—(Vide suprà.)

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Wharton Barony.—The following is a verbatim report of the Committee of Privileges as to the case established on behalf of the claimants to the Wharton barony, which was decided upon and presented on Thursday evening to the House of Lords by the noble chairman, the Earl of Shaftesbury:—"Resolved, that the barony of Wharton is a barony created by writ and sitting, on the 26th of November, 2 Edw. 6, in the year 1548, and is descendable to heirs-general; that upon the death of Philip James, the sixth Lord Wharton, in 1731, without issue, the said barony fell into abeyance between his two sisters and co-heirs, Lady Jane Coke and Lady Lucy Morrice; that Lady Lucy Morrice died without issue in the year 1739, eight years after her brother; that upon the death of Lady Jane Coke (who survived her sister) without issue, in 1761 (30 years after her brother), the said barony fell into abeyance between the descendants of the three daughters of Philip, fourth Lord Wharton, Elizabeth, Mary, and Philadelphia Wharton; that the petitioner, Charles Kemeys Kemeys Tynte, is one of the co-heirs of the said barony, as being descended from, and sole heir of, Mary, one of the said daughters of Philip, fourth Lord Wharton; that the petitioner, Alexander Dundas Ross Cochrane Wishart Baillie, with Mrs. Matilda Anpore, are two other of the co-heirs of the said barony, as being descended from Philadelphia, the youngest daughter of Philip, the fourth Lord Wharton; that the Right Hon. Peter Roberts Lord Willoughby D'Eresby and the Most Noble George Horatio, Marquis of Cholmondeley, are two other of the co-heirs of the said barony, as being descended from Elizabeth, only daughter of the said Philip, fourth Lord Wharton, by his first marriage; and, consequently, that the said barony is now in abeyance between the said petitioners and the said noble lords."

The Law of France.—Another decision, upon the principle that locus regit actum, has been delivered by the tribunals of Paris in the following case:—Mr. Quartin, an English subject, has lived long at Lisbon, but Mr. Dillon Quartin, one of his sons, residing for many years at Paris, succeeded to the property of one of his aunts, and thereupon undertook the bringing up of two of his sisters, whom he placed in the convent of the Rue Pictus. Mr. Dillon Quartin died in Abyssinia, while on a scientific tour in that country, leaving a will, made at Paris on the 31st of January, 1839, in his own handwriting, and signed, but without being attested by any witnesses. Thereby he bequeathed one-half of his property to his two sisters in Paris, and the other half to his father and mother for their lives, and after their deaths to be divided between his brother and another sister. One of the sisters living in Paris also died after her brother Dillon, leaving by her will, also written with her own hand, and signed, but unattested, all her effects to her sister, then with her in the convent of the Rue Pictus. Mr. Quartin, however, claimed the whole of his deceased son's property, on the ground that he [was] an Englishman, and that, according to the English law, his will was invalid for the want of two witnesses; and he also claimed the guardianship of his daughter, she being only 19, and consequently under age. The case was, in the first instance, heard before the Civil Tribunal of Paris, which decided, upon the above-mentioned principle, that the will was valid, and, as Miss Quartin was to be educated in Paris, granted the administration of the property left by her brother to the surviving Miss Quartin to M. Morel d'Arleux, notary, until she should come of full age, and left that part which was bequeathed to her by her deceased sister in the hands of M. Rivain, an advocate, who was nominated her testamentary executor. Against this decision Mr. Quartin, the father, presented to the Cour Royale an appeal, which was heard on Monday last, and was very ably supported by M. Charles Ledru, as counsel for the father, who urged that, independently of English law, which he maintained ought in this case to prevail, the decision of the Civil Tribunal de Première Instance confined Miss Quartin to the convent of the Rue Pictus, although she had a parent able and willing to take the charge of her, and she was desirous of being under his protection, as was shewn by her appearing with him in the court. The Court, however, after deliberation, confirmed the judgment of the Tribunal de Première Instance, and upon the same grounds.—Galignani's Messenger.

Will of the late Mrs. Round.—Special letters of administration with the will annexed of Mrs. Susan Constantia Round, of Danbury Park, Chelmsford, wife of John Round, esq. M.P. (who lost her life in the recent fire in Dover-street, Piccadilly), have been granted to her husband, and her three sons, John Round, Frederic Peel Round, and Edmund Round, esqrs. the executors named in the will, which was made in August, 1843, and is of some length, containing many recitals. Amongst others, it recites that her mother, the late Mrs. Caswall, by power of appointment vested in her over a moiety of 104,000*l.* stock, left to her (Mrs. Round) 22,000*l.* and that she was also entitled to one-fourth of the residue under her late father's will, making together upwards of 50,000*l.*, which sums were invested in the names of trustees under her marriage settlement; also recites that by a deed executed by herself and husband, in 1840, the survivor is to receive the interest for life, and the principal on the death of the survivor is to be divided amongst their four children, as apportioned by them in the deed, the eldest son taking the residue of the trust moneys, as well as some freehold estates. The dispositions are confirmed by her will. The husband is entitled to the personal estate.

The Result of the Excise Prosecution of Messrs. Smith, the Distillers.—This pending case, which has occupied so much of public attention, in consequence of the immense interests involved, has at length been brought to a close. Several communications have passed between the law officers of the Crown and the Excise authorities, and numerous interviews have taken place. It appears that Messrs. Smith have paid into the hands of Mr. Goodall, chief collector of the Eastern division of the Excise department, the sum of 10,000*l.* with an understanding that all prosecutions pending on either side are to be withdrawn. Messrs. Smith, by their petition to the Lords of the Treasury, prayed their working implements and stock in trade may be restored to them, and that they will entirely remove or discontinue the use of the rectifying house, the primary cause of the prosecution. The settlement of this question is received with great satisfaction by a large body of persons, whose occupation has been suspended for a period of nearly twelve months, as well as entailing an almost ruinous loss upon the proprietors by the complete stoppage of their business.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. COUNSELLOR BIRD AND HIS POOR CLIENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I observe in your last week's paper an article headed "The Bar and the Attorneys," but I very much differ from you where you say (in the beginning of the article) that you are entirely convinced that Mr. Bird is actuated by no mercenary motives. I am at a loss how you can arrive at that conclusion, when Mr. Bird receives his fee however poor his client;—What are these but mercenary motives?

I will give you an instance of Mr. Bird's charity to the poor. In March 1845, the friends of four paupers applied to me to defend them on a charge of poaching; I accordingly prepared a brief for them, for which they paid me 2*l.* out of which sum I gave Mr. Bird one guinea with the brief, paid for a copy of the depositions, and the postage of the brief to Exeter. I wrote Mr. Bird with the brief, desiring him to defend them; he wrote to me in reply, saying that he could defend but two out of the four for the guinea sent, and desiring me to send him another guinea or inform him which two he should defend. I wrote him in reply, saying that the prisoners' relatives were very poor, and could not raise another shilling, and that I had prepared the brief for them almost for nothing, and telling him which two to defend. Now, if Mr. Bird had such charity towards the poor as he would wish the world to believe, he would, after receiving my letter, have defended the four; but no, "No fee, no defence;" and he only defended two.

I deny Mr. Bird's assertion when he says that if an attorney is asked what a defence will cost, the parties are told from 5*l.* to 10*l.* A guinea is the usual charge for a brief to poor prisoners, and I am certain that the attorneys possess as much charity as Mr. Bird—nay more for any respectable attorney would readily prepare a brief gratis for the poor, if applied to; but it appears from Mr. Bird's own statement that he does not take a brief without his guinea; so much for Mr. Bird's charity to the poor.

Mr. Bird may rest assured that no attorney will in future trouble him with a brief. We may expect shortly to see Mr. Bird in court surrounded with the friends of his poor clients; it is very fortunate that the space round the table has been enlarged. Has Mr. Bird been instrumental in getting this done for the purpose of accommodating them?

I perfectly agree with you in what you say in the latter part of the article in question, and

I am, &c.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1845.

THE BAR AND THE PRESS.

A RESOLUTION of two circuits, the Oxford and the Western, condemnatory of the practice of reporting for the newspapers by the members of the circuit the proceedings of the circuit, has called forth from the journals a torrent of angry eloquence in reprobation of the resolution in question, and an attempt at retaliation by a formal and avowed omission of the names of the counsel engaged in the business reported from those two circuits.

An open war such as this is greatly to be regretted; it cannot but be inconvenient and disagreeable to both parties. But one of the belligerents only has yet been heard: the press has not been slow to vindicate its insulted dignity, and to put its own case in its best form before the public, whose ear it commands. The other party in the quarrel, wanting such an advantage, has been condemned unheard. It will be our duty, as the journal of the Profession, to submit their case calmly and fairly to the judgments of those who are just enough to hear both sides. We do so without expressing, because we really cannot arrive at, a decided opinion upon the question at issue; but we will shortly state the case of the Circuit Bar, and the reasons that seemed to influence the resolution that has lighted up such a flame.

In the first place, we must assert that the resolution was the result of feelings and arguments altogether different from those assumed by the newspapers, and upon which assumption their anger is based. It was not at all a question of dignity; the practice was not objected to as degrading; it was not treated as an unworthy occupation in a barrister to report for a newspaper. Had the resolution proceeded from any such feelings, or if it had been supported by any such arguments, it would have deserved the reprobation that has been lavished upon it. Yet have the newspapers chosen to assume that such was its purport, and they have treated a regulation, founded, as we shall presently shew, upon experience of particular inconveniences arising under special circumstances, as a resolution aimed against the newspaper press as being a connection derogatory to the Barrister.

The best proof that can be afforded of the error into which the editors of the newspapers have fallen in their comments upon the occurrence is, that the resolution does not affect reporting for a newspaper anywhere and at all times, but is expressly limited to circuit reporting. No objection is offered to a barrister reporting for a newspaper at Westminster, whether in Banc or Nisi Prius, nor to parliamentary or other reporting of any kind. It is distinctly limited to circuit reporting.

There are manifest reasons for this, without at all raising the question of infra dig., which forms no part of the real objections offered. The Circuit Bar is a small social community, governed by certain traditionary laws of professional etiquette, which experience has proved to conduce to the ultimate comfort and advantage of all its members. To preserve the mutual good-feeling and harmony of the Bar of the circuit, a mess is established at which the members meet, where they conduct the private affairs of the circuit, and exchange personal kindliness and good-will. The mess is not exclusive in any shape; it is practically open to all who join the circuit, without respect of fortune or birth. By joining that mess a barrister virtually consents to abide by the regulations of the body with whom he is associated, in all matters deemed desirable by the majority for the regulation of the circuit. It is only when a man wilfully violates his implied pledge, or does something disgraceful to him as a barrister or as a gentleman, that he is, in the last resort, excluded from the mess, and as a consequence, from the society of his fellows upon the circuit.

The end and aim of this machinery is the preservation of a good understanding between those who are unavoidably thrown together so much, that not to be friendly would be a source of endless disquietude to themselves and inconvenience to their clients; and all will admit that an object so desirable should not be lightly sacrificed.

Now the single design of the resolution in question was the preservation of this important object. It had been found in practice that the reporting for the newspapers by members of the circuit had led to very great inconveniences, by breeding discords and disturbing the harmony of the circuit. It was deemed that, from the nature of things, no other result could be hoped for, and, as the least of two evils, it was considered desirable rather to declare the practice of reporting for the circuit an undesirable one for its members to follow, than that the peace, harmony, and good-feeling of the circuit should be disturbed for that which, after all, was not a necessary evil, inasmuch as such reports might be done equally well by others without producing the mischiefs complained of. The question was simply this—Is it desirable or right that, for the sake of some small gain by two men, at the most, on each circuit, the harmony of the whole circuit should be disturbed?

The argument was after this fashion:—

Newspaper reports, unlike law reports, are addressed to the whole public; consequently, they must be made to amuse. The facts only are required to be stated, and to be put in the most attractive form. This is work that may be as well or better done by an ordinary reporter, therefore there is no necessity nor special advantage in its being done by a barrister.

But if no advantage result, there is much palpable evil. The reporter is not dealing with strangers, but with his friends, associates, and professional rivals. Even if he were to be as just as ARISTIDES, he could not, in such a duty, escape reproach and suspicion. His business is to select cases for report that are likely to interest the public; he must exercise a discretion; he cannot report all; he must reject some. As every man attaches an exaggerated importance to his own case, all the rejected complain; they feel or fancy motives of rivalry, jealousy, or spite. They see some cases, trifling in themselves, filling half a column, while others they deem of more importance are dismissed in a sentence. It is natural to attribute this to the names of the counsel or attorneys engaged in them rather than to the relative merits of the cases themselves. Hence heart-burnings, jealousies, and disputes that disturb the harmony of the circuit. Let the reporter be ever so fair and faithful, so long as he has a choice to exercise, he will be suspected of partiality. It must be admitted on all hands that there is probability in this argument, and experience has proved its truth. The question for the members of the circuits was, therefore, how they should deal with it.

The newspapers have proposed that their reporters should send in their names to the mess, and so make themselves personally responsible for their reports, for the fairness of which some guarantee would thus be given. For our own part, we are inclined to prefer this suggestion to the larger resolution that has been adopted. But it would not have answered the end of the proposers, for we believe the effect would be to deter any man from taking upon himself avowedly, and with open responsibility, an office so invidious, in which no virtue could save him from reproach. The question, then, remains, is it worth while to have members of the Circuit placed in such invidious positions, subjected to such suspicions, and producing unavoidably such ill-feeling, for the sake of having that done by a barrister which might be done equally well by a penny-a-liner?

This, and nothing more than this, was the question decided by the resolution which has so agitated the press. The best proof that the evil was not imaginary was afforded by the conduct of the Times in suppressing the name of Mr. Serjeant TALFOURD. We put it to all our readers, whether it would be possible to maintain the harmony of any circuit where one of its members stood in the position of appearing to be guilty of such an indignity to another distinguished member of his circuit, with whom he was sitting daily at the same table; or if, in truth, it was no act of his, being compelled to submit as reporter to become responsible for the mutilations of his reports dictated by the vengeance or favouritism of a distant editor. The possibility of being placed in such a position would of itself deter any gentleman from openly undertaking an office liable to such indignities; and even the Herald and the Chronicle do not vindicate unavowed reporting, but propose that the names of the reporters should be given to the mess, that they may be responsible for what they do or leave undone.

Such is the argument by which the resolution of the Oxford and Western Circuits is supported. It is, we repeat, entirely unconnected with objections arising from notions of "dignity," as supposed by our newspaper contemporaries. It is applicable to circuit reports only, and supported on special grounds of circuit convenience alone, and in this light we hope it will be treated by those who have hitherto viewed it only on the assumption that it was a general objection to Barristers reporting for the press. No such monstrous proposition was ever made or contemplated.

Nor does it extend to reports of points of law for legal publications. They were of course deemed the peculiar and appropriate province of the barrister.

In conclusion, we call upon our contemporaries, in fairness to the Profession, to give a place to this reply, and so enable the public to hear both sides; especially as they have been written under a misunderstanding both of the resolution itself and the reasons by which it was supported.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE PUNISHMENT OF FRAUDULENT DEBTORS.

A CASE reported in the Bankruptcy Court, and a letter from a correspondent, whose respectability is a guarantee for accuracy, have, we must confess, not a little surprised us.

When the society was first formed, in pursuance of a suggestion in the LAW TIMES, we not only expressed approval of the plan, but our Publisher joined it, intending to avail himself of it for the investigation of some of the multitudinous frauds that have been practised upon him both in town and country. We then considered that the society was to be fairly, openly, and properly worked, as societies are usually, by a numerous committee, a treasurer, and a secretary, with accounts duly rendered, examined, and paid, and no business done on the part of the society without previous investigation and authority to that end formally given by the committee.

We are loath to believe all we hear; but if our correspondent be right, and our reporter has not erred, the society is not thus regularly conducted; it seems to be in reality no society at all, but a job, else what means the following printed circular, which has been placed in our hands?—

Re GEORGE RYE.

SIR,—Should you wish to oppose in the above matter as a non-subscriber, and will forward me an authority for our solicitors to act, together with a post-office order for one guinea, I will return you a receipt in full discharge of all further costs, and every attention shall be given to your interest.

I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,
JAS. M. CONSTABLE, Secretary.
To Mr. Bateman, Canterbury, Kent.

However, as is our practice in all matters of this sort, we will not prejudge. We state candidly what is the accusation. We wait patiently the explanation that must be given as to the system of management by which the affairs of the society are conducted, otherwise we shall feel it our duty to institute the strictest inquiry into the whole affair for the protection alike of the Profession and of the public.

THE BAR AND THE ATTORNEYS.

WE had intended to make some further comment on the occurrence reported from Exeter in the last LAW TIMES, but the question of more immediate moment that has arisen between the Bar and the Press, compels us to postpone the purposed inquiry into the allegations of Mr. BIRD, and the propriety of the course he has adopted.

THE CRITIC.

A Manual of Equity Jurisprudence, as administered in England, founded on the Commentaries of Joseph Story, LL.D. &c. By JOSIAH W. SMITH, B.C.L. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. London, 1845. Stevens and Norton.

THIS volume is, in fact, an abridgment of STORY'S famous Equity Jurisprudence, with the addition of a few original remarks, and notes of some of the more recent decisions. Indeed, the author avows as much in his preface, and therefore we do not state it by way of blame or objection. On the contrary, a judicious abridgment of a large and learned book is very preferable to an original treatise by an inferior author, and Mr. SMITH has done wisely in thus mounting upon the back of Mr. Justice STORY, and riding to fame upon his shoulders, in preference to trusting to his own feet.

The uses of such an abridgment are twofold. First, before the perusal of the treatise in its bulk, by way of bringing its scope and design within the reader's purview, and enabling him to understand the bearings and tendency of every page when he shall proceed to the study of the complete work; secondly, by way of refresher, after the original treatise has been mastered, to revive its more important contents, and to impress more forcibly upon the mind the principles developed and the more memorable cases and arguments presented. Mr. SMITH'S volume serves both of these purposes. He has made the abridgment of his great original with sound judgment, rarely failing to convey in few words the principle sought to be propounded; and, further to aid the reader, reference is given to the authority at the close of each paragraph.

Of course such a work is not one for elaborate review. STORY must be known by repute to all, by perusal to most, of our readers. They who know his worth will welcome a manual that will refresh their memories without the toil of reading anew his 1600 pages. To those who have not yet read him we recommend this volume as the best introduction —but in aid only, and not as a substitute.

NECROLOGY.

VISCOUNT CANTERBURY.

IT is with regret we have to announce the death of Viscount Canterbury, who expired on Monday, the 21st ult. at twenty-five minutes after three in the afternoon, at the Hon. Henry Manners Sutton's residence in Southwick-crescent, Hyde-park. The immediate cause of death was apoplexy, and after the attack he experienced on the Great Western Railway in coming to town from Devonshire, he lost all power of speech and consciousness up to the moment of his death.

The Hon. Henry Manners Sutton, the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, and Mr. Sanderson, M.P. and the Hon. Mrs. Sanderson, were the only relatives with his lordship at his dissolution. An express was forwarded as early as possible after the noble viscount's arrival at his son's house, to Viscountess Canterbury and family, who are at Rockbeare House, near Exeter, and another was sent to the Hon. Charles John Manners Sutton to Paris, in which capital the hon. gentleman has been residing for some time past.

The deceased Charles Manners Sutton, Viscount Canterbury, of the city of Canterbury, and Baron Bottesford, in the county of Leicester, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, was eldest son of Charles Manners Sutton, the late Archbishop of Canterbury. He was born the 29th January, 1780, and was therefore in his 66th year. His lordship was twice married, namely, first, the 8th of July, 1811, to Charlotte, eldest daughter of John Dennison; and, secondly, 6th December, 1828, to Ellen, daughter of Mr. Edmund Power, relict of Mr. John Hume Purvis. By his first marriage he leaves issue the Hon. Charles John Manners Sutton (now Viscount Canterbury), Registrar of the Faculty-office, born the 17th of April, 1812; the Hon. Henry Manners Sutton, M.P. Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, born the 27th of May, 1814; and the Hon. Charlotte Matilda, born the 27th of May, 1814, and married to Mr. Richard Sanderson, M.P. By his second alliance he leaves an only daughter, the Hon. Frances Diana, born the 17th of December, 1829. The present Viscountess Canterbury is sister of the Countess of Blessington.

The late Viscount was Speaker of the House of Commons from 1817 to 1834. In 1834 his re-election was opposed by Mr. Abercromby (now Lord Dunfermline), being brought forward by the Whig party, and after one of the largest divisions on record the numbers were, for Mr. Abercromby, 316; Sir Charles Manners Sutton, 306.

Immediately after his defeat for the Speaker's chair, he was appointed by William IV. to perform the important and delicate office of commissioner for adjusting the claims of Canada; but, owing to the impaired health of his lady, he was compelled to resign.

The deceased was elevated to the peerage, by being created a Viscount of the United Kingdom, in 1835. He was a Civil Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, a Governor of the Charterhouse, and a Commissioner of the Land-tax and for building Churches. His lordship enjoyed a pension of 4,000*l*. a year, which is continued to his successor.

JOHN ADOLPHUS, ESQ.

JOHN ADOLPHUS was born, we believe, in London, in the year 1764 or 1765. His father, who was a German Jew, had been attached to the household of the Great Frederick, in a chirurgical capacity, but left, as a far greater and abler man, Voltaire, had done, if not in disgrace, at least in dudgeon. No ruffian sbirri followed the elder Adolphus to claim "le livre de Poëshée du Roi mon maître," (a) and he settled down in quiet practice in London. Of the early history and school-boy days of John Adolphus, the subject of this sketch, nothing is known. The irregularities, however, of Adolphus's early life induced his father to avail himself of an eligible offer made by a great West India proprietor, and the young stripling, then in his sixteenth year, proceeded, in 1780, as factor or attorney to St. Christopher's. Towards the end of 1781 or the beginning of 1782 he returned to England. For some time he led an inactive and purposeless life, but after a while entered an attorney's office, where he was regularly articled in 1783. In 1790 he was admitted an attorney and solicitor. In 1792 and 1793 he was remarkable as a regular attendant at the spouting clubs, both in the west end and eastward of Temple Bar, and in a very short time, having a natural aptitude for speaking, distinguished himself by his readiness and fluency. In 1793 he married Miss Leycester, of White-place, Berks, with whom he obtained some considerable fortune. Antecedently to his marriage he had engaged in literary pursuits, and subsequent thereto continued to assist Archdeacon Coxe in preparing for the press the Memoirs of Sir Robert Walpole. It may not be amiss to state here, that his acquaintance with the archdeacon soon ripened into friendship—a friendship which uninterruptedly and harmoniously endured till it was severed by the death of one of the parties. Coxe had his faults, and among the most prominent was prolixity; but, to the credit of Adolphus be it spoken, to the day of his death he defended the memory and the literary labours of his friend the archdeacon, if not with a discreet, at least with a courageous and commendable zeal. In 1799 the subject of this sketch published Biographical Memoirs of the French Revolution, a work written here and there with strength, freshness, and spirit, but occasionally exaggerated in the tone, and far too vehement and one-sided to be considered a safe or impartial guide. But these are imperfections incident to all ephemeral party publications; and the very vices that disentitle Adolphus to credit as an historian, exalt him as a pamphleteer and a partisan. This was followed in the same year by The British Cabinet, or Portraits of Illustrious Persons, with Memoirs, a work written for the booksellers, and every way unworthy of the powers and talents of the man. But the best books are not always the most successful, and this inferior production met with a ready sale, and was published in a second edition in 1805. The party pamphleteer now essayed a bolder flight, and soared into the dominion of history. His History of England, from the Accession of George III. to the Peace of 1783, appeared in three volumes in 1802. Though this work is written in a narrow and party spirit, though its tone is occasionally arrogant, offensive, and dogmatical, yet the narrative is neat, lucid, and flowing.

In the following year, 1803, Adolphus published his History of France from 1790 to 1802, a work pronounced by so competent a judge as the late Lord Malmesbury, both as to facts and motives, singularly accurate. In compiling this work Mr. Adolphus, it is understood, had access to the chancery of more than one foreign embassy. The fame of Adolphus as a party pamphleteer and general author, was now wide spread and general. As a public speaker he had also distinguished himself both at Merchant Tailors'-hall, the British Forum, and the Eccentrics; and he was also understood to be no infrequent contributor to the periodical literature of the day. This renown, such as it was, procured him that species of business in his profession which perhaps he most desired, election business. He was engaged in more than one Westminster election, and also in "the great Middlesex election" case, in all of which he exhibited a tact, readiness, and aptness, oftener sought than found. Conscious, like all able men, of his own powers, he resolved to quit the subordinate branch of the profession, and to enter on a forensic career. With this view he entered himself of the Inner Temple in 1802 or 1803, and was called to the bar on the 20th November, 1807. He immediately commenced attendance at the Old Bailey; but though the court was not so hermetically sealed as it is now —though jobbing, and hugging, and humbug were by no means so rife—though the new aspirant had had the advantage of being in a subordinate branch of the profession—yet it was some time before Mr. Adolphus obtained business. At the Kent sessions he was more successful. Though known, however, for years as a ready, adroit, and capable man, it was not until April 1820, being then of thirteen years standing at the bar, and in the 55th year of his age, that he came before the public in the character of leading counsel for Arthur Thistlewood, and labouring under every disadvantage of a want of preparation, aggravated by the want of means of the prisoner, and the general horror with which his crime was regarded—he yet, without elaborate preparation, and sinking from bodily fatigue and the want of sleep, made as artful, as acute, and as ingenious a defence for the unhappy man as ever was heard in a court of justice. This speech, which may be found in the 33rd volume of Cobbett's State Trials, is distinguished, more especially in the opening part, by all that chaste felicity of diction for which Adolphus was always celebrated, and of which he was one of the first masters. It is well known that he sat up the whole of the night to prepare this speech, but, considering the mass of evidence he had to wade through, the effort is an extraordinary one. The speeches in defence of Ings, Brunt, Davidson, and Tidd, completed the measure of his fame, and from this moment he was regarded as a man combining all the superior qualities of Bearcroft, Garrow, and Gurney, with excellences peculiarly his own. In the following year, 1821, a competitor, in every way worthy of him, appeared at the Old Bailey—Mr. Charles Phillips—and these two men, with Mr. Brodrick and Mr. Curwood, may be said to have centred in their persons the eloquence, the astuteness, tact, and professional learning of the Old Bailey Bar. For nearly twenty-two years Adolphus and Phillips were rivals; and though the excellences and merits of each were of a nature wholly distinct, yet it may be fairly said that all the mental power and energy of the Old Bailey were divided between them.

Adolphus was a man of acute and apprehensive, rather than of great or powerful faculties, but his capacity was clear, if not of the greatest comprehension, or of the highest order; and when he put forth his faculties strenuously he was often a powerful, and, generally, a formidable opponent. He was always clear without effort; and his idiom, purely and unaffectedly English, was never chargeable with a false or vicious taste. His attention was ever wakeful to the case before him; and whether in examination or cross-examination, no man was more "cunning of fence." His voice was clear, mellow, and flexible, though not of much compass; he had neither fancy nor imagination, nor were his argumentative powers of the highest order; but the clearness of his statements, the happy disposition of his topics, and the felicity of his epithets, were the objects alike of wonder and of hopeless imitation.

But though not gifted with the very highest powers of mind, he ran as close to the wind in his deductions as any man of his day. No man had a quicker or surer perception of a point, or pursued it with a keener scent of the game to be run down. He had a thorough knowledge of men, and had mixed with persons of all ranks and conditions. His reading was very varied and discursive—running into the drama, history, French memoirs, facetiæ, the last French novel, German theology, Scotch metaphysics, and the philosophy of Kant and Schelling; but withal, his understanding was purely and entirely legal, though he had never made himself a profound lawyer. But in sessions and parish law, and in the law of evidence, he was as apt and ready as any man of his time. He made no blunders, and he left no advantages unimproved. An erroneous idea has spread abroad that he was a man of a coarse and rugged nature. Nothing can be farther from the truth. He had to deal with men of coarse and brutal manners; and an eager, excitable nature, and a warm temper, often led him to retort in the strain in which he had been attacked; but treat him as a gentleman, and no man was more courteous or kindly in his practice.—Morning Chronicle.

WILKINSON v. HORWOOD.

Guardianship of a person of full age and weak understanding, but whose mental imbecility does not render her a fit object for a commission of lunacy—Marriage of a ward of court—Nullity of marriage.

In 1838 a commission of lunacy was issued against the plaintiff, Miss Wilkinson, but it being obvious that, though of weak mind, she was not insane, that commission was not prosecuted; but in August of that year, she being then more than twenty-one years of age, a bill was filed with the permission of Lord Chancellor Cottenham, for the purpose of making her a ward of court. By an order in this suit, her father and three other persons were appointed her guardians, and she had ever since resided with a lady of the name of Revell, at Sudbury, in which town her father lived. Her fortune consisted only of a sum of 3,000*l.* Three-and-a-Half per Cents, and 1,200*l.* Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents stock. In May last, Miss Wilkinson being at Blackheath, at the house of the Rev. Mr. Penn, one of the guardians, her cousin, Watts Wilkinson, a young man of no property and a sailor, under pretence of taking her to visit an aunt at Hoxton, persuaded her to consent to a ceremony of marriage at Stepney Church. There was much hesitation on her part in making the responses during the ceremony, and, on going into the vestry to sign the register, she positively refused, saying, "that it was all a mistake; that she did not mean to be married; that she came out only to take a walk with her cousin, and that her papa would be very angry." She was, however, ultimately induced to sign the register, but on leaving the church she insisted on being taken to her aunt's, and Watts Wilkinson having removed the ring from her finger, then sent her home in a cab. He was so poor that he had not money sufficient to pay for the cab, and was a person of no property or expectations, his father being a curate with no property and a large family. Miss Wilkinson told her aunt all that had occurred, and she then stated, and still continued to affirm, that she had no intention of being married and did not wish to be married. The lady had ever since remained with her friends, and a suit had been instituted in the Ecclesiastical Court for a declaration of nullity of the marriage.

Anderdon and Freeling supported a petition by the guardians, praying the sanction of the Court for the continuance of the proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court, to protect her person and property pending that suit, and to reserve all further consideration of the petition until after the determination of the Ecclesiastical Court. They read affidavits detailing the facts. Watts Wilkinson did not appear.

Parsons, for the trustees of her fortune.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The prayer of the petition must be granted. I hope care will be taken to prevent all communication between this lady and the person who thus claims to be her husband.

MARISH v. PRICE.

Taxation of costs—Moving for a new trial—Allowance of copies of short-hand writer's notes for counsel—Judge's and counsel's notes—Duty of counsel—Practice.

On motion for the new trial of an issue, the judge's notes and the notes of the counsel engaged upon the trial of the issue, form the materials upon which the determination of the Court, as to the granting or refusing a new trial, will be grounded; and copies of short-hand writer's notes for the use of counsel will not usually be allowed on the taxation of costs between party and party. In particular cases, however, such copies have been allowed upon motions for new trials at law, being a question of discretion in each case; and the practice of this Court upon the point will be made conformable to the practice at law.

In this cause it was moved, on the behalf of the plaintiffs, to discharge an order of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, which had disallowed the sum of 90*l.* for brief copies of the short-hand writer's notes of the judge's charge and of the evidence, on the trial of an issue in Glamorganshire. The question between the parties relates to their respective rights in certain mines in Glamorganshire. The plaintiffs were lessees of the coal under certain lands, and the defendants were lessees of the ironstone under the same lands; and the present bill was filed to restrain the defendants from working their ironstone in such a way as to injure the plaintiffs. An issue had been directed, the trial of which lasted seven days, and a verdict had been given for the plaintiffs. On the plaintiffs then coming again for an injunction, they were met by a motion for a new trial; and upon the hearing of that motion, brief copies of the short-hand writer's notes of the judge's charge to the jury, and of the evidence, had been delivered to each of the three counsel of the plaintiff. It appeared that the judge's notes of the evidence of a scientific witness, Stutchfield, called by the plaintiffs, was imperfect; and in charging the jury, he used the short-hand writer's notes of that evidence. It was stated that it was impossible for either the judge or counsel to take any intelligible note of that evidence. The judge allowed a copy of his notes to be made out, for which the plaintiff paid his clerk a fee of 12*l.* 16*s.*

J. Russell, K. Parker, and T. H. Palmer, for the plaintiffs, contended that the Taxing Master having, in the due exercise of his discretion, allowed the sum, it was not competent to the Vice-Chancellor to disallow any of the items, but the most he should have done would have been to have directed the Master to review his taxation. They cited May v. Tarn (12 Meeson & Welsby, 730); Allsop v. Lord Oxford (1 Myl. & Keene, 564); Stewart v. Steele (11 Law Journ. N.S. 155; 4 Manning & Granger, 669).

Temple and Heathfield supported the Vice-Chancellor's order, and contended that the practice on motion for a new trial in this court was the same as at common law, where the counsel moves upon his own notes, if he was engaged upon the cause, or otherwise upon the notes of the counsel at Nisi Prius. The judge's notes are also then read, but short-hand writers' notes are never used, or if used, are never allowed in party and party costs. The Vice-Chancellor exercised his discretion upon full knowledge of the merits of the cause.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The short-hand writer's notes were used by the judge on the trial from necessity, his own note being imperfect, and it is so stated in the defendant's petition. It is the duty of the counsel attending at the trial to take correct notes of the evidence, and these notes are the foundation of a motion for a new trial. If counsel neglect to take an accurate note, and resort is obliged to be had to other sources, is the cost occasioned by that neglect to be thrown upon the opposite party? In this case the defendant states in his petition of appeal that the evidence of Sturchfield was given in such a way that neither the judge nor counsel could take an accurate note of it.

Temple.—The Vice-Chancellor said the use of that particular evidence made no difference.

Heathfield.—The note was used by consent of both parties; the evidence was that of a scientific witness, and assumed almost the character of a lecture. The Court was perfectly competent to correct each item improperly allowed by the Taxing Master.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The Court, it is clear, can review each item; but this is rather a question of principle. If allowed, it must be under the peculiar circumstances.

K. Parker.—If the cause is brought from another court, the copies are allowed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It will be better to inquire into the practice of the Courts of Common Law upon motions for new trials. I think we ought to adopt the same practice here. Are the notes ever read there without consent? As a matter of right they only read the judge's notes, and the notes of the counsel, which form the materials. If there is a discretion, the fact that the learned judge in this case adopted the short-hand writer's notes because his own were imperfect, would have a material influence. The motion must stand over to make inquiries. The rule at common law is this, if the judge has not heard the cause, the rule nisi for a new trial is obtained on the counsel's own responsibility, from his own note, and his knowledge of the case; the Court then sends for the judge's notes, and on the final argument these notes are read in court, and the substance of the case is collected from such materials.

July 26.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I have inquired of the Taxing Masters of the courts of Queen's Bench, Exchequer, and Common Pleas, what is the practice in these courts, and answers have already been received from the Queen's Bench and Exchequer, but not from the Common Pleas. It appears from these returns that the practice of the Queen's Bench and Exchequer differs a little, but that in all cases much is left to the discretion of the Court and of the taxing masters. In this case, if the matter had come originally before me, after the Master had exercised a discretion, having had all the materials before him, and had allowed a sum for the copies of the short-hand writer's notes, I should have felt a difficulty in overruling the Master's decision. But that decision has been appealed from, and if the Court thinks proper to interfere and reverse that decision, it has undoubtedly full authority to do so. The Vice-Chancellor has exercised that authority, and, having abundant materials before him, and being fully acquainted with all the merits of the case, has overruled the Master's discretion and disallowed this item. If the question had come before me in the first instance, I certainly, under the circumstances, should have required a very strong case to induce me to overrule the decision of the Taxing Master, because it is obvious that that officer, having all the parties before him, had an opportunity of minutely investigating every item of the bill. The Vice-Chancellor, however, having had the matter brought before him, did think it was a case in which the discretion of the Master should be overruled; and he had ample materials for that purpose, as he had heard the whole case on the motion for the injunction, and for the new trial of the issues, and was therefore able to form a complete judgment on all the questions between the parties, much more, indeed, than I can, who have not heard these motions, nor know any thing of the merits of the case. I do not think, therefore, that, under these circumstances, I can overrule the discretion exercised by the Vice-Chancellor, who maintains that it is the general rule of the Court not to allow the copies of notes of a short-hand writer to be charged for as between party and party, on motions for new trials. The rule is no doubt a very good rule, but I think there are circumstances arising in particular cases that would justify a departure from such a general rule, and call on the Court to permit the costs of copies of the notes of evidence on a trial to be allowed. The case was a very complicated one, in which the notes had been used as in the present instance, and I repeat that if the question had come before me in the first instance, I should not have arrived at the same conclusion as the Vice-Chancellor has, or interfered with the Master's discretion. I will hear the plaintiff's counsel in reply if they wish it.

July 28.—His lordship this day read the certificates he had received from the Masters of the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, which stated that it is not the practice of any of those courts to allow the costs of short-hand writer's notes on motions for new trials. The Exchequer Master's certificate added, that in some instances he allows a copy or copies of such notes for the use of counsel, but only in extreme cases, and then seldom more than one copy for general reference.

July 31.—The LORD CHANCELLOR ultimately determined to allow two copies of so much of the short-hand writer's notes as the Master upon reviewing his taxation should deem necessary. The grounds upon which his lordship made this important decision will appear next week.

TRAIL v. BULL.

Petitions of appeal—Deposit—Exceptions—Cause petition—Special application—Practice.

Jas. Russell applied for an order on the Lord Chancellor's secretary that he should receive one petition of appeal in this cause, upon an appeal against the decision of the Vice-Chancellor upon exceptions, and upon a cause petition which had come on and been decided, together with the exceptions. There should be but one petition of appeal, and one deposit upon the exceptions, as the subject-matter of both was comprehended in the decision.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Which do you say should comprehend both?

Russell.—The exceptions; the exceptions have rendered a deposit necessary, but upon the cause petition no deposit is required. The cause petition is consequential upon the exceptions.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I do not see why you may not comprehend both in one petition, provided you do what is necessary with respect to the exceptions. But this must necessarily be done by a special application to me; because in ordinary cases the appeal on exceptions and the cause petition would, according to the ordinary arrangement of the business of the court, come on on different days.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Saturday, June 7.

DAVENPORT v. POWELL.

Practice—Infancy—Guardianship—Objection in reference to religious principles in the appointment of guardian.

G. D. the father of an infant entitled to considerable property, was a lunatic at the birth of his child. A commission of lunacy having been issued against him, his wife, F. D. the mother of the infant (who was their only child), Rev. M. B. and J. A. C. were appointed his guardians during the minority. F. D. the mother, died in 1845; and after her decease, but before the funeral, a petition was hastily presented to the Court, praying that the guardianship and bringing up of the infant might be committed to the said M. B. and J. A. C. in conformity with the wishes of the deceased mother.

R. S., N. M. and A. his wife, the brother and sister of the deceased F. D. now presented their petition, complaining of the haste with which the former one had been obtained: that the sole ground why their deceased sister had approved of the said Rev. M. B. and J. A. C. was on account of their religious opinions, which were represented to be, as well as those of their deceased sister F. D. such as were contained in the "Tracts for the Times;" and that, with the exception of their sentiments in matters of religion, she had manifested great affection towards the present petitioners, and confidence in their integrity. The petition, therefore, praying that the petitioners might be appointed guardians to the infant, in the room of the said Rev. R. B. and J. A. C. or for a reference to the Master to appoint proper persons to be guardians of the infant during his minority — Held, that, the benefit of the minor being the only thing the Court had to consider, and it having always been the practice of the Court in making the appointment of guardians specially to have regard to the relations of the child, under the circumstances the matter ought to be referred back to the Master to appoint proper persons to be guardians, the former petition having been too inconsiderately presented.

This was a petition of a Mr. Richard Smith, and Mr. Nicholas Mason and Ann his wife, for the purpose of being appointed guardians of Edward Gershorn Davenport, an infant aged eight years, in the room of Rev. Robt. Brett and Mr. John Aubone Cook, or for a reference to the Master to appoint proper persons to be guardians of the infant during his minority. It appears, from the statements contained in the petition, that Mr. George Davenport, the father of the child, was entitled to a very considerable property under the will of his father, the late Samuel Davenport, esq. of the Stock Exchange, the whole of which would ultimately belong to the infant, who was his only child.

Under a commission of lunacy, issued in 1838, Mr. George Davenport, the father, was declared of unsound mind, and by a decree of the Court in the month of July 1844, Frances Davenport, the mother of the infant, and the Rev. Mr. Brett, and Mr. Cook were appointed his guardians during his minority. Mrs. Davenport died in April 1845, and immediately after her decease a petition was stated to have been hastily presented to the Court by Mr. Samuel Davenport, praying that the guardianship and bringing-up of the infant might be committed to Mr. Brett and Mr. Cook in conformity with the declared wishes of the deceased mother. The present petitioners were the brother and sister of the deceased Mrs. Davenport, and now complained that the petition of Mr. S. Davenport was presented and the order made thereon by the Court, without his having engaged in any previous communication with them, and even before the funeral of Mrs. Davenport had taken place; and that they were surprised to discover, upon a communication which was made a few days after for the purpose of ascertaining what arrangement was to be made respecting the future guardianship of the infant, that the appointment had already been made. The petitioner, Richard Smith, thereupon suggested the propriety of his being appointed guardian, either alone or conjointly with Messrs. Brett and Cook; Mr. Brett, however, rejected the proposal, and in a letter stated that such a proposition would have been met with the most decided disapprobation of Mrs. Davenport. Mr. Cook also suggested that, if a third guardian were necessary, Miss Surtees ought to be the person, as she was a near relative and held the same opinions as the late Mrs. Davenport and themselves upon the important subjects of religion and education. Mr. Cook also in a letter expressed himself to the same effect. The petitioners stated that they believed that their appointment to the guardianship was only objected to on the ground of their religious sentiments, as Mrs. Davenport had always expressed her most entire confidence in their honour and integrity. They declared, moreover, that they were all members of the Establishment, and were regular in their attendance upon divine service in their several parish churches, and that they had stood sponsors for the infant on his baptism according to the rites of the Church of England, but that their deceased sister, who had concurred with them in opinion and practice in matters of religion until some time after her marriage, had latterly imbibed the sentiments endeavoured to be enforced in the publications called Tracts for the Times, which were the opinions of Mr. Brett and Mr. Cook, but that the father of the infant was, previous to his present malady, wholly averse to those sentiments.

Bethell and Rogers, for the petitioners, submitted that it was never the practice of the Court to exclude the nearest relatives of an infant from the guardianship and education in favour of strangers, however unexceptionable, which would, moreover, be repugnant to all natural feeling. That the irregularity which characterized the appointment, which had been made without any notice to the present petitioners, and in a manner so hasty, was a sufficient reason for referring the matter back to the Master for his reconsideration. The petitioner was not desirous of casting any reflection upon the character and respectability of the gentlemen appointed to the guardianship. The only subject of difference between them being that of religion, and as the Rev. Mr. Brett and Mr. Cook were known to have adopted very strong Tractarian principles, and to have been selected solely on that account by Mrs. Davenport to the important office of bringing up and educating her infant son, it was the province of the Court to determine in a case where the mother, who had been jointly appointed to act with them as the guardians of the infant, was dead, and the father was a lunatic, whether the Court would entirely confide the education and nurture of the child to strangers whose religious opinions differed from those of the father previous to his insanity, and all the family of the infant except its mother now dead, and wholly exclude any of the members of that family from any share in bringing it up. To prove the confidence and affection with which Mrs. Davenport treated her brother, Mr. Smith, affidavits containing certain correspondence were read, in which some of the letters were subscribed by her in the following terms:—"Your affectionate and greatly obliged sister."

Wakefield and Chandless opposed the petition, and contended that, under the circumstances that had happened, it was the practice of the Court, where one of the guardians had died, to continue the guardianship to the survivors, and there was no reason to refer it back to the Master merely on the ground that some of the maternal relatives of the child wished to join in the guardianship. The father was a lunatic at the time of the infant's birth, which circumstance threw the obligation of education upon the mother. Mr. Brett was a clergyman of the Church of England, and had held the office of curate for the parish of St. Margaret, Westminster, for the last seven years, and that he "holds, believes, and teaches" (according to his own affidavit) "all the doctrines taught in the Book of Common Prayer." The affidavit of Mr. Cook went to the same effect, and set forth some correspondence between him and Mrs. Davenport after her recovery from a dangerous illness, and in her letters to him expressed the strongest wish that her child should be educated in those religious opinions which she held in common with himself and Mr. Brett, and that her own relatives should not participate in his education and bringing up. They insisted, moreover, that there had been no improper haste or any irregularity in obtaining the leave of the Court for the appointment of Mr. Brett and Mr. Cook.

Hoare, for the committee of the lunatic's estate.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The only question for my consideration is, whether or not a set of circumstances had arisen which rendered it proper that the appointment of the guardians should be re-considered. At the time when they were appointed, the mother stood in a position with regard to the child which no other human being could stand in, and her appointment to the guardianship might make it right that the other two individuals should be appointed to act in conjunction with her, leaving it as a consequence that when she was removed they should continue to be the sole guardians of the infant; and although she might take the advice of other persons with respect to her child, yet, having regard to its tender years, she would in effect be considered the surviving parent. Now, as to the regularity of the order made upon the petition of Mr. S. Davenport, the thing was required to be done promptly; and as there really appeared at that time no reason against the appointment, the Court thought it better at once to appoint those gentlemen to continue in the guardianship who had been already elected to the office. This, therefore, amounted to a primâ facie presumption that they were fit and proper persons; but when the Court is informed that there are other circumstances which rendered it proper to consider why they ought not to be continued as guardians, those circumstances would of course be taken into consideration. To my mind it is manifest, from the correspondence which took place, and the letters which have been read, that Mrs. Davenport was a lady of a kind, affectionate, and soft spirit, easily led and prone to adopt, that was not unusual with persons whose minds are strongly biassed by a notion that they must be always absent from the society of those who were most closely connected with them in order to conduct their affairs and themselves with propriety. I cannot see that a sufficient reason has been shewn why this lady should keep the child so much apart, although there can be no doubt, from the letters she wrote, that she entertained strong opinions upon the subject of religion, and that formed the foundation of those notions. With reference to those publications called the Tracts for the Times, I may say that I have read every word of the last three of them, and cannot help thinking that it is difficult to state, in a clear set of articles, what are really the opinions they approve. There is certainly a vast variety of sentiment expressed by the different writers of those tracts; and, with the exception of one or two instances, I really do not know who the writers are. It is impossible, however, to peruse those writings without discovering that there is a tendency in them rather to raise questions than to settle them, and to excite the mind to rove rather than keep it fixed upon settled and acknowledged truths. Nor can one fail to observe a great effort to fix certain things in the form of mere definitions; and, by closely studying the language of the writers, an individual is apt to find himself more bewildered in the pursuit than enlightened by them. Notwithstanding all this, however, the writers are understood to be friends of the established church, and it cannot be denied that a great portion of the works are written in a beautiful spirit; but I very much doubt whether it can be considered as any recommendation to gentlemen who are put forward as the guardians of a very young child, that the distinguishing feature of their religious opinions is the adoption of the notions inculcated by the Tracts for the Times. There certainly are other religious books much better calculated to instruct children than those; but that is not now the main question before me. It is this, whether Mr. Smith, the brother of Mrs. Davenport, and Mr. Mason, who is the husband of that lady's sister, and both members of the Church of England, ought to be admitted in the guardianship, or whether Messrs. Brett and Cook shall remain the exclusive guardians of the infant. The benefit of the child is the main object the Court has to consider; and it has been the invariable practice in appointing guardians specially to have respect to the relatives of the child; and I really am of opinion, that if one of these gentlemen, who is a member of the Church of England, continue to be a guardian, the maternal uncle, who is also a member of the same church, ought to be proposed. It is true, they may differ on some points of faith; yet they may agree on the rest. And it may eventually turn out that the temper and disposition of mind of the one may prove to be a corrective of the other, which, if left alone, may be most prejudicial to the welfare of the child. I must therefore refer it back to the Master to appoint proper persons to be guardians, as the matter has not hitherto been sufficiently considered by the parties.

ROLLS COURT.

CANNING v. BELL.

Practice—Next friend—Re-taxation—Different suits. One of three infants who were suing by their next friend, having come of age, moved to be substituted as next friend for the other two, to act for herself and them, in the room of the next friend then deceased, and, a decree having been made in the suit, that the taxation of the costs which had been completed should be reviewed in the presence of her solicitor, it was directed that the suit should be first set right as to parties, and that the question of taxation should be considered afterwards.

This was a motion for a special order on behalf of Maria Canning, one of three infant plaintiffs, by their next friend, in a suit already instituted, but who had now come of age, that she might be permitted to adopt the proceedings in the suit, and might be made the next friend of the other two infants, her sisters, in the room of the person who was now, or late, acting as the next friend; that the plaintiffs might amend the bill by striking out the name of Richard Gordon, and substituting that of Maria Canning as next friend; that there might be a reference back to the Master to review his taxation of the costs, and that Mr. Sutton, the solicitor of Maria Canning, might be permitted to be present at the proceedings, and that the Rev. Thomas Canning might deliver up books, papers, &c. to Mr. Sutton, &c. It appeared that the suit was instituted on the 6th November, 1834, in the name of the three infants, by their uncle, the Rev. Thomas Canning, as their next friend, against the defendant, Mr. Bell, for the purpose of taking his accounts, and that Mr. Bell acted in the suit as the solicitor of the plaintiff, Mr. Canning. On the 28th April, 1837, another suit was instituted, in the name of the three infants, by one Greening, as their next friend, for the purpose of taking the accounts adversely; and on the 2nd November following, Greening obtained the usual reference to the Master to see which of the two suits was for the benefit of the infants. Before the Master, however, had taken any steps, an order was obtained on the 9th February, 1839, by Richard Gordon, that he should be substituted in the place of Greening, and thereupon Greening and his solicitor, Mr. Sutton, ceased to have any thing more to do with the cause. This arrangement then took place in the Master's office; Gordon, the next friend in the second suit, was to drop it and go on with the first suit, and he considered next friend in it; and his solicitor, Mr. Wilkinson, conducted the proceedings. On the 18th of March, 1844, a decree was made on further directions in the first suit, Sutton appearing by petition, and claiming his costs; and maintenance was ordered, and a reference as to costs, &c. On the 12th April, 1845, Gordon, the next friend, died, and the present motion was now made to supply his place, &c.

Kindersley, for the motion, said there was a proceeding, under the order of March 1844, to tax the costs of the suit, and there was nobody there to check it on the part of the infants, for Mr. Wilkinson was the solicitor for Mr. Gordon, who was allowed to conduct the suit as if he were next friend of the infants in it. This application is, therefore, that Miss Canning may attend the taxation of the costs to see that every thing is properly conducted. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The institution of the suit is approved, and Mr. Canning has wholly abandoned it.] Yes, and our application is for a new next friend, and some one to attend the taxation.

Malins, for Mr. Canning, said that he (Mr. Canning) had supposed the conduct of the cause was [en]tirely taken out of his hands, but he was ready to go on as next friend. The objection to the institution of the suit by him was, that it was done through Bell as his solicitor, he being the defendant and the accounting party.

Hardy, for the infant plaintiffs.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—You must first arrange as to Maria Canning being appointed the next friend for her sisters; the uncle, perhaps, if co[n]tinued, and she might not agree; but, if it is she[wn] that she is a proper person to be appointed, you can have her appointed, and then, after the suit is pr[oper]ly constituted, you may apply again.

Saturday, July 12.—Kindersley now stated that it was agreed that Miss Canning's solicitor should be at liberty to attend the re-taxation; and as there was a decree, and nothing now to be done but to tax the costs, any further step was unnecessary.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Yes, but what about the infants? Who is their next friend?

Kindersley.—Strictly, there is none. All that is wanted is merely re-taxation.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It is better to put the suit in a proper form. Make the lady next friend in the first place; then apply.

Costs to be costs in the cause.

OLDFIELD v. COBBETT.

Practice—Prisoner—Contempt—Suing in formâ [pau]peris to discharge contempt—Refusal of application for a purpose as to which an application had been refused by the Lord Chancellor.

A defendant was in custody for a contempt, and having made several unsuccessful applications to the Lord Chancellor to be discharged, was ordered to pay the costs; subsequently the plaintiff, by a particular act, waived the original contempt, and the defendant thereby became entitled to be discharged without payment of the costs of the contempt, but not of the subsequent costs. Under these circumstances, an application was made by the defendant to the Master of the Rolls for an order to enable him to defend in formâ pauperis to clear his contempt, on an affidavit that the application he intended to make was not the same as that previously made to the Chancellor; but his lordship refused to grant the order without being informed distinctly what the precise nature of the intended proceedings was; and on being furnished with an affidavit, stating what steps it was intended to take, he would not grant the motion, saying the defendant proposed making the same motion as he had done before.

This was a motion on behalf of Mr. Cobbett, the defendant in this suit, now a prisoner in the Queen's Prison, that he might be at liberty to defend the suit in formâ pauperis, and that a solicitor and counsel might be assigned him, to enable him to clear his contempt. The motion stood over from a former day, to enable the defendant to put in an affidavit that he did not intend to make an application similar to that already made to the Chancellor, and which he had refused. This case has been so much before the courts that it is unnecessary to say more than that Mr. Cobbett, having been in contempt, became entitled to be discharged without payment of costs, the contempt being waived by a subsequent act of the plaintiff; but, having made unsuccessful applications to the Lord Chancellor to be discharged, he had been ordered to pay the costs of them; and on application to the Chancellor to discharge him without paying those costs, his motion was refused. An application had been made subsequently at the Rolls for a like purpose, and was refused on that ground; and therefore, on making the present application, the defendant was required to make oath as to this not being an attempt to renew the former course of proceeding.

Addis, in support of the motion, disclaimed all intention of impugning the decision of his lordship in Oldfield v. Cobbett (3 Beav. 432), by which the common order to sue in formâ pauperis, which Mr. Cobbett had obtained, was discharged, on the ground of his being an executor, and which decision had been confirmed by the Lord Chancellor on appeal; but this was an application for a special order, in contradistinction to a common order. It was easy to see why an executor should be refused the common order which any one might obtain on swearing he was not worth five pounds in the world; for he may be in possession of property to any amount in his representative character; but it is said by the other side, that in no case can an executor, as such, obtain an order, even on special application, though he may have no means of defending himself. That cannot be the rule of the court. Here Mr. Cobbett is entirely destitute, individually considered, and the receiver in the cause has taken possession of the testator's assets: Mr. Cobbett, therefore, has no means at all. Being badly advised, he got into contempt, and cannot stir a step to relieve himself. The rules of the Court are not so stringent as to preclude it from granting the application; and even if so as to an order generally, at least it may be granted so far as to aid him in clearing his contempt. I rely on the case of Oldfield v. Cobbett (1 Coll. C. C. 169), where an application having been refused with costs, and the defendant being in contempt for not paying them, an application was made by him to Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, and it was objected that he was not entitled to be heard while in contempt; but his Honor held, that he was, to relieve himself from the contempt. The case was one of great commiseration, for the defendant had been six years in prison, and he had no means whatever of discharging himself. He cited Wilson v. Bates (3 Myl. & Cr. 197); King v. Bryant (3 Myl. & Cr. 191).

Kindersley, contrà.—If this were a bonâ fide application I should be the last person to oppose it. But, as far as this suit is concerned, the last decree has been made, and nothing more remains to be done; therefore an order to defend in formâ pauperis is useless. The object, however, of the application is to enable the defendant to come up time after time and make motions free of expense, so as to annoy the defendant and harass him with useless litigation; for, if the Court were to grant the order, it would not relieve the defendant from the payment of the costs, they are ordered to be paid conclusively. True, it is sworn that the application is to be different from that made to the Lord Chancellor; but though in terms it is not the same, yet the result, if the order be granted, would be to grant a portion of that application. In the case before the Vice-Chancellor, the object was to clear the contempt; here it is to make a motion to discharge the order to pay the costs. If the defendant promises not to bring any action against the plaintiff or sheriff's officer, we will most willingly let him off without paying the costs; or, if he likes, he can get discharged by taking the benefit of the Insolvent Act; but that he will not do; he wishes to vex the other party.

Addis, in reply, said, the plaintiff was the only creditor, and if the defendant took the benefit of the Act the plaintiff would be his assignee, and then he could not [bring an] action.

The MASTER of the ROLLS wished to know the first steps it was intended to take if the order were granted.

Addis hoped his lordship would not press for that information now, as he could not inform him; if so, he hoped he would allow the matter to stand over for an affidavit to be made.

The MASTER of the ROLLS thought he had every reason to know, and he would make no order till he was informed. What was asked was primâ facie reasonable. The defendant is in contempt and desires to clear it, but is not able to take the necessary steps to do so, and asks for an order to enable him to proceed in formâ pauperis. That is reasonable, and he was desirous therefore to grant the order. This, however, was not a case merely of that character; there had been a succession of applications, whether with or without a knowledge of the practice of the Court, which took it out of the rule of ordinary cases. In the first place, he (the Master of the Rolls) had a strong impression the defendant was asking him to do what the Lord Chancellor had refused. Besides, the past could not be forgotten, and regarding that, it is not an ordinary case, and the defendant must present a statement of what he intends to do, before any order can be made. That the suit is at an end and the decree finally made, is not enough; that may be the very strongest reason for granting such an order with a view of carrying the cause further.

Monday, July 14.—The MASTER of the ROLLS intimated to Mrs. Cobbett that the statement presented was not satisfactory; it was intended to make the same application as before, and therefore he refused the motion.

Saturday, July 12.

COULSTING v. COULSTING.

Practice—Married woman—Next friend—Suing in formâ pauperis.

If a plea be put in to a bill and allowed, and there is no undertaking at the time on the part of the plaintiff to reply, he must pay the costs of the suit and the plea before proceeding farther: and in such a case, if the cause be in a Vice-Chancellor's Court, the Master of the Rolls has no jurisdiction to grant a common order to sue in formâ pauperis, to a married woman or to any one else. A special application must be made to the judge in whose court the suit was instituted, or to the Lord Chancellor.

The next friend of a married woman may have an order to sue in formâ pauperis, but quære, whether it must not be always on special application?

This was an application in person to the Court, by Mrs. Mary Anne Coulsting, the plaintiff in the cause, for an order to enable her next friend to sue in formâ paupe[ris]. She had filed her bill in the Vice-Chancellor of England's Court, against her husband, from whom she was living apart, in reference to a deed of separation, but a plea of condonation had been put in and allowed. It appeared from her statement at first, that she contemplated an appeal; but on being questioned by the Court, it turned out that she intended to file a replication to the plea, and to enable her to do so applied for the order. She put in an affidavit expressly denying the plea.

James, contrà, contended that the motion could not be granted at all, for it was expressly laid down in two cases, Pennington v. Alvin (1 S. & St. 264), and Drinan v. Mannix (3 Dru. & War. 154), that a next friend of a married woman must be a person of substance.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—You do not, perhaps, know that it has been here decided otherwise some days ago. The only question is, whether I have any jurisdictio[n], that is, whether it is to be the common [ord]er or an order on the special circumstances. If it be the latter, the application must be made in the other branch of the court. As to the order itself, having lately had occasion to inquire, I have found two manuscript instances of its being made, and one of them by Sir John Leach himself. One of the orders was on a special affidavit, the other I don't find to have been so; but it was evidently brought to the notice of the Court, and made on due consideration.

James.—At all events it must be made on the special circumstances. The plea was put in and allowed, and there was no undertaking at the time to file a replication; therefore, before any steps are taken by the plaintiff, she must pay the costs of the suit and plea.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The case stands thus:—A bill is filed by a married woman in reference to a deed of separation, and a plea is put in and allowed. When that is so, and no further step is taken to disturb the decision, the matter is at an end; but if the plaintiff is not satisfied, there are two steps which may then be taken; either to appeal or file a replication. In either case, if at the time the plea was allowed there was no undertaking by the plaintiff to proceed, he must pay the costs of the previous steps before he can be allowed to go on. The question then arises whether any one can be allowed to obtain the common order to sue in formâ pauperis, and if so, whether a married woman can; and I am of opinion that in either case it can only be obtained on the special circumstances. The plaintiff must, therefore, apply to the Vice-C[han]cellor or the Lord Chancellor. I refuse the motion.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

June 9 and 26.

WARREN v. POSTLETHWAITE.

Specific legacies—Costs.

A married woman having a testamentary power over funds standing in different names, made a will appointing portions of the funds, which she described erroneously, in favour of different parties: Held, that the legacies were specific.

Costs of suit ordered to be paid rateably by the legatees whose interests rendered the suit necessary.

This case, which is reported ante, p. 235, upon one question which arose in the suit, was subsequently argued upon the remaining question. Mrs. Postlethwaite having, by her marriage settlement, a power of appointment by will of sums of stock and of shares in the Oxford Canal Navigation, standing in the names of trustees, and there also being a sum of 539*l*. 16*s*. 4*d*. Three per Cent. reduced Bank Annuities, standing in the names of her husband and herself, made her will, dated the 23rd of July, 1834, which, so far as is material for the present purpose, was in the following terms: "In conformity to an authority vested in me by the will of my father, and the power given in my marriage settlement with Mr. William Postlethwaite, I being this day, by the blessing of Almighty God, of sound understanding, proceed to make the following distribution of my property."

The testatrix afterwards bequeathed to her two sisters, in trust, 1,700*l.* now standing in the Three-and-a-Half per Cents, in the joint names of William and Elizabeth, or Eliza, Postlethwaite, for the following purposes. "1,500*l.* to accrue for the benefit and advantage of the orphan children of my deceased brothers Henry and Daniel, until they severally become of age, then 100*l.* Three-and-a-Half per Cents. to be paid to each, &c.; and I bequeath and give to the Rev. Henry [illegible] and William Warren, esq. 100*l.* each Three-and-a-Half per Cents, to be paid them free of legacy-duty;" and the testatrix gave also several legacies, of the value of 10*l.* each, and further bequeathed to her said sister, in trust, 500*l.* from moneys standing in the joint names of William and Elizabeth, or Eliza, Postlethwaite, being part of the legacy left me by my brother, the Rev. George Taunton, and standing in the Three per Cents Reduced, to accrue for the benefit of the five daughters of my above-named brothers, until they severally attain the age of twenty-one years, then each to receive 100*l.* I give and bequeath 1,000*l.* Three per Cents to my brother, the Honorable Mr. Justice Taunton, and I give and bequeath to the Rev. Dr. Radford and the Rev. Edmund Goodenough Bayly, in trust for the sole use and advantage of my sisters, Mrs. Henry Smith and Charlotte Warren, 1,800*l.* Three per Cents, now standing in the joint names of William and Elizabeth, or Eliza, Postlethwaite, to be equally divided, 900*l.* to Mrs. Henry Smith, and 900*l.* to Charlotte Warren; and I further give and bequeath to the aforesaid Dr. Radford and to the Rev. Goodenough Bayly, in trust, four canal shares, standing in the joint names of William and Elizabeth, or Eliza, Postlethwaite, for the sole use and advantage of my two sisters, Mrs. Henry Smith and Charlotte Warren." The testatrix then gave all her plate, &c. to her two sisters, and appointed them residuary legatees.

The testatrix died two days afterwards, and letters of administration, with the will annexed, were granted to her two sisters. The husband of the testatrix died in April 1843, and this suit was instituted in January 1844, for the purpose of administering the estate under the decree of the Court. The principal question which was now argued was as to the nature of the legacies, whether they were general or specific. The way in which the question [illegible] from the judgment.

Swanston and D. Jones, for the plaintiff.

Freeling, Torreau, B[illegible], [illegible], Fisher, and Willcock, for the several defendants.

The following cases were cited: Duke of Marlborough v. Godolphin (2 Ves. sen. 7[illegible]); Cottle v. Leger (2 P. Wms. [illegible]); O[illegible] v. Heath ([illegible] Ves. sen. 3[illegible]); Southby v. Stonehouse (2 Ves. sen. [illegible]); Benson v. Reed (5 Madd. [illegible]); Mackinley v. [illegible] (8 Sim. 561); Selwood v. Mildmay (3 Ves. 306); Bishop of Peterborough v. Mortlock (1 Bro. Ch. C. [illegible]); Simmons v. Vallance (4 Bro. Ch. Ca. 345).

June 26.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—It having been already decided that the will of the testatrix in the cause was signed and published by her in the presence of two competent witnesses, and it being admitted that at the time she executed it she had, by virtue of her marriage-settlement, a power of appointment by such a will, subject to the life interest of her husband, who is now deceased, but who survived her, over five canal shares, and 1,[illegible] 1s. Three-and-a-Half per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities then standing in the joint names of four trustees; 2,530*l.* [illegible] Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities in the names of other trustees. [illegible] have collected the [illegible] canal shares then standing in the names of the trustees of one of the two settlements which I have mentioned. It is admitted that the marriage-settlement containing the power which I have mentioned is the settlement noticed in the will, and does not extend over any other property except that which has just been mentioned. The testatrix had [illegible] testamentary capacity or power; but there [illegible] joint names of her husband and herself [illegible] Three per Cent. Reduced Annuities [illegible] had been produced by a legacy left her by her brother, the Rev. George Taunton; but it [illegible] what I have already said, that she was not empowered to dispose of that sum, nor does she appear to have been interested in any property, except as I have stated. Considering these facts and the [illegible] language of the will, I think it must be [illegible] Three-and-a-Half per Cents, [illegible] 1s. Three-and-a-Half per Cents, [illegible] of the children of her brothers, Henry and Daniel Taunton; 100*l.* of the same stock [illegible] to the Rev. Henry Smith, and 100*l.* of the same [illegible] to Mr. Warren, and as [illegible] of the same stock with the remaining legacies of [illegible], these legacies affecting, I think, that [illegible]; which [illegible] conceive must further bear the legacy duty, so far as it is payable upon each of the bequests I have mentioned, including the 1,500*l.* Should the 1,853*l.* not be exhausted, I am of opinion the remainder of that fund must, as this will is worded, be considered as abated, and will be taken by Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Warren, whom the testatrix describes as residuary legatees. I think that by the 1,000*l.* Three per Cents, which she gives in general terms to Mr. Justice Taunton, and of the 1,800*l.* described as standing in the joint names of William and Elizabeth Postlethwaite, she must in the whole of the will, those facts being considered, which may be properly taken into consideration, be held to have meant the 2,530*l.* 3s. Three per Cent. Consols, which were subject to the power, and that there is accordingly a specific disposition of it between Mr. Justice Taunton and his two sisters, he or his estate taking ten twenty-eighths, and his two sisters the remaining eighteen twenty-eighths. The two sisters took the five canal shares, four of them for their separate use respectively, and also the fifth for their separate use, or under the appointment to them as residuary legatees, whether the one way or the other it is not, I suppose, material to them. As there has not been mentioned to me any authority for applying to a case of this kind, as to costs, the general rule for obtaining on that subject in the case of the ordinary administration suit, I must assume that there is no such authority; and so assuming, I think the costs of the present suit ought to be borne rateably between the 1,853*l.* 1s. Three-and-a-Half per Cents, and 2,530*l.* Three per Cent. Consols, and the five canal shares, and that the contribution of the 1,800*l.* must fall rateably on all entitled to participate in it, including the 10*l.* legacies and the residuary legatees. I think I may say that this is the mode of disposing of the costs in such a suit as the present, assuming my view in other respects to be correct, and my opinion has the concurrence of more than one of the other learned judges of this Court, to whom I have mentioned the matter. Whether or not the same or a similar point was argued in Young v. Martin (2 Cases in Chan. 582) or the case before me in 1813, I do not clearly remember.

HATFIELD v. PRYME.

Construction of will—Period of vesting.

Richard Weston, late of Yaxley, in the county of Huntingdon, schoolmaster, by his will dated the 16th of September, 1801, gave and devised unto his daughter, Elizabeth Carter, the wife of Wm. Hatfield the elder, all the estates, both freehold and copyhold, of him, the said testator, during her life, for her separate use; and by his said will he further gave and devised in the words following; that is to say, "And from and immediately after the decease of my said daughter, I give and devise the said estates to Wm. Child the younger, of Yaxley, in the said county of Huntingdon, gent. and Wm. Hatfield, the father of the children, and to the survivors of them, or the executor of such survivor, in trust for the following purposes: that they sell the estate as soon as they conveniently can, and what money it makes, together with 500*l.* in the Three per Cent. Annuities Consolidated, transferable at the Bank of England; and what money may be out elsewhere, I give and bequeath to the [illegible] in trust; and that they divide the whole sum amongst my grandchildren that are living at my daughter's death, and by the present marriage, in the following manner: I give and bequeath to my grandson, Wm. Hatfield, one-fifth part of the whole sum of money; to my grandson, Weston Hatfield, one fourth part; to my grandson, James Hatfield, one-fifth part of the whole, which will be thirteen parts of twenty; and the other seven parts to be equally divided amongst the other children living at the death of my daughter, by the present [illegible] and all that are of the age of twenty one years to receive their parts twelve months after my daughter's decease; and if any of them die before they come to age, without issue, their parts shall be equally divided amongst the survivors, share and share alike; and the minors' money, if there are any at the death of my said daughter, at the end of twelve months afterwards shall be put out to interest, to the trustees' names, in the public funds or other good securities, at the discretion of the said trustees, until they are of age; and the interest of the money shall be applied to the bringing them up in their minority; and the trustees shall settle with them or their certain attorney as they come to the age of twenty one years respectively, if it is twelve months after the death of my daughter. And my will is, that my daughter shall receive the interest of her money that is out at interest during her natural life for her own use and benefit." And the testator appointed the said Wm. Child and Wm. Hatfield, the elder, executors of his said will.

In the month of July 1806, the testator died, without having revoked his will, and leaving his daughter, Elizabeth Carter Hatfield, his only child and heiress-at-law and customary heiress, him surviving.

At the time of the testator's death, Elizabeth Carter Hatfield had the following children, viz. Wm. Hatfield the younger, and Weston Hatfield, both of whom subsequently died during the lifetime of their mother, E. C. Hatfield, and five other children, who survived her.

One of the questions which arose in this cause, which was now heard upon further directions, was, whether the representatives of William Hatfield the younger, and Weston Hatfield, took an interest in the testator's property according to the terms of the will.

Prendergast, for the plaintiff.

Russell and Chandless, for two of the daughters of Elizabeth Carter Hatfield.

G. Simpson, for the representatives of Wm. Hatfield the younger, and Weston Hatfield, contended, that as these two grandsons of the testator survived him, the shares in the property vested in them immediately upon the testator's death. In Tawney v. Ward (1 Bea. 563) it was held that there was no intestacy, though the words used were similar to those used in this will. The children mentioned take, not as members of a class, but as specific devisees. (Boys v. Lechmere, 12 Sim.)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I think the condition was carried on. The will gives only to the grandchildren living at the daughter's decease; then he says, "in the following manner," and then states what shares the particular children shall take. I think they were only to take those shares if then living. Weston survived the testator and died in his mother's lifetime. This instance will apply to the other case. He died, and I think the share lapsed to the heir-at-law, who took it as personalty.

MONYPENNY v. MASCALL.

Evidence—Letters in possession of a deceased person, when to be received.

This suit was instituted for the purpose of enforcing an agreement made by epistolary correspondence for the purchase of an annuity. The person with whom the agreement was alleged to have been made died in 1828, having, by illness, been incapacitated for business some time before. Some letters found amongst his papers were offered as evidence.

Russell objected to their being received.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The testator before his illness writes letters upon the subject in dispute in this suit, which letters are in evidence. Certain letters purporting to be written, and which no doubt, are written, by members of the same family, are found amongst the testator's papers. They also relate to the same matter as had been the subject of his own letters before his illness. The letters forming this correspondence cohere and fit together. To this it is added that there is evidence that they were seen in the possession of the testator during his lifetime. On the whole, I am of opinion that the letters were in the testator's possession when they ought to have been there, and therefore ought to be received as documents coming out of his possession.

MYNN v. HART.

Security for costs—Defendant.

A defendant residing in Ireland, having obtained the conduct of the suit after decree, is not liable to give security for costs to a larger amount than is ordinarily given.

This was a petition by one of the defendants to have the conduct of the suit, the plaintiff having absconded. A decree had been made in the suit. The defendant who presented the petition was resident in Ireland, and accordingly, after the petition was granted,

Russell, Mylne, K. Parker, and Piggott, for some of the defendants, applied for security for costs, which they required should, under the circumstances of the case, be for a greater amount than was ordinarily given. The cases of a change of next friend, and of a revival of a suit by a defendant, were alleged to be analogous to this.

Wigram, for another defendant.

Anderdon and Miller, for the petitioner.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR ordered that security in 100*l.* should be given, to abide such order as to costs as the Court should make.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Wednesday, July 30.

ZIMMER v. ZIMMER.

Practice—Decree—Costs.

Where an estate sold under a decree is reported by the Master insufficient to pay the legacies charged on it, and the amount of those legacies is found, the Court, upon petition, will alter the decree, and order the purchase-money to be paid directly to the legatees, in order to save the costs of payment into court in pursuance of the decree.

This was a petition to have the mode of executing a decree altered, with a view to save costs. The bill in this case was filed by legatees against infant heirs of a devisee of real estate on which the legacies were charged, for a sale of the real estate and payment of their legacies, the amount of which had been ascertained; the Court decreed a sale, and ordered the purchase money to be paid into court; the sale is effected, and the Master reports the sale, the name of the purchaser, and that the produce of the sale was less than the amount of the legacies; whereupon the legatees present this petition, praying that the purchaser, instead of paying the purchase-money into court, in pursuance of the decree, should pay the costs when taxed, and the residue to the plaintiffs, they offering to accept the amount in full for their claim, and that, if necessary, the infants may be declared trustees for the purchaser, and the grandfather and guardian of the infants may be ordered to convey to the purchaser in place of the infants. The petition was supported by affidavit, stating that the defendants were infants and out of the jurisdiction.

The cases of Parker v. Burney (1 Beavan), Walter v. Jackson (12 Sim.), and King v. Leach (2 Hare 47), were cited as authorities, and the Court made the order as prayed.

PHENE v. GILLOW.

Mortgagor and Mortgagee—Shares—Liability—Indemnity.

A mortgagee of shares registered in his name in the books of a banking company, is liable to all calls and debts created during the time he appears the registered shareholder, notwithstanding the mortgage debt may have been paid.

In July 1841, the defendant borrowed 880*l.* from the plaintiff upon the security of his promissory-note, and a deposit in the hands of the plaintiff of certificates of shares in the Western Banking Company, and by an agreement, executed between the plaintiff and defendant at the same time, the plaintiff acknowledged the receipt and undertook to return them on repayment of the money, and the defendant undertook to indemnify the plaintiff against any call made upon him on account of those shares, and the security was completed by the rules of the company under a deed of transfer of the shares to the plaintiff, executed by the defendant and the directors of the company, and the shares were duly registered in the name of the plaintiff; the debt so secured was afterwards increased to 1,000*l.* and the shares remained, as before, as a security for the whole sum, under a new agreement in the same terms as the previous one; on the 4th of August, 1843, the defendant paid off the 1,000*l.* to the plaintiff, and in the same month the plaintiff procured from the secretary of the company a form of notice of retransfer of the shares, which he sent to the defendant, who signed it, and returned it to the secretary of the company, and at the same time the plaintiff, on the demand of the defendant, returned to him the certificates of the shares deposited with the plaintiff. The banking company failed before a retransfer of the shares is made into the name of the defendant in the books of the company, and Smith, a creditor of the company, recovered a judgment against the public officer of the company for 3,045*l.* when a call is made, and the attorney of Smith, demands from the plaintiff the sum of 350*l.* on account of the shares standing in his name, whereupon the plaintiff writes to the defendant, and states what had occurred, and calls upon the defendant to give him security for the liability arising from those shares. The defendant in his answer does not deny his liability, but desires the plaintiff not to pay the demand, and offers him a security to indemnify him, which the plaintiff refused from insufficiency. By the rules of the company no transfer of shares is allowed to be made until all calls are paid upon such shares; under these circumstances, the plaintiff being liable to the payment of this call of 350*l.* filed this bill, to have the assistance of the Court in compelling the defendant to indemnify him against the liabilities and expenses in respect to the shares which, he contended, he held merely as a trustee for the defendant.

Romilly, for the plaintiff.

Wood and Grove, for the defendant.

The cases cited were, Humble v. Mitchell (2 Nicholl, Hare, & Carron's Railway Cases, 70); Balche v. Hyam (2 Pr. Williams, 453); March v. Wills (2 Sim. & Stu.).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered the plaintiff had no right of action at law against the defendant in respect of the matters complained of in this suit. The plaintiff, by reason of the transfer of the shares, had become absolute owner of them at law, and had acquired all the rights, and had become subject to all the liabilities, of a shareholder, both as between himself and all the world, and as between himself and the other shareholders. In the absence of express contract, he could discover no principle upon which it could be contended that the defendant, under the circumstances of this case, could be required to indemnify the plaintiff against the consequences of the transfer of the shares; the question, therefore, in his opinion, was only whether the plaintiff had a right to such indemnity, there having been an agreement to accept the retransfer, the case of Humble v. Mitchell (2 Nicholl, Hare, & Carrow's Railway Cases, 70), applies to this case. The debt due from the public officer of the company may be viewed as of three characters or distinct debts, for the purpose of considering this case: one, which had been contracted before the transfer to plaintiff; another, which had been contracted subsequently to the transfer and before the payment of the debt; and the third, subsequently to the debt being paid. With regard to the first, the plaintiff could not be held liable to a judgment-creditor without a special contract, although, as between himself and the shareholders, or between himself and Gillow, he might have been liable as to the third debt, for he would reserve the consideration of the second, subject to the observations he had made.—The case appeared to be this: the loan was made in July 1841, the shares transferred in July 1842; the amount of loan was increased from 880*l.* to 1,000*l.* and upon that occasion the original transaction was confirmed. The debt was paid off in August 1843. On the 25th of August, 1843, the plaintiff applied to the directors of the company to transfer the shares in question to the defendant. In conformity with the deed of settlement he signed a notice requiring them to do so; this he sent to the defendant, who, having signed it, transferred it to the office. From that date, until September 1843, the question as to the retransfer of the shares to the defendant was pending before the company, who, it appeared, had power under the deed of settlement, and upon certain terms, to negative the transfer, which had been delayed, so far as appeared, only by the difficulties resting, not with the parties, but the directors of the company. During no part of the period had the defendant required the plaintiff to act otherwise in respect to the shares than by retransferring them to himself. In September 1843, a creditor of the company recovered three judgments against the public officer of the company, and was proceeding to enforce them against the plaintiff. The effect of this transaction would, in his opinion, entitle the plaintiff to an indemnity, so far as related to the debt accrued since the mortgage was paid off; for the defendant called for a retransfer of the shares under the right he had from the original transaction, and the defendant could not now retire from the position in which he had thus placed himself, merely because it might appear to be for his own benefit to repudiate the shares in question. The effect of the payment of the debt, combined with the subsequent transactions, was to make the plaintiff merely a trustee for the defendant. Matters had thus continued with the defendant's consent down to the time of the suit. The plaintiff's rights as against Gillow were those of a trustee between himself and the cestui que trust, and he could not doubt that a trustee so situated as the plaintiff was had a right to be indemnified by his cestui que trust from all liability he might have incurred in his character of trustee. He might take the analogous case of leasehold property: the trustee being under covenant for the benefit of his cestui que trust, it was quite clear he was entitled to indemnity for all money he had paid; therefore, for all liabilities incurred since the debt was paid the plaintiff was entitled to indemnity. The remaining debt, which, for the purpose of the judgment, he supposed to have been contracted after the shares were transferred, and before the debt was paid off, raised questions of some difficulty in deciding this part of the case: he would suppose the mortgage to have been in the common form, that is, an absolute transfer, subject to redemption, and nothing to have passed by which the defendant would have been bound to take the shares again; in that case it became material to consider whether the defendant was or would have been liable in a court of equity for all the engagements of the company in exoneration of the plaintiff in the same manner as he would have been had he continued the registered owner of the shares. in that simple ined to say the defendant ould have b liable: the question was ot v er the defendant could redeem the shares wi ifying the plaintiff, but whether he was er a personal liability to indemnify, it being admitted that the company was insolvent, and that th ... ... bee ... paratively valueless: the plaintiff had become a partner for his own benefit; he had acquired all the rights and some of the liabilities of a partne law he must assume that there was no implied tract for indemnity; his rights and liabilities d th time he held the shar for his own benefit must have been the same in equity as at law as far as regards the personal liability of the defendant; the position of the parties was different in equity and at law, inasmuch as at law the defendant had at that time no interest in the shares, although in equity he had a right to redeem them, and if he elected to redeem them he might be bound to indemnify the plaintiff against all expense and liabilities in respect to the shares in question; but, although the defendant might have a right to redeem, he might also waive that right and submit to be foreclosed if he should choose so to do; he could not think that the plaintiff had any personal demand against him for the expenses incurred in maintaining the mortgaged property which, upon his supposition, the defendant did not think fit to claim; this appeared to be the position of the defendant considered as a mere mortgagee; if that would be the case of a mortgagee with a common clause of redemption, he thought the form of the security in this case could make no difference; this question remained: the defendant had bound himself to accept a retransfer of the shares—in effect he had elected, and bound himself by the election, to redeem the mortgage, and this he had done, too, and might be supposed to have done with a full knowledge of the consequences; from the time he became so bound he became owner of the shares; the question was, whether he could have those shares without paying the plaintiff his expenses properly incurred in the management of them; he thought not; the profits, if any, would have been the defendant's, and he must also be a loser, if a loss was to be sustained; therefore, supposing the suit to have been properly framed, his opinion was, that the defendant having, under the original contract, elected to claim a right to have a retransfer of the shares, and having continued to treat with the plaintiff for such retransfer from the month of August 1843, when the money was paid off, down to September in the same year, when the action was brought against the officer of the company, the delay had been occasioned by the acts of the directors; the defendant never having repudiated the shares, or called upon the plaintiff to do otherwise than he did, the plaintiff would be entitled to an indemnity. A difficulty occurred in the suit, the directors not being parties; the plaintiff therefore making this demand against this defendant, was not upon this record in a position at once to give him the shares; and the difficulty he had to deal with was, whether he could require the directors to be made parties, or whether, without doing so, he could in the present form of the suit make such decree as he thought the plaintiff was entitled to. He had been left no very unsatisfactory information as to the deed of the company; it was admitted on both sides, as he understood, that the deed did give the directors power to refuse the transfer of the shares, but it was obligatory on them, if required by the shareholder who was desirous of selling, to take them at a price to be ascertained in a manner prescribed by the provisions of the deed: it appeared to him this was a case in which the plaintiff had no power to give the shares which formed the subject of the suit; that the Court had power to make a decree on this part of the case to this effect, viz.—that the defendant indemnifying the plaintiff, he might have leave to take such proceedings in his name as he might think fit for the purpose of compelling a retransfer of his shares. With regard to the other part of the case, all he could do was to declare that the defendant was bound to indemnify the plaintiff against all liabilities properly incurred by him as holder of the shares from the time at which they were transferred to him. He would not decide, in the present stage of the cause, what sums had been properly incurred; upon the other part of the case, the defendant indemnifying the plaintiff in respect to cost, he might take such proceedings as he might be advised, in the name of the defendant, in resisting those proceedings to which at present the plaintiff was liable at the suit of the shareholders who had recovered the judgment. It had been contended, that in the case of a trustee and his cestui que trust, the former could not come into court until he had been actually damaged; and if he had been compelled to make a payment, he might then and there only ask to be indemnified: he could not accede to that proposition: if there were pending liabilities, he was not bound to wait. In the case of a judgment recovered against the public officer of a company, the shareholder, who was primâ facie liable, had a right to come in at that stage of the proceedings to be indemnified in the way suggested. It would be for the defendant and his counsel, during the vacation, to consider the expediency of an inquiry before the Master, for the purpose of inquiring what liabilities had been properly incurred. And the case was ordered to stand over until the first day of causes in Michaelmas Term.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Monday, June 9.

MAYFIELD v. ROBINSON.

An written agreement, unsealed, to lease a ferry, which is an incorporeal hereditament, cannot operate as a demise or a grant, and therefore is admissible in evidence although it be unstamped.

This was a motion for a new trial, on the ground that a certain document was admitted in evidence without a stamp, which consisted of a written agreement, dated April 14, 1801, to lease the Dog Dyke Ferry for 6*l.* per annum, payable at certain intervals, the last of which was in 1808, to which agreement a provision was attached that the lessee should purchase the ferry-boat for 20*l.*

Whitehurst, Q.C. shewed cause.—This agreement requires no stamp whatever. The contract about the boat is clearly within the Statute of Frauds; and where one part of a double agreement requires no stamp, there need be none. [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—Is there an authority for that, Mr. Whitehurst? We held otherwise lately in Walton v. Wharton.] The other agreement requires no stamp. It is an agreement to rent an incorporeal hereditament, for such is a ferry, and that can alone be demised by a deed, the agreement quoad the ferry therefore is void. (Forsyth v. Jervis, 1 Stark. 47; Heron v. Granger, 5 Espin. 269; Marson v. Short, 2 Bing. N. C. 118; Maury v. Duke, 2 M. & Ry. 121.)

Hall, Q.C. contrà.—It is clear there must be a grant of an incorporeal hereditament, for there can be no feoffment. [Coleridge, J.—You cannot demise a right of way; it will not pass.] Here was an employment of the ferry under the agreement until the term expired, and therefore I submit that agreement operated as a demise, and must be so taken. The principal object of the instrument was the letting of the ferry; the other part is ancillary to it, for the boat belonged to the ferry. (South v. Winch, 3 Bing. N. C. 506; Chanter v. Dickenson, 5 M. & Gr.) Some stamp then was clearly requisite, and there being none, the document was inadmissible, and ought not to have been received in evidence.

Waddington.—This is an entire and a very special agreement. The primary object is to give the use of the ferry, to which is attached a provision that the party is to have the ferry-boat, and to pay for it by instalments. The grant of an incorporeal hereditament can alone be by deed under seal. This is not so, and is a mere agreement. Where there is an entire agreement, and the first part relates not to sale of goods, but the latter part does, which is ancillary to the other, the agreement is not within the exception of the Act. The case, therefore, falls within the principle of South v. Winch, and the other cases are all cited in Chanter v. Dickenson.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Denman, C. J.—This case was tried before my Lord Chief Justice, at Lincoln. An exception was taken to the admission of an unstamped document. It was an instrument under seal, which purported to lease the tolls of a ferry, and the obligation was that they were to be leased from year to year, at six guineas a year; and the instrument also contained a memorandum of the sale of the ferry-boat for 20*l*. It was argued that this was lease requiring a stamp, being above 5*l*. a year; but we are clearly of opinion that it cannot be sidered as a lease so as to require a stamp, because it cannot operate as a lease, being a grant by an unsealed instrument, or an attempt to grant by any unsealed instrument of an incorporeal hereditament. We think, therefore, it is not liable as a lease; we also think that it is not liable as an agreement, because the boat which is said to be sold is wholly unimportant; in fact, the sale of the boat is a bygone transaction, and, besides, it is a sale of goods, and therefore exempt from all stamp whatever. It was argued that it was not a sale of goods, because it might be considered as ancillary to the ferry, and therefore is part of the grant; so that the value might be raised to eighteen guineas, three years' rent at six guineas a year, and to 20*l*. supposing that those two could be added together. We think they cannot; that it was not sold as ancillary to the grant of the ferry, which was a primary object of the undertaking, but that it was a distinct thing altogether; and that the instrument is not subject to a stamp as a lease, and therefore the Lord Chief Justice was right in admitting it, and the rule in that case will be discharged.

Hanmer v. Eyton.

This was a motion for a new trial argued in Easter Term, by Kelly, Q. C. and Butt, Q. C. on one side, and Jervis, Q. C. contrà. The facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment delivered at the sittings after Trinity Term.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Denman, C.J.—In this case the question is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages as reversioners, in respect of coals under the river Dee, that might have been gotten, but for the act of the defendant in drowning the mine. Now the lease put in, made by the plaintiff to Howell and Company, clearly does not extend to these coals, for it demises only the coals under the land beneath the head of the river Dee, not covered by it. No evidence whatever was given as to the title of the plaintiff to the land covered by the river Dee, or to the coal under it. Primâ facie the title would be in the Crown, for it appears that the river Dee is in that part of it an estuary where the tide flows and reflows. But it appears that, under the plaintiff's lease, the defendant extended their working beyond the limits of the river and under the river, and the plaintiff had received rent for the coals gotten by those extended works. We are asked to consider these facts as being sufficient for the reversionary interest as against the defendants, who mere wrong-doers, and possibly there may be such evidence in respect of those coals which are already worked, and for which rent was paid, but we do not see how it can be any evidence of possession in the lessee, or the the reversionary interest in the plaintiff in respect of those coals which remained unworked on the part of the freehold. At the time the mine was drowned, there was no distinct demise of the mine as such, nor of the coal under the Dee; however, we cannot understand how the evidence of the plaintiff lessee having got the coal by trespass on the Crown, and the plaintiff's having received rent for the coals so gotten, can entitle the plaintiff to damages, for an act by which the plaintiff's lessee has been prevented continuing any trespass further, and paying a further sum as part of the fruits of such trespass. The damages were assessed at 4,613*l*. on one supposition; that is, they were given in respect of coals under the river, which were not gotten, not separated from the freehold, but which might have been gotten if the further working of the mine had not been prevented. There was another supposition made on which another sum was given, but we unfortunately do not see that it must be either the one or the other of those sums, and we do not find materials to fix what other sum might be the proper amount of the damages. Therefore, we see no other course to take than that there should be a new trial.

Friday, July 4.

Simons v. Peacock.

An attorney in the country employed by the solicitor of one of the departments of the Government (ex. gr. the Post Office) in carrying on a Government prosecution, is an agent to such solicitor, and his bill of costs is not therefore taxable under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73 s. 37.

Lush, in Trinity Term (June 11), applied in the Bail Court for a rule to rescind an order of Mr. Justice Wightman, referring the plaintiff's bill to taxation.

H. Hill shewed cause in the first instance.—The question was simply whether an attorney in the country employed by the solicitor of one of the Government departments to conduct a prosecution was an agent to such solicitor in such prosecution within the rule laid down in Gedge v. Elgie, decided in last Easter Term (May 8). As the facts and arguments are sufficiently set forth in the judgment, we omit them here.

JUDGMENT.

Coleridge, J. delivered judgment as follows:—There was a case of Simons against Peacock argued before me in the Bail Court. It was a rule to rescind an order for taking an attorney's bill on the prosecution of an individual in South Wales for forgery, in which the Postmaster-General was prosecutor. The defendant, Mr. Peacock, is an attorney, and as attorney for the Post Office he had appointed the plaintiff his agent. It appeared he had himself prepared the briefs, and in some other matters directly interfered with the conduct of the prosecution in those parts, as it was alleged, from which the greatest possible profit would be derivable to the attorney of the prosecution. The plaintiff's bill charged the defendant, not with the proportion merely of the whole charges, as usual with attorney and agent, but with the full amount. These are the facts. Upon this state of facts, the question is, whether this bill is taxable, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37. In Easter Term last, the case of Gedge v. Elgie was heard before me; I there determined that an agent's bill remained not liable to taxation since the passing of this statute, as it was before. The present case was brought before me, and Mr. Peacock and Mr. Hugh Hill distinctly stated there was no desire to question the law as I there laid it down. The case was argued on the assumption that an agent's bill was not taxable in the Common Law Courts, and the only question made was, whether the present was to be considered an agent's bill. I desired to state this distinctly; not as inviting reconsideration of that decision, but as wishing not in any way to interpose any difficulty to its examination by the full court on any future occasion. The question, therefore, now to be decided is one of fact; and it seems to me that whether Simons was agent only in that somewhat technical meaning of the word, as the principal attorney, cannot depend so much on the rate of his charges or the work he performed as upon the relation which Mr. Peacock bore to the prosecutor. If the prosecutor employed Mr. Peacock to conduct this prosecution, in the course of which this work was done, and if Mr. Peacock, residing in London, and doing himself such part of the work as could be performed in London, delegated to Mr. Simons, residing in the country, such part as could be performed there, because he does not choose to leave London to perform it himself, it seems to me, in the sense before mentioned, Mr. Peacock must be considered as the principal, and, by consequence, Mr. Simons Mr. Peacock's agent, and here that is clearly the case. The work was to be done literally for the Postmaster-General, and he is liable for the whole. Between him and Mr. Simons there was no contract whatever. Mr. Simons, therefore, worked as the servant; in other words, as the agent of Mr. Peac[illegible] Mr. Simons has, indeed, chosen to make the same charges upon Mr. Peacock as Mr. Peacock would make upon the Postmaster-General, therefore not sharing but absorbing the whole of the profits; and although this is unusual, this cannot alter the [illegible]aracter of the service. It may be only a reason why the jury may, upon trial, disallow some portion of his demand. Adopting, therefore, the construction of the statute laid down in the case I mentioned, I think this rule must be made absolute.

Belcher and Others, Assignees of Chapple, v. Campbell.

This was an action of trover for six bills of exchange, to which the defendants had pleaded, Not guilty and not possessed. The verdict was found for the plaintiff, with leave to move for a nonsuit, and subsequently the facts were turned into a special case. All the material points being stated in the judgment, we shall not give the argument. It was argued in Easter Term by Willes (with whom was the Solicitor-General), for the plaintiff, and H. Hill, for the defendant.

The following cases were cited: Brind v. Hampshire (1 M. & W. 365); Williams v. Everett (14 East, 596); Dean v. James (1 A. & E. 809); Ex parte Munroe (Buck, 300); Ex parte Arkwright (3 M. D. & D. 129); Tibbits v. George (5 A. & E. 107); Burn v. Carralho (1 A. & E. 883); Gwinnell v. Herbert (5 A. & E. 636). Cur. adv. vult.

At the sittings after Trinity Term, judgment was given as follows by Lord Denman, C.J.—This was an action of trover brought by the assignees of George Chapple, a bankrupt, against the defendants, to recover six bills of exchange drawn by the bankrupt upon and accepted by W. F. Sweatland, payable to their order, and all but one indorsed by the bankrupt to the defendant. The pleas were, first, not guilty; secondly, the defendants were not possessed of the bills; and a verdict was given for the plaintiff, with leave for the defendants to move for a nonsuit. The facts were afterwards stated on a case. It appears the bankrupt being indebted to the defendants, and being pressed for security in the beginning of July 1842, delivered to them a promissory note made by Sweetland, dated 30th of June, 1840, for 1,000*l*. payable to the bankrupt only, by instalments, but less than 100*l*. on or before June 30, 1840, which note was not negotiable. The defendants, a few days afterwards, requested the bankrupt to persuade Sweetland to exchange the note for a negotiable bill, and gave him the note to get it so exchanged. Sweetland assented to the proposal, and on the 9th day of July, 1842, the bankrupt drew the bills in question in this case, which Sweetland accepted; and the bankrupt indorsed all but one, and left them with Sweetland, desiring him to hand them over. On the same day the bankrupt went to France, and thereby committed an act of bankruptcy, of his intention to do which he had informed Sweetland the day before, but the defendant knew nothing of it. Sweetland afterwards handed the bills over to the defendants, on having an indemnity given him; and on these facts the question is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the bills, or a nonsuit ought to be entered. We agree with the learned counsel for the plaintiff that Sweetland cannot be considered as an agent for the defendant; no communication took place between them prior to the bankruptcy, nor has Sweetland done any act by which he has engaged to deliver or hold to their use the bills in question. The case stands in the same position as if the bills had been in the actual possession of the bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy, but we do not think the bills can on that account be said to be in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt, by the consent of the defendants, the true owners, within the meaning of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 72, because they were substituted for the note of 1,000*l*., and any fact or argument applicable to that note is applicable to them. Now that note was placed in the possession of the bankrupt by the defendants for a specific purpose—that of being exchanged for the bills in question, which bills, or if not the bills then a note (if no such bills were given) was manifestly intended to be handed over to the defendant; therefore neither the note nor the bills would, by reason of their being in the hands of the bankrupt, come within the 72nd section. But it was argued that a note, being negotiable, is like a payment of a debt, and therefore it would come within that section, notwithstanding the delivery of the note to the defendant, unless it appear that Sweetland had notice of such delivery, and therefore that the plaintiffs would be entitled to have the note, even if it had remained in the defendants' hands at the time of the bankruptcy, and consequently they are entitled to substitute the bills under the circumstances stated in the case. It is argued, that no formal notice was given to Sweetland, and that the knowledge of the delivery of the note to the defendants is not brought home to him; but it seems hardly probable that he should not have been informed of that when the bankrupt was persuading him to give a negotiable security in lieu of the note; and we doubt whether that point was intended to be raised by the case, for there is no statement that it was. All the facts are consistent with the absence of such notice. We feel it therefore difficult, if not impossible, to say this objection must not prevail. If it be agreed by the parties that the notice was given, we are clearly of opinion the nonsuit ought to be entered. If, on the other hand, it is agreed no notice was given, we think that the verdict ought to stand for the plaintiff. We do not think this case is one that comes within the principle of Gibson v. Overbury (7 M. & W. 555); but if the fact of notice or no notice be not agreed on, we think there ought to be a new trial. It is highly desirable that should be done, in order that what is now done may be final.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Wednesday, July 2.

COOK v. HENSON.

The statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 10, enables the defendant to plead generally his discharge under a final order for protection and distribution, without setting forth all the proceedings necessary to give jurisdiction.

The declaration in this action was in assumpsit against the defendant, as acceptor of two several bills of exchange, of which the plaintiff was indorsee.

The defendant, amongst other pleas, pleaded that before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c. a petition for the protection of the defendant from process was duly, and according to the form of the statute in such case made, presented by the defendant to her Majesty's Court of Bankruptcy, and that afterwards, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c. a final order for protection and distribution was made in the matter of the said petition by Joshua Evans, esq. then being a commissioner of the said Court of Bankruptcy, duly authorized in that behalf; and that the moneys and causes of action in the declaration mentioned, and every of them and every part thereof, were contracted before the date of filing the said petition.—Verification.

To this plea there was a special demurrer, assigning the following grounds:—That the same does not set forth with sufficient particularity the presenting of the said petition for such protection as therein mentioned, nor how the defendant prayed to be protected; nor does it state or in any way shew whether the defendant was a trader or not, or, if a trader, whether his debts amounted to less than 300*l.*; nor that the defendant had resided within the district of the London Court of Bankruptcy twelve months next before the presenting of the said petition, or next before the making of the said order or otherwise; nor where he ever resided; and also for that the said plea doth not allege or in any way shew that the defendant gave such notice as by the statute in such case made and provided is mentioned and required; and also for that the proceedings upon the said petition, until the giving of the said final order and the said order of the said commissioner, should have been stated and set forth with greater minuteness and particularity, and the Court thereby have been enabled to judge of its efficiency; and that the said plea does not shew that the said order was for the protection of the defendant or for the distribution of his effects; and that the said plea is in other respects too general and insufficient, &c.

Dowling, Serjt. in support of the demurrer contended that the 10th section of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, did not authorize the general form of plea which the defendant had pleaded. It should have been shewn that the petition presented was such as the first section of the Act required, and that the other requisites of that section had been complied with, and reliance was made on the case of Leaf v. Robson (2 Dow. & Lowndes, 646).

Channell, Serj. contrà, submitted that the plea was good. The plea in Leaf v. Robson was held bad, because it did not follow either the 4th or 10th section, and Parke, B. there said, "It should either follow the very words of the 10th section, or it must fully set out the proceedings, and so shew that the requisites of the statute have been complied with." That case therefore, it was submitted, was no authority that the 10th section had not given a general form of plea.

Dowling, Serjt. in reply, contended that there was nothing in the language of the 10th section to shew that a general form of plea might be pleaded, and that the 10th section in that respect essentially differed from the 126th section of the Bankrupt Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, where it is enacted that the bankrupt "may plead in general that the cause of action accrued before he became bankrupt." The case of Fisher v. Gibbon (9 Jurist, 405) was also referred to as an authority that the Court of Exchequer had expressed an opinion that the 10th section did not give a general form of plea. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—When the question arising on this record was argued before us, we were informed that the Court of Exchequer had recently pronounced judgment on the very point in the case of Fisher v. Gibbon. We have made inquiry respecting the case, and find the same point was raised there as in the present case, and the Court having intimated an opinion, the defendant's counsel, without arguing the question, asked leave to amend; consequently the case in question cannot be considered as a decision on the point. It appears to us, the 10th section 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, gives the right to plead generally in the manner adopted by the defendant in this case, for power is given to the commissioner by the early sections of the Act to inquire into the matters of the petition and adjudicate upon them, and to make a final order for protection and distribution if he thinks fit so to do; and it seems to us that it was the intention of the legislature to make his decision final, and not capable of being controverted in an action, especially as by the 12th section any creditor or assignee is enabled to petition the commissioner to rescind the final order so far as relates to the protection of the petitioner's person from process, and so far as relates to the effect of such order in bar of suits and actions. If, then, the decision of the commissioner is not to be controverted, there can be no reason for requiring the plea to set forth all the facts necessary to give jurisdiction, and it is reasonable to allow, under the section in question, the same form of plea as is given in somewhat more express terms by the Bankrupt Act, the 6 Geo. 4, c. 116, s. 126. The words there used are, that the bankrupt, having obtained a certificate, "may plead in general that the cause of action accrued before he became bankrupt, and may give this Act and the special matter in evidence; and such bankrupt's certificate and the allowance thereof shall be sufficient evidence of the trading, bankruptcy, commission, and other proceedings precedent to the obtaining such certificate." The section now in question enacts that "it shall be a sufficient plea in bar of the said suit or action, that such petition was duly presented, and a final order for protection and distribution made by [the com]missioner duly authorized, whereof the production of the order signed by the commissioner, with proof of his handwriting, shall be sufficient evidence;" and although the two sections are not identical in terms, we think the plea now under consideration contains all the latter statute requires in order to constitute a sufficient plea in bar of a suit; our judgment therefore must be for the defendant. Judgment for defendant.

STEADMAN v. DUHAMEL.

In an action by an indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange which purports to be drawn abroad, the defendant may give evidence of its having been drawn in England to shew that it was void for want of an inland stamp.

This was an action by an indorsee against the acceptor of the following bill of exchange:—

"Vichy, 10 Octobre, 1843.

"Pour Liv. st. 58 8.

"A trois mois de date payez à mon ordre la somme de cinquante huit livres st. huit sch., valeur en marchandises et que passerez.

"A Messrs. Duhamel. "G. GUICHARD."

The bill was accepted by the defendant, and indorsed to Baron and Co. and, after several other indorsees, ultimately to the plaintiff. At the trial the defendant gave evidence of the bill, though purporting to be a foreign bill, having, in fact, been drawn in England, and then objected that the bill required an inland stamp. A verdict was found for the plaintiff for 58*l.* 8*s.* leave being given to the defendant to move to set the same aside, and enter instead a nonsuit. A rule nisi having been accordingly obtained to that effect,

Byles, Serjt. now shewed cause.—It is submitted that the defendant was estopped from setting up this objection, and that as the bill was, on the face of it, properly stamped, it was sufficient. (Williams v. Jarrett, 5 B. & Ad. 32.) The case of Jordaine v. Lashbrooke and Another (7 T. R. 601) is distinguishable from this, as it was not there found that the defendant knew of or was party to the fraud. In Pickard v. Sears (6 Ad. & Ell. 469), it is said by Lord Denman, "the rule of law is clear, that where one by [hi]s words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain [state] of things [and in]duces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things existing at the same time;" and to the same effect are Gregg v. Wells (10 A. & E. 90) and Pitt v. Chappelow (8 M. & W. 617). The only reason here for holding a different rule can be on account of the revenue; but it is submitted that that would be better protected by not allowing than by permitting this defence to be set up.

Channell, Serjt. contrà, contended that the question was not at all as to estoppel, but entirely as to what the law had laid down for the protection of the revenue, and that the cases Field v. Wood (7 Ad. & E. 114) and Jordaine v. Lashbrooke were expressly in favour of the defendant raising the objection, notwithstanding his being a party to the fraud. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered judgment as follows:—In this case a verdict was given for the plaintiff for 58*l.* 8*s.* with leave reserved to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit. The action was brought upon a bill of exchange, drawn by one Guichard in London, upon the defendant, who was also living in London, and who accepted it there; but it was dated at Vichy, in France, and appeared therefore upon the face of it to be a foreign bill of exchange. This date was put to it at the request of the defendant, and the plaintiff was the indorsee for value, without notice that the bill had been drawn in England, and the only point argued before us was whether, the bill being in the hands of an innocent indorsee with value, the defendant was estopped or not from setting up as a defence that it was an inland bill, and therefore was bad for want of the stamp. The objection is strictly and properly an objection to be made by the Court, whenever it should appear on the trial that the instrument was not properly stamped. By the statute 31 Geo. 3, c. 25, it is enacted that no bill or note liable to the duties imposed by the Stamp Act "shall be pleaded or given in evidence in any court, or admitted in any court to be good, useful, or available in law or equity," unless stamped, which principle is incorporated in the late Act. The doctrine of estoppel of the party is not therefore in strictness applicable to the present case. And in the case of Field v. Woods (7 A. & E. 114), [i]t was assumed by the Court that in an action against the maker of a forged cheque, though the person became the lawful bearer, it shall be competent to the defendant to avail himself of the objection, and treat what must be treated as useless, being without a [s]tamp. We are unable to see any ground, on principle [o]r authority, on which a defendant is prevented from [t]aking the objection, or the Court from giving effect to [i]t; we therefore think the rule for entering a nonsuit must be made absolute. Rule absolute.

RAWLINGS v. BELL and ANOTHER.

[T]he plaintiff, a broker, having incurred damage by distraining for rent under a warrant signed by a married woman, brought an action against the husband and wife for falsely representing that the wife had a right to distrain for the rent:—Held, that as there could be no retainer of the plaintiff by the wife, nor contract by her to indemnify, the action would not lie without proof of the representation being made by the wife with knowledge of its being false, or with an intention to deceive.

Action on the case.

The declaration stated that the defendants heretofore, to wit, on, &c. did represent and affirm to the plaintiff that the defendant, Jane, was lawfully and of right entitled to seize and distrain the goods and chattels then being in and upon a messuage, tenement, and premises, being the Rose and Crown public-house in Clare-court, Clare-market, in the county of Middlesex, for a certain sum of money, to wit, 39*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* which the defendants then represented and affirmed to the plaintiff to be due from one James Augustus Lamb to the defendant Jane, for the rent of the said message, tenement, and premises, and the defendants then requested the plaintiff to seize and distrain the goods and chattels then being on the said messuage, tenement, and premises, as bailiff of the defendant, Ja[ne], for the said pretended arrears of rent, and then [re]tained and employed him as such bailiff; and the plaintiff avers that, confiding in the said representation and affirmation of the defendants, and believing the same to be true, and not knowing to the contrary, he, the plaintiff, did afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, as bailiff of the defendant, Jane, under and by virtue of the said retainer and employment, seize and distrain as a distress for the said pretended arrears of rent, certain goods and chattels of Phillip E. Dover of great value, to wit, 150*l.* then found and being in and upon the said messuage, tenement, and premises; and the plaintiff relying on the said representation and affirmation, and believing the same to be true, and not knowing the contrary, as such bailiff, and under and by virtue of the said retainer and employment, then impounded the said goods and chattels so distrained [a]s aforesaid, and detained the same so impound[ed] from thence until afterwards, to wit, on the 22nd day of December, in the year aforesaid, when John Kinnersley Hooper, esquire, and Jeremiah Pilcher, esquire, then being sheriff of the county of Middlesex, as such sheriff, upon the complaint of the said Phillip E. Dover, and upon the said Phillip E. Dover giving bond to the said sheriff, conditioned to prosecute his suit of replevin against the plaintiff for taking and detaining the said goods and chattels, caused the said goods and chattels to be replevied and delivered to the said Phillip E. Dover; and the said Phillip E. Dover afterwards, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, in the county court of the said sheriff in and for the said county of Middlesex, levied his plaint against the now plaintiff in an action of replevin, for taking and unjustly detaining the said goods and chattels, and prosecuted the same against the now plaintiff, in the said county court, and in the court of our Lady the Queen, before her justices at Westminster, into which the same was duly removed, until afterwards, to wit, on the 24th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1844, when the said Phillip E. Dover, by the consideration and judgment of the last-mentioned Court, recovered against the now plaintiff, in the said action of replevin, 62*l.* 9*s.* which in and by the said Court were adjudged to the said Phillip E. Dover, for his damages which he had sustained, as well by reason of the taking and unjustly detaining the said goods and chattels, as for his costs and charges by him about his suit in that behalf expended; and the plaintiff further avers that he, relying on the said representation and affirmation of the defendants, and believing the same to be true, and not knowing to the contrary, with the authority, and at the request of the defendants, heretofore, to wit on the 22nd day of December, in the year of our Lord 1842, duly appeared to and defended the said action in the said county court, and afterwards, to wit, on the 12th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1843, believing as aforesaid, and at the like request of the defendants, duly appeared to and defended the said action in the said court of our lady the Queen, before her justices at Westminster, and pleaded and made divers cognizances therein for the said pretended arrears of rent, at the like request of the defendants, he, the plaintiff, during all the time aforesaid, believing and relying on the said representation and affirmation, whereas in truth and in fact, the defendants deceived the plaintiff in this, to wit, that the defendant Jane was not, at the time of making the said representation and affirmation, or at the time of the said distress, entitled to seize and distrain any goods or chattels in or upon the said messuage, tenement, or premises, for the said sum of money, or any part thereof, nor had she any right, title, or authority to distrain upon the said messuage, tenement, and premises, or any part thereof, or to authorize or direct the said distress; by means of which said several premises the plaintiff was forced and obliged to and did, afterwards, to wit on the 8th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1845, necessarily pay to the said Phillip E. Dover a large sum of money, to wit, 66*l.* for the damages recovered in the said action of replevin, and for interest thereon, and for the costs and expenses of issuing certain writs of execution against the goods and chattels of the plaintiff; and the plaintiff was also, by means of the premises, put to great inconvenience, and sustained great loss, and was unable for a long time to attend to his necessary affairs and business, the said Philip E. Dover having issued a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum against the plaintiff, upon the said judgment, and threatened and endeavoured to arrest and imprison him thereon, to the plaintiff's damage, &c. The defendants pleaded three pleas, the first being, Not guilty, and the only one necessary here to mention. At the trial before Alderson, B. at the last Kingston Spring Assizes, it appeared that the defendant, Mrs. Bell, requested the plaintiff, a broker, to distrain for arrears of rent due in respect of the Rose and Crown public-house, which she had let to Lamb. Mrs. Bell alone signed the warrant, but the other defendant, her husband, was present at the time. The warrant represented the rent to be due to the wife. The plaintiff accordingly, and in company with both the defendants, went to the premises and there distrained for the rent. Dover, who was an under-tenant, afterwards replevied, and the replevin suit was tried in February 1844, when a verdict was found for Dover against the now plaintiff for 62*l.* 9*s.* which he was afterwards compelled to pay. The present action was brought to recover damages for the injury the plaintiff had so sustained in making the distress. No evidence being given of any fraud on the part of the defendants, or knowledge that the representation in the warrant was false, the learned judge directed a verdict to be found for the defendants on the first issue, with liberty to the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict instead for 66*l.* if the Court should think that, under the circumstances, the action was maintainable. A rule nisi having been accordingly obtained, Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause.—Supposing the warrant to be taken to be a representation by the wife that she had a right to distrain, still she would not be liable unless she knew it to a false representation. In Adamson v. Jarvis (4 Bing. 66) there was an authority to sell given by the defendant; and in Toplis v. Grane (5 Bing. N. C. 136) the defendant gave an indemnity, and so there was one implied in Humphreys v. Pratt (5 Bligh, 154). Here there can be no such contract by the wife, and without fraud it is a tort so connected with contract that she cannot, it is submitted, be liable.

Channell, Serjt. (Petersdorff with him), contrà.—It is submitted that the evidence sufficiently shewed that the representation was made by both the defendants, and that there can be no objection to suing the husband and wife jointly, if it appears that they have jointly committed a tort. (Lue v. Saunders, 5 Scott, 359.) The principle on which Humphreys v. Pratt was decided was, that there the defendant had made the sheriff his mandatory (Collins v. Evans, 13 Law J. Q.B. 180); so here the two defendants made the plaintiffs their mandatory, if they can jointly commit a tort, and it was not therefore necessary that the representations should have been false to the knowledge of either. In Evans v. Collins cited in a note to Wilson v. Fuller, 3 Q.B. 79), Lord Denman says, "One of two persons has suffered by the conduct of the other. The sufferer is wholly free from blame; but the party who caused his loss, though charged neither with fraud nor with negligence, must have been guilty of some fault when he made a false representation." Betts v. Gibbins (2 A. & E. 57) was also cited. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C.J. delivered the judgment of the Court. In this case the plaintiff declared against the defendants in an action upon the case for a tort, stating in the declaration that the two defendants had represented and affirmed to the plaintiff that the defendant Jane was lawfully and of right entitled to seize and distrain the goods and chattels then being on certain premises, for certain rent which the defendants falsely represented and affirmed to the plaintiff to be due to the defendant Jane, and that the defendants had employed the plaintiff as bailiff to distrain for the rent. The declaration then states an action of replevin, and that judgment had been given against the now plaintiff, who had paid the amount of damages recovered in replevin, and which he had been obliged to pay; and the declaration negatived the truth of the representations of the defendants. A plea of not guilty was pleaded, amongst other pleas. At the trial of the cause before Alderson, B. the evidence was that Rawlings got a blank warrant and filled it up, and Mrs. Bell signed and gave it to him, and that she made no representation of her right to distrain other than was to be inferred from her signing the warrant. On this state of facts the learned judge directed the jury not to find for the plaintiff on the first issue, unless they were satisfied that the statement that was given when the plaintiff was employed to distrain was a false and fraudulent representation, at the same time giving the plaintiff leave to move to enter a verdict for 66*l.* if the Court should be of opinion that the omission to state all the circumstances when signing the warrant made it a false representation, and a falsehood, without fraud, which was sufficient to support a verdict. On the part of the plaintiff it was contended that the falsehood of the statement was sufficient to maintain an action, although it was made without any intention to mislead, and without any knowledge it was false. But it seems to us that a statement false in facts, but not false to the knowledge of the party making it, nor made with any intention to deceive, will not support an action, unless, from the nature of the dealings between the parties, a contract to indemnify can be inferred. In this case the right to maintain an action results from the alleged assertion by the wife that she had a right to distrain; but there could be no retainer of the plaintiff to distrain given by the wife, nor any contract by her to indemnify the plaintiff, and her representation, therefore, being made honestly and without knowledge of its falsehood, was not sufficient to give a right to an action. The plaintiff has endeavoured to get out of the difficulty that existed as to his maintaining an action from the implied contract to indemnify, by the declaration of a tort; but, in the absence of any such contract, we think it was essential to the maintenance of the action in its present form, that the falsehood of the representation should have been known to the party making it. We are of opinion the direction of the learned judge was right, and that the verdict was also right, and the rule for entering a verdict for the plaintiff must be discharged.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Friday, August 1.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE.)

Re JACOB.

The Court will not discharge an insolvent out of custody on filing his petition, where it appears he has omitted several debts from his schedule.

This insolvent was in custody; he had filed his petition and schedule in this court, and given notice, as required by the rules of the court, to the detaining creditor of his intention to apply for his discharge.

Lucas, for the detaining creditor, opposed the discharge. The insolvent, at the time a portion of the debts in his schedule were contracted, was an auctioneer, and, as such, a trader within the meaning of the Bankrupt Laws. The debts set out in the insolvent's schedule amounted to 250*l.*; and it appeared upon the examination of the insolvent that there were several debts omitted from his schedule, amounting to more than 50*l.* which would make the aggregate of debts over 300*l.* and would therefore take this case out of the operation of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96.

His HONOUR said—I shall not make an order for the discharge of the insolvent. He must amend his schedule by inserting the debts he has omitted, and take care he inserts them correctly before he swears to his schedule. When he has amended his schedule and given fresh notice, he can come up again.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Serjt. STEPHEN.)

Re BUSH.

The Court will not punish an insolvent for immorality, unless it can be shewn that creditors have been injured by it.

Description of insolvent in petition.

This was the day for the first examination of insolvent, who was described in his petition as a tiler and plasterer and marine store dealer in Bristol, giving the number of his house and the street.

On his examination, he admitted that he was living as man and wife with a woman to whom he was not married, whilst his own wife was living within a few doors, in the same street, with another man, as his wife; that insolvent carried on the business of a tiler and plasterer, and that the woman who lived with him managed the marine store business, and her name was over the door.

Homes, for creditors, objected (amongst other matters) that so immoral a character as insolvent, who was living in open adultery with a woman whom he maintained, was not an object for the protection of the Court. He contended that his Honour was not limited to the grounds of opposition named in 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 24, but might punish for immorality. (Re Davison, 4 Law T. 232.)

His HONOUR.—Have the creditors been injured by the insolvent's immorality? Has he, by immoral means, incurred any debts which he cannot pay? If so, I might dismiss the petition; but I do not think we have any thing to do with conduct not affecting the creditors in any way.

Homes then objected that insolvent had not fully described his trade in the petition; the name of the woman with whom he lived was over the shop door, and insolvent should have described himself as carrying on such business under that name. Creditors of the insolvent's marine store may have been deceived, and are probably ignorant of this petitioner's coming to the court.

His HONOUR.—Are there such creditors? The insolvent appears to owe no debts besides two large ones for the costs of an action in which he was unsuccessful.

The insolvent then swore that he had not incurred any debts as a marine store dealer, and the woman who managed the business swore that there were no debts incurred in the business, every thing being paid for on delivery in cash.

His HONOUR.—There was no fraud in this case; the woman's name was put over the door to save insolvent's goods from liability on account of his wife, not to prevent seizure for any debt of his own—he has never incurred a debt in that name. The number of the house, the street, and the nature of the trade, are all given in the petition, and I think the requisites of the statute complied with.

Insolvent remanded on other grounds.

Re CROUCH.

Alteration in the form of petition.

In the form of petition prescribed by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, occurs the following allegation: "that he verily believes such estate is of the value of £ at the least, unincumbered."

This insolvent had in his petition in the blank inserted the word "nothing," and had struck out the words "at the least, unincumbered."

Brooke Smith, solicitor, opposed the insolvent. The Act requires the petition to be in a certain form, and directs (sec. 2) that for any variation from the form prescribed, the petition must be dismissed. This insolvent's petition is not in the form prescribed, the words "at the least, unincumbered, property omitted. The petitioner may have some " being that is incumbered.

His HONOUR.—The words were properly omitted. How can nothing be incumbered?

Hearing adjourned.

Exeter, July 23.

(Before Mr. Baron PLATT.)

REG. v. KING and BRADDON.

Witness—Lord Denman's Act.

A prisoner jointly indicted with another, and pleading guilty, may be called as a witness for the prosecution.

Prisoners were indicted for sheep-stealing. Prisoner King pleaded guilty, and was removed from the bar without judgment being passed, to wait the result of the trial of his accomplice.

Tyrrel and Greenwood, for the prosecution, proposed to call the prisoner King, who had pleaded guilty, as a witness for the Crown. Until sentence passed, the prisoner was not infamous. This was expressly decided in the case of Reg. v. George and Ford (1 C. & M. 111), in which A and B were jointly charged, in the same indictment, with breaking into the house of J. H. and stealing his goods. A pleaded guilty, and the plea was recorded, but no sentence was passed. B wished to call A as witness for him, and it was held that he might do so. And even, if he should be deemed infamous, that objection is removed by Lord Denman's Act.

Slade, for the prisoner Braddon, contended that King was a party on the record, and as such was an incompetent witness. Stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1 (Lord Denman's Act) removed incapacity from crime or interest "on the trial of any issue joined, or of any matter or question, or on any inquiry arising in any suit, action, or proceeding, civil or criminal, in any court, or before any judge, jury, sheriff, coroner, magistrate, officer, or person, being by law, or by consent of parties, authorized to hear, receive, and examine evidence; but that every person so offered may and shall be admitted to give evidence on oath or solemn affirmation, in those cases wherein affirmation is by law receivable; notwithstanding that such person may or shall have an interest in the matter in question, or in the event of the trial of any issue, matter, question, or inquiry, or of the suit, action, or proceeding in which he is offered as a witness, may have been previously convicted of any crime or offence; provided that this Act shall not render competent any party to any suit, action, or proceeding individually named on the record," &c. The witness being expressly named on the record, was, previously to the statute, incompetent from interest; and although the incapacity from infamy is removed by the statute, the incapacity from interest, as being individually named upon the record, still remains expressly excepted by the statute.

Greenwood, in reply.—The witness is not incompetent on the ground of interest as being a party on the record, because an indictment against more prisoners than one for a joint offence is several as well as joint, and one prisoner may be convicted upon it, although the others be acquitted.

His LORDSHIP (having consulted Erle, J.)—This is a point of very great importance, and I have consulted my brother Erle upon it. He agrees with me that the witness is competent. This opinion is not ours only, but it is the result of a discussion of the point with the other judges, and it is their unanimous opinion that one prisoner may be called as a witness either for or against another charged in the same indictment with a joint offence, and this upon the common law, and in accordance with the case cited, and independently of the recent statute.

SOMERSET SUMMER ASSIZES.

Bridgwater, Aug. 6.

(Before Mr. Justice ERLE.)

REG. v. SIDNEY SMITH.

Infants.

If a child between the ages of seven and fourteen years be indicted for a crime, the law raises no presumption of guilty knowledge, but it must be distinctly proved by the evidence.

Indictment for maliciously setting fire to a hayrick.

It appeared that the prisoner was a boy of the age of ten years. There was no evidence of any malicious intention.

ERLE, J. (to the jury).—Where a child is under the age of seven years, the law presumes him to be incapable of committing a crime; after the age of fourteen, he is presumed to be responsible for his actions, as entirely as if he were forty; but between the ages of seven and fourteen, no presumption of law arises at all, and that which is termed a malicious intent—a guilty knowledge that he was doing wrong—must be proved by the evidence, and cannot be presumed from the mere commission of the act. You are to determine from a review of the evidence whether it is satisfactorily proved that at the time he fired the rick (if you should be of opinion he did fire it) he had a guilty knowledge that he was committing a crime.

Not guilty.

H. T. Cole, for the prosecution.

Slade, for the prisoner.

REG. v. BRIDGES and OTHERS.

Burglary—Ownership of dwelling-house.

A. an insolvent, lived in a house taken by his daughter, who carried on a business there, in connection with her mother, for the benefit of her parents, she residing at a distance: Held, to be rightly laid as the dwelling-house of A.

Prisoners were indicted for burglary in the dwelling-house of John West.

It appeared from the evidence of the prosecutor, that he had become insolvent, and that his daughter had taken the house in which the burglary was committed, and there he and his wife lived, the latter carrying on a business in connection with the daughter, who resided many miles distant. The furniture belonged to the daughter. The prosecutor paid the taxes.

Prideaux, for the prisoner, submitted that the dwelling-house was wrongly laid in John West. It was in law the dwelling-house of his daughter, and it was occupied by West and his wife only as her servants.

ERLE, J. held it to be rightly laid as the dwelling-house of John West, the father.

Stone, for the prosecution.

Prideaux, for the prisoners.

Summary.

THE session of Parliament closes to-day. It has produced very few measures of moment to our Profession; the Small Debts Bill is probably that which, more than any other, interests the great body of practitioners, for there are few attorneys, at least, who will not be continually called upon to enforce its wholesome provisions. The three Real Property Statutes will also deserve the anxious attention of all engaged in conveyancing. It will be seen by the advertisement that arrangements have been made to add these to the series of editions of Important Statutes which has been published by the LAW TIMES.

An intimation has been given that at least an attempt will be made during the next session to codify the criminal law. The establishment of a Court of Appeal in criminal cases must be a portion of any measure having the improvement of the criminal law for its object.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

INSOLVENCIES IN SCOTLAND.—A return of the number of insolvencies, bankruptcies, and sequestrations in Scotland, in each year since 1815 to the present time, has been printed, on the motion of Mr. J. Brotherton, M.P. The total number of sequestrations awarded in the Court of Session during that period (from 1815-1816 to 1844-1845) amounts to 5,450. There is no record of insolvencies and bankruptcies that do not result in sequestration. The number of sequestrations has been most numerous of late years.

EXTENT OF PARLIAMENTARY PRINTING.—Returns have just been laid before the House of Commons which show that the average number of Acts of Parliament printed by the Queen's publisher in Ireland, in each year, from 1831 to 1844, amounted to 13,000; and that the total number of sheets filled by those Acts amounted to 50,000. There were reprinted about 8,000 Acts in folio, containing 23,000 sheets, besides 9,000 Acts reprinted in octavo, consisting of as many as 17,000 sheets. The number of Acts of Parliament distributed amongst the public in the period ranging between 1831 and 1844 amounted to about 150,000; the number supplied under the promulgation order amounted to 1,787,068; and the number supplied to the public departments to 140,044.

ARMY PRIZE MONEY.—The account of unclaimed army prize-money (formerly made by the deputy-treasurer of the Royal Chelsea Hospital), from the 18th day of January, 1809, to the 31st day of December, 1844, directed to be annually laid before both houses of Parliament by the Act of the 2nd Wm. 4, c. 52, was recently published. The debtor side of the account gives a sum total of 1,302,372*l*., of which 1,081,312*l*. accrued by cash arising from forfeited and unclaimed shares of prize-money, grants, &c., and 221,060*l*. from the dividends or interest of moneys invested in the public funds or other Government securities. The creditor side of the account gives a grand total of 1,298,253*l*., of which 670,339*l*. consisted of cash refunded to claimants, 57,618*l*. of the expenses in executing Acts from 1809 to 1844, and 570,248*l*. of sums paid for the Royal Hospital in diminution of the annual vote. A balance remains of 4,129*l*. The secretary states in a memorandum, that, although the balance appears to be as above stated, yet there is in the Three per Cent. Consols 100,000*l*. stock, invested on account of army prize-money, the interest whereof is included annually in the Parliamentary estimates, and is applicable to the payment of prize claims; and when the amount thereof, in addition to other sums received on the same account during the year, exceeds the sums paid, the Paymaster-General takes the balance as an appropriation in his account. The difference between the above balance, 4,129*l*., and the 100,000*l*. stock in the Consols, arises from the investment in that stock having been made when the funds were very low, and from the sales thereout, as occasion required, having been from time to time effected when the prices were considerably higher.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

COURTS OF LAW.

FRIDAY, Aug. 1.—Mr. C. BULLER brought up the report from the select committee appointed in reference to courts of law, and presented several petitions, one of which was from the Incorporated Law Society, in favour of the removal of the law courts from Westminster to Lincoln's Inn-fields.

MURDER OF MR. PALMER.

MONDAY, Aug. 4.—Mr. CHRISTIE wished to ask a question on a point intimately connected with the proper construction of a treaty between Brazil and this country respecting the slave-trade. The seven men who had been found guilty of the murder of Mr. Palmer on board a slaver were (he found) to be executed on Friday next. He was aware of the objection that existed to answering questions in that house respecting the exercise of the prerogative of the Crown in extending mercy to criminals under sentence of death; but the refusal of Mr. Baron Platt, who tried the prisoners, to refer the point to the judges, whether the prisoners could legally be tried and convicted for murder under the circumstances of the case, and the consideration that seven fellow creatures were sentenced to death—that the point was new, and that consequently counsel at the trial were not prepared with authorities either one way or the other, led him to think that he was justified in asking the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Home-office whether the sentence had been respited, in order that the opinion of the fifteen judges might be taken on the point to which he had referred?—Sir J. GRAHAM said, that the question put by the hon. and learned gentleman was a question of very great importance, and he could not blame the hon. and learned gentleman for coming forward as he had done. He (Sir J. Graham) had heard from Mr. Baron Platt that morning, from whom he found that he (Mr. Baron Platt), after full consultation with Mr. Justice Erle, who went the same circuit, and considering all the circumstances, and that the lives of seven men were at stake, had determined to refer the question to the judges, and he (Sir J. Graham) had the pleasure to inform the hon. and learned gentleman that a respite of the sentence had been ordered until the question should be decided.

CAP. XLII.

An Act to enable Canal Companies to become Carriers of Goods upon their Canals. (July 21, 1845.)

1. Enabling Canal Companies to carry Goods on their Canals, or Canals communicating therewith.—Whereas by divers Acts of Parliament railway companies have been empowered to convey upon their railways all such goods, wares, merchandize, articles, matters, and things as may be offered to them for that purpose, and to make such reasonable charges for such conveyance as they may from time to time determine upon: and whereas greater competition for the public advantage would be obtained if similar powers were granted to canal and navigation companies which have from time to time been incorporated or established under the authority of parliament; but such beneficial purpose cannot be effected without the authority of parliament: be it therefore enacted, that from and after the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful for the company of proprietors, trustees, or the undertakers of any canal, river, or navigation, or their respective committees, directors, or managers, or their superintendents or other agents by them duly authorized, to carry as common carriers for their own profit upon their respective canals, rivers, or navigations, or upon any railways or tramways belonging thereto, and constructed under the powers of their respective Acts of Parliament, or upon any other canals, rivers, or navigations communicating therewith, either directly or by means of any intermediate canal, river, or navigation, all such goods, wares, merchandize, articles, matters, and things as may be intrusted to them for that purpose, and for the better enabling them so to do to purchase, hire, and construct, and to use and employ, any number of boats, barges, vessels, rafts, carts, waggons, carriages, and other conveniences, and also to establish and furnish such haulage, trackage, or other means of drawing or propelling the same, either by steam, animal, or other power, or for the purpose of collecting, carrying, conveying, warehousing, and delivering such goods, wares, merchandize, articles, matters, and things, as to any such company or undertakers shall seem fit, and to make such reasonable charges for such conveyance, warehousing, collection, and delivery as they may respectively from time to time determine upon, in addition to the several tolls or dues which any such company or undertakers are now authorized to take for the use of their said canals, navigations, or railways.

2. Company to be subject to the bye-laws of any other company upon whose canal they may act as carriers.—Provided always, and be it enacted, that any such company, commissioners, trustees, or undertakers using or employing any steam power for propelling by means of paddle-wheels, boats, barges, vessels, or rafts, upon any canal, river, or navigation (other than their respective canals, rivers, and navigations), shall use and employ the same, subject to such bye-laws, rules, and regulations touching the construction, dimensions, power, rate of speed, and otherwise, of such boats, barges, vessels, or rafts so propelled by steam as aforesaid, as the directors, commissioners, or undertakers of the canals, rivers, and navigations respectively on which such last-mentioned boats, barges, vessels, or rafts shall be used and employed shall see fit to make and publish in that behalf, and they are hereby authorized and empowered to make and publish such bye-laws, rules, and regulations, and from time to time to add to or amend the same, as need may require; but it is hereby expressly provided and enacted that any bye-laws, rules, and regulations so to be made and published shall be made equally applicable to and binding on all companies and persons so using such last-mentioned boats, barges, or other vessels.

3. Canal companies may provide boats and power for hauling and tracking vessels of other persons.—It shall also be lawful for any such company, trustees, or undertakers to purchase and provide and use boats and other vessels, and also horses steam, or other power, and machinery, for hauling, tracking, and towing upon their own canals, rivers, or navigations, or upon any other canals, rivers, or navigations communicating therewith, either directly or by means of any intermediate canal, river, or navigation, and to employ a sufficient number of competent persons for those purposes, and to demand and receive for the use of such boats, and for such hauling, tracking or towing, such reasonable hire or remuneration as shall be fixed by the respective committees, directors, or managers of such canals or navigations, or as shall be agreed upon between them and any person desiring the use of any such boats or vessels, or requiring such hauling, tracking, or towing.

4. Tolls, &c. to be charged equally to all persons.—Provided always, and be it enacted, that all charges to be made by any such company for the carriage of any such goods, wares, merchandize, articles, or things, or for the use of their boats and other vessels, or for the supply of haulage, trackage, or other power, shall be at all times charged equally to all persons, and after the same rate, whether per mile, or per ton per mile, or otherwise, in respect of all goods, wares, merchandize, articles, and things, of a like description, and conveyed or propelled in a like boat or vessel at the same rate of speed, and passing along the same portion of any such canal or navigation under the like circumstances, and no reduction or advance in any of such charges shall be made, either directly or indirectly, in favour of or against any particular company or person passing along or using, or sending goods, wares, merchandize, articles, or things along the same portion of any such canal or navigation under the like circumstances.

Company may sue and be sued as carriers, and [illegible] prefer indictments.—Any canal or navigation company exercising the powers by this Act granted shall have all the same powers and remedies for recovering any sum or sums of money which shall or may become due and owing to such company as carriers, or for the use of any boats or vessels, or for the supply of any haulage, trackage, or other power, by virtue of this Act, as are given to them respectively by their said several Acts of Parliament in reference to the tolls and duties thereby made payable, or they may, at their option, sue for and recover such charges, or any part thereof, in any of the superior courts; and such company may in like manner be sued for any loss sustained by any person or persons employing the said company as carriers, or for any neglect or misconduct of such company or their servants in respect of their conduct as carriers by virtue of this Act; and such company may prosecute any indictment or other proceeding at law in respect of any offence arising or being committed in the course of such carrying or other proceeding under this Act; and it shall be sufficient if any goods or other things which are set out in any indictment shall be described and laid to be the property of the said company.

6. Provisions in force relating to common carriers to apply to such companies.—Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing herein contained shall in any case extend to charge or make liable any such company further or in any other case than where, according to the laws of this realm for the time being, common carriers would be liable; nor shall any thing herein contained extend to deprive such company of any protection or privilege which either now or at any time hereafter common carriers have or may be entitled to, but such company shall from time to time and at all times have and be entitled to the benefit of every such protection and privilege.

7. Companies empowered to contract with other canal companies.—And whereas, in order to facilitate the conveyance of goods and merchandize and other matters and things in manner aforesaid, it is expedient that canal and navigation companies should be empowered to enter into arrangements with each other in the way that railway companies are authorized, so as to avoid the necessity for a change of boats and other delays arising from a diversity of interest; be it enacted that, notwithstanding any thing in this Act or in any of the said Acts for establishing or incorporating the said companies contained, it shall be lawful for any such canal or navigation company as aforesaid, and they are hereby empowered from time to time to make and enter into any contract or agreement with any other canal or navigation company, or the commissioners or undertakers thereof respectively (and which contract or agreement such other company is hereby authorized to enter into), either for the division or apportionment of tolls, dues, and charges, or for the passage over or along their respective canals or navigations, or any branches thereof, or any railways or tramways connected therewith and belonging thereto as aforesaid, of any boats, barges, or other vessels, or of any carriages or trucks drawn or propelled by steam, animal, or other power, of or belonging to any other company, or which shall pass along any other line of canal, navigation, or railway, or for the passage over or along any other line of canal, navigation, or railway of any such boats, barges, or other vessels, carriages, or trucks drawn or propelled as aforesaid, which shall belong to any such company, or which shall pass along their line of canal, navigation, or railway, upon the payment of such tolls and duties, and under such conditions and restrictions, as may be deemed advisable, and may be mutually agreed upon, and also to enter into any other contract with any other canal or navigation company that may be deemed advisable; and any such contract may contain such covenants, clauses, conditions, and agreements as the contracting parties may think advisable and mutually agree upon.

8. Canal companies empowered to lease their tolls.—It shall be lawful for any such canal or navigation company, from time to time, by lease, to take effect in possession within six months from the letting thereof, to let the tolls and duties, or any part thereof, upon the whole or any part of any such canal or navigation, or of any such railways or tramways, to any other canal or navigation company (and which lease such other canal or navigation company is hereby authorized to accept and enter into) for any period not exceeding twenty-one years from the commencement of any such lease: provided always, that no such letting shall take place unless public notice of the intention to let such tolls, or the part thereof intended to be let, shall have been given by the company proposing to let the same, by advertisement, at least fourteen days prior to the meeting of the directors or managers at which it shall be intended to let such tolls

9. Lessees to be deemed collectors.—During the continuance of any such lease, the respective lessees named therein, and also all persons appointed by them to collect the tolls so let, shall be deemed collectors of the tolls so let, and they shall have the same powers to collect and recover such tolls, and be subject to the same rules, duties, and penalties in reference thereto, as if they had been appointed for that purpo by the company demising the same.

10. Lessee making default to be removed.—If any such lease shall become void or voidable, according to any stipulations therein contained for that purpose, by reason of the failure on the part of the lessee to comply with any of the terms of such lease, or if all or any part of the rent thereby reserved shall be in arrear or unpaid for twenty-one days after the same shall become payable, then, upon application, made by the company who shall have demised the same, to a justice, it shall be lawful for such justice to order any constable, with proper assistance, to enter upon any toll-house, dwelling-house, office, weighing-machine, or other building, with the appurtenances, belonging to the lessors, and remove from the same the lessee or collector or other person found therein, together with his goods, and take possession thereof and of all property found therein, belonging to the lessors, and deliver the same to them or any person appointed by them for that purpose.

11. Power to relet tolls.—Upon such possession being obtained, it shall be lawful for the company having made such demise to determine the lease (if any) previously subsisting, and the same shall accordingly be utterly void, except as to the remedies of the lessors for payment of the rent due, or in respect of any unperformed or broken obligations or conditions on the lessee's part, all which remedies shall remain in full force; and in every such case, either during such proceedings or on the termination thereof, the company may again let the tolls to the same or any other person, or cause them to be collected in the same manner as if no such former lease had been made relative thereto.

12. Act not to apply to canals vested in shareholders, until approved of at a meeting, or in other cases by proprietors, and notices inserted in Gazettes, &c.—Provided always, and be it enacted, that this Act shall not apply to any canal or navigation the property wherein is vested in shareholders, nor shall the powers of leasing hereinbefore contained be exercised by any such canal or navigation company, until a meeting of the shareholders thereof shall have been duly convened in such manner as meetings are by their respective Acts of incorporation or settlement required to be called or are usually called, and it shall have been determined by a majority of two-thirds of the votes of the shareholders in such meeting assembled, either in person or by proxy, where by such Acts of incorporation or settlement voting by proxy is allowed, to adopt the powers and provisions hereby granted, or such and so many of them as it shall at such meeting be determined shall be adopted, or to grant or accept any such lease, nor to any canal or navigation the property wherein is vested in one or more owner or owners, proprietor or proprietors, unless the owner or owners, proprietor or proprietors thereof shall determine to adopt the powers and provisions hereby granted, nor in either case until public notice of any such determination and intention shall have been inserted in the London Gazette in respect of canals or navigations in England or Wales, in the Edinburgh Gazette in respect of canals or navigations in Scotland, and in the Dublin Gazette in respect of canals or navigations in Ireland, and in some newspaper circulating in the county or counties wherein such canal or navigation, or some part thereof, shall pass, one month at the least previously to the exercise of any such powers, whereupon, or immediately after the expiration of such notice, every such company, or their respective committees, directors, or managers, or their agents by them duly authorized in manner aforesaid, may from time to time put in force and exercise the said powers or any of them, in the manner by this Act authorized.

13. Act not to exempt canal companies from any general Act.—Nothing herein contained shall be construed to exempt any canal or navigation company who shall adopt the powers of this Act from the operation of any general Act regulating the manner of charging tolls and other charges upon canals or navigations in respect of passengers, goods, animals, articles, and things of a like description, which may be passed in the course of any future session of Parliament.

14. Alteration of Act.—This Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

CAP. XLIII.

An Act for encouraging the establishment of Museums in large towns. (July 21, 1845.)

Summary.

ALTHOUGH much has been said of the determination to carry a measure for the amendment of the Law of Settlement during the next session, there is little probability of such a result. On few questions are there such differing opinions as upon this. The Bills that have agitated the Profession for two years past are still delayed, amid the mass of legislation attempted, but unperformed.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

WE would recommend our readers to lose no time in getting rid of their railway shares in all lines that have obtained their Acts. Immediate calls must be made. Nineteen-twentieths of the present holders of shares will be either unable or unwilling to meet the calls, inasmuch as they hold their shares for the purpose of trafficking with them, and not by way of investment. The first call will bring all these into the market; they must sell or forfeit; they will endeavour to sell, but they will find every other person seeking to sell also. The fictitious value of the present mania cannot be maintained, and the law of reaction will assuredly reduce them below their real value. We advise our speculative readers to sell before the rush comes, and while any premium is to be realized, and those who look for investments, not to buy until one-third at least of the shares are paid up. Then they will be below par as much as, or more than, they are now above it. It will be seen that the remonstrances of the press have been successful, and that the interference of the authorities has procured a respite for the condemned foreigners in Exeter gaol, until the opinion of the judges shall be taken upon the curious and important points of law that have arisen in their case. We trust that civilization will be spared the barbarous and brutalizing spectacle of seven human beings deliberately killed in cold blood, under pretence of implanting a respect for human life by accustoming the populace to witness its extinction. We suspect that in this, as in other cases, the example is more powerful than the precept, and that the law that takes life away is likely to have more sway in rude minds than the law that commands that life shall not be taken away. We shall proceed as fast as possible to publish the important statutes of the last session.

REJECTION OF A QUEEN'S COUNSEL FROM THE BENCH.

(From the Morning Chronicle.)

It is with no small degree of reluctance that the press ever interferes in what appear to be the quarrels of individuals. But when public rights may be affected, and public principles appear to be disregarded, this becoming self restraint must be thrown off, and the task of interfering assumes the character of a duty which must be performed. For some time past the Bar and its concerns have forced themselves upon public observation; and, called upon to vindicate the honour of the Profession against the misconduct of some junior members of the bar, the benchers have acted with discretion and firmness. They have now a similar task to discharge with regard to themselves. Not that we desire to accuse them of wilful misconduct, since that phrase implies a bad motive, and we are ready to give every credit to the motives of the benchers, but we entertain no doubt that their conduct has been that they have mistaken their rights and their duties, and that they have applied in a particular manner a power which was never intended to be so employed. It is no small consolation to think that although the forms of speech compel us to use the phrase "the benchers," there is but a very inconsiderable minority of the benchers of one single inn of court to which our strictures can apply.

The office of bencher is one of dignity and importance. It constitutes the individual one of the governing body of the inn of which he is a member, and thus places in his hands, among other privileges minor and less important, the really important power of calling persons to be bar, of watching over their conduct while there, and of censuring them, excluding them from hall or the inn, and even of disbarring them. The office, therefore, though exercised without show and in much apparent quiet, is one of public authority. It cannot, under any pretence, be placed within the class of private rights and privileges. From the bar of England must be taken its Lord Chancellors and its Judges, and no one man who can admit to or exclude another from admission to a body which furnishes such great and potent officials to the State, can be deemed to be merely in the enjoyment of a private and personal privilege. He has great public duties to perform, and his admission to an office bringing with it such power should depend on nothing but public reasons.

This very plain and proper rule of proceeding has been lately violated in a somewhat extraordinary manner, and a gentleman has been refused admission to the bench of one of the inns of court in much the same manner as he might have been refused admission to a private club. That he can rightly be so refused no one can seriously maintain. No arbitrary right to exclude, none depending on merely private reasons, can exist, for the office is, as we have shewn, one of public trust, to the exercise of which, duties much more than privileges attach. A man has a right, quietly and inoffensively, to avoid the company of another for any, even the most trivial reasons. His dress—his language—his manners—his habits of thought—nay, the tone in which his opinions are uttered, would excuse and justify any one man in not joining the company of another, except when the necessities of business or the rules of good behaviour compelled him to do so. And perhaps, as clubs were meant for social meetings, and as the bad language or bad manners of any one individual might destroy much of the pleasure of all the rest, the existence of those disqualifications in any one individual might warrant his being black-balled. But he must be wholly insensible to th plainest rules of business, and the most undoubted principles of right, who would say that any peculiarities of one individual, offensive though they might be to another, ought to justify exclusion from public office, provided that the individual seeking it was in other respects fitted for it, and had a good title to possess it. It may, perhaps, be said that the exclusion, in the instance now under consideration, was occasioned by a matter of more than mere peculiarity; that it was something which did affect character, and consequently fitness for office. If so, why was the exclusion consummated without calling on the individual for an explanation of his supposed misconduct? The allegation of misconduct gave the right and imposed the duty of calling for explanatio The fault —at all times a serious one—of punishing without inquiry, is doubly objectionable when committed by men of the law. What! are the Courts to insist on investigation before condemnation, as the very first and greatest of the fundamental principles of justice—are some Queen's Counsel (benchers of the different inns) to insist, on behalf of a prosecutor, that a mandamus to restore cannot be refused, because the party complaining was amoved without charge openly brought and defence fairly heard—are others, appearing for the defendant, to admit that they cannot contest the principle, whatever may be the alleged causes of removal, and to surrender their resistance to the issuing of the writ, if upon examination the Court shall think that there was not a fair hearing—is all this to be done to enforce on the people the necessity of hearing before condemning, and the belief that the law inexorably requires such a practice, and are the very men who so argue in the presence of the courts and the public to retreat to the privacy of a Parliament chamber, and there indemnify themselves for this word-homage to justice and fairness by an unqualified practical disregard of both? Lawyers should be regular men, for they enforce rules of law upon others; they should be men of fairness, for never do they more vigorously assail in their courts any transaction than when they charge it with unfairness; above all, they should be men who condemn not without full hearing, for in public at least they are ever proclaiming, that to hear patiently, attentively, honestly, is a high virtue; to decide without hearing is the greatest injustice. It is not possible in principle to distinguish between a case where the Court of Queen's Bench can be applied to for a mandamus to restore a man to an office, and that where a newly-appointed Queen's counsel claims a seat as a bencher; and should the distinction be attempted upon the ground that the officer has a settled right, while the Queen's counsel is only a claimant for one, the answer is obvious and decisive. Long settled usage is, by the law, in scores of instances, declared to be the best of all rights, for it presumes an original agreement or enactment, which is stamped and consecrated by repeated practical recognition. It has long been the settled usage to make gentlemen appointed to the rank of counsel to the Sovereign, benchers of the Inn of Court of which they are members. A gentleman appointed Queen's counsel has, therefore, an inchoate right to be a bencher of his inn. Now, that the law will, in other cases, enforce the completion of an inchoate right, is undoubted. The law is, in this respect, identical with common sense and justice. Lord Tenterden, in the case of R. v. the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn (4 B. & C. Rep. 858), said, "If the party now applying to the Court was an actually admitted member of the society, and had acquired an inchoate right capable of being perfected, it might then be fit for this Court to interfere by mandamus to perfect that right." And his lordship's doctrine was repeated by the other members of the Court. The rule of law upon this part of the subject may, therefore be taken as undoubted. We have said, that, by long settled usage, gentlemen appointed counsel to the Sovereign have as a consequence been apppointed benchers of their inn. In no other way could the ranks of these self-elected bodies be more gracefully and honourably filled up. If the Lord Chancellor nominates to the rank of Queen's counsel, and the Sovereign, accepting his advice, confers that rank, the party thus honoured may reasonably be assumed to be a fitting person to stand in all, as by the Sovereign's appointment he does in most, respects in the first class of his profession. For the benchers to reject as their equal in the Inn of court him whom the Keeper of the Sovereign's conscience has advised the Crown to make their equal in the courts of justice, is a strong measure; to reject him on a charge made against him by one of their number, without giving him the opportunity of meeting and refuting it, is a gross and palpable injustice. The rejection is a slur cast at the Sovereign and the chief law adviser of the Crown; the mode of rejecting is a brand of discredit on themselves—it is a violation of the very first principles of justice, which their profession declares itself created to defend and maintain.

We have hitherto abstained from noticing the subject-matter in respect of which this great error has been so very unadvisedly committed by the benchers of one of the inns of court. From all that has yet been made known to the profession, the cause of the exclusion appears to be quite an inadequate one. On this, however, we pronounce no positive opinion, desiring to abstain from imitating in this respect the conduct of the benchers. We condemn not without a hearing. To censure them for not hearing before condemning, though without calling on them for an answer, is no departure from the settled rule of justice, for such an act is wholly incapable of justification. The fact that they did so is indubitable—to affect to doubt it would be mere prudishness. That fact (quite regardless of the merits of the case) requires no argument to prove, and admits of none to palliate, its impropriety. The Court of Queen's Bench has, by the mouth of Lord Denman, recently condemned such conduct, in language at once so clear, temperate, and decisive, that we cannot resist the pleasure of quoting it.

The case of Reg. v. Smith, clerk (L. J. for 1844, 167), was one where an application was made for a mandamus to a vicar to restore a parish clerk. The return to the mandamus set out many acts of impropriety on the part of the clerk, that, if proved and left unexplained, would have justified the removal. But the vicar, in whose presence many of the acts were charged to have been committed, gave the clerk n opportunity for defence or explanation. The return was therefore held bad, and Lord Denman said—

"For the vicar it was contended that he had a right to remove the prosecutor on the mere view of the prosecutor's conduct—that any kind of process for the purpose of enabling him to disprove or explain it must be superfluous—that the law invests the minister with the power of exercising a supervision or control over his inferior officer, and of removing him for indecent conduct, publicly exhibited in his minister's presence. The necessity of acting on his own impression in such cases was exemplified by the punishment summarily inflicted in courts of justice for contempts, and by convictions, on the view, by magistrates, under the Highway Acts. We believe that the practice in the former of these supposed cases is for the Court to call on a party charged with contempt for his defence, and to give him an opportunity of denying or explaining it before any punishment is awarded. We apprehend, also, that a magistrate empowered to convict an offender upon the view ought first to call upon the offender for an answer."

The example of the Courts, and the lesson thus read to ministers and justices, seem to have been thought unworthy of the notice, or at all events of the imitation, of the benchers. They will do well to reconsider and to remedy the error they have thus committed. No practice of not taking a second or a third ballot ought to stand in the way of the performance of this piece of obedience to the rules of law and justice. Should it be allowed to do so, the judges ought to interfere, as visitors, to enforce the observance of these inestimable rules. But we cannot believe that the majority of the benchers of the inn in question will be so untrue to themselves, or to the principles which, as lawyers and gentlemen, they profess, as to permit any mere matter of form to prevent them from doing what is fair and proper. Whether the charge against the individual excluded was light or heavy, whether the practice not to hear was as old as the society itself, or was in this instance for the first time introduced, it is equally wrong, and equally requires correction. Unless something shall be done, public trust in the fairness and justice of these bodies will be shaken to the utmost; for who can believe that they will act fairly or justly to a humble member, when in their treatment of one of their own rank they disregard what the judges of the land declare to be the very first essential of justice? The privileges and powers of the benchers, anomalous as they are, have hitherto been respected, because they have been believed to be exercised with discretion and fairness; but should that belief cease, the public will require and obtain such an interference, by the authority of Parliament, as shall secure these advantages to the Profession and the country.

LEADING CASES.—No. VII.

Rogers v. Spence (in Error).

(13 M. & W. 571, affirming judgment in Spence v. Rogers, 11 M. & W. 191.) .

What rights of action pass to the assignees of a bankrupt—Where a personal injury to the bankrupt is the principal and substantive cause of action, the right to sue does not pass to the assignees.

The general effect of bankruptcy is to vest in the assignees all such real and personal estate as the bankrupt was equitably, as well as legally, possessed of or entitled to at the date of the act of bankruptcy. (See Mogg v. Baker, 3 M. & W. 195.) In Smith v. Coffin (2 H. Bla. 461), Eyre, C. J. declares it to be in accordance with the most express and plain spirit of the bankrupt laws, that every beneficial interest which the bankrupt has shall be disposed of for the benefit of his creditors; and Buller, J. in the same case, observes, "that the Court is bound to construe the bankrupt laws in the most liberal and beneficial manner for the creditors." Not only, then, are the assignees entitled to sue on choses in action accruing to them in right of the bankrupt, or for breach of any covenant made with him, but they may likewise maintain an action for unliquidated damages, the rights to which has accrued prior to the bankruptcy by reason of the non-performance of a contract entered into with the bankrupt. (Wright v. Fairfield, 2 B. & Ad. 727; Porter v. Vorley, 9 Bing. 93.) It has, indeed, been held that the assignees may elect either to adopt or reject contracts to which the bankrupt has become a party, and which are in fieri at the time of the bankruptcy, being, of course, guided in such election by considering whether such contracts are likely to prove onerous or beneficial to the estate (Gibson v. Carruthers, 8 M. & W. 321); but the decision referred to as establishing this proposition, and from which Lord Abinger, C. B. expressly dissented, is certainly open to much observation, and cannot be confidently relied on. (See, also, as to this right of election by assignees, Lawrence v. Knowles, 5 B. N. C. 399.) Notwithstanding, however, the general rule thus briefly stated, it is clear that where the gist of the action is a personal injury arising out of a breach of contract, as in the case of a contract to effect a cure or to marry, where undoubtedly there may be a damage to the personal estate consequential upon the injury to the person, but where such damage is altogether dependent upon and inseparable from the personal injury, no right to maintain an action in respect of such consequential damage will pass to the assignees of the bankrupt. In these cases the primary cause of action is, properly speaking, personal; it would die with the bankrupt, and cannot therefore pass to his assignees. (Drake v. Beckham, 11 M. & W. 319, reversing the judgment in Beckham v. Drake, 8 M. & W. 846; S. C. 9 M. & W. 79.) Where, however, a contract is entered into with the bankrupt in order to secure his personal skill and labour, and where, from the breach of such contract, no other injury would ensue to the bankrupt than the diminution of his personal estate, the right of action for that breach will pass to the assignees as part of the personal estate, it being a matter belonging to the bankrupt, whereof profit may be made. In this case the injury to the person, if any, is a consequence of the injury to the personal estate; and the latter, therefore, and not the former, must be considered as the primary cause of action. (Judgment, 11 M. & W. 319.)

to such contracts as are made subsequently thereto, the general rule is, that on these the bankrupt may maintain an action, subject, however, to the right of the assignees to interfere (see per Lawrence, J. 7 East, 63); and in one particular class of cases, viz. where an action has been brought by the bankrupt for the earnings of his personal labour since the bankruptcy, such action has been held maintainable (Chippendale v. Tomlinson, cited 7 East, 58; Silk v. Osborne, 1 Esp. N.P.C. 140; Evans v. Brown, Id. 170; Crofton v. Poole, 1 B. & Ad. 568; but Coles v. Barrow (4 Taunt. 754) cannot be considered as an authority (see per Best, J. 3 B. & Ald. 232)); although, as observed by Lord Kenyon with reference to Chippendale v. Tomlinson, the hardship of that case might perhaps have warped the opinion of the judges, when the evil might have been better remedied by statute (7 East, 62).

Having thus glanced at the respective rights of suit, vested in the assignees and bankrupt in respect of a contract entered into with the latter, we wish to direct attention to those cases more peculiarly in which a question arises as to the relative rights of these parties to claim and exact compensation for an injury sustained by the bankrupt. Now the rule with respect to these cases is, that where the injury complained of is to the personal feelings or reputation of the bankrupt, the right to sue does not pass to his assignees, but remains in and must be exercised, if at all, by the bankrupt. It has accordingly been held that the bankrupt alone can sue for an assault and battery, for slander, or for the seduction of a child or servant (per Park, J. Hancock v. Caffyn, 8 Bing. 368; Howard v. Crowther, 8 M. & W. 601; Benson v. Flower, Sir W. Jones, 215; Judgment, 11 M. & W. 319); and the assignees can maintain no action for libel, although the injury occasioned thereby to the man's reputation may have been the sole cause of his bankruptcy (per Alderson, B., 8 M. & W. 604). In Howard v. Crowther (suprà), it was held that the right of action for the seduction of a servant does not pass to the master's assignees on his bankruptcy, and Lord Abinger observed, that loss of service is only a personal inconvenience; it does not prejudice the estate. "Nothing," remarked his lordship, "is more clear than that a right of action for an injury to the property of the bankrupt will pass to his assignees, but it is otherwise as to an injury to his personal comfort. Assignees of a bankrupt are not to make a profit of a man's wounded feelings; causes of action, therefore, which are purely personal do not pass to the assignees, but the right to sue remains with the bankrupt." "There is no doubt," says Lord Denman, in Drake v. Beckham, "that a right of action for an injury to the body or feelings of a trader, arising from a tort independent of contract, does not pass to his assignees."

In Clark v. Calvert (8 Taunt. 742; see also Topham v. Dent, 6 Bing. 515), a bankrupt was held entitled to sue for a trespass to land of which he was yearly tenant, committed before the bankruptcy, the assignees having neither interfered nor taken to the premises, and this decision was expressly recognised and followed in the recent case of Spence v. Rogers, in the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, which was affirmed by that of the Exchequer Chamber. This was an action of trespass for breaking and entering the dwelling-house and garden of the plaintiff, and making a great noise and disturbance therein, &c. whereby the plaintiff and his family were greatly harassed, disturbed, and annoyed in the peaceable possession of the said dwelling-house and garden, &c. Plea,—that after the trespass, and after the commencement of the action, the plaintiff had become bankrupt, and one W. P. had been appointed his assignee; by virtue of which appointment, and by force of the statutes of bankruptcy, the causes of action in the declaration mentioned became absolutely vested in and transferred to the said W. P. To this plea the plaintiff demurred generally, stating as the point for argument that the declaration disclosed a variety of causes of action, which did not, according to law, pass to or vest in the plaintiff's assignees. In support of the plea, it was contended that this case was distinguishable from Clark v. Calvert, because it had arisen since the passing of the statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, and must be decided with reference to the 63rd and 64th sections of that Act; that the latter section had been held as operating to pass all the bankrupt's real property, and all rights in respect of it belonging to the bankrupt (Michell v. Hughes, 6 Bing. 689; Smith v. Coffin, 2 H. Bla. 444); that in the present case, a trespass having been committed upon property of which the bankrupt was possessed before his bankruptcy, and which passed to the assignee, the last-named party was entitled to recover damages for any deterioration which it might have sustained. It was further argued that the gist of the action was for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house, garden, and premises, and making a great noise and disturbance therein; the allegation that the plaintiff and his family were disturbed and annoyed thereby being mere matter of aggravation, which could not be pleaded to; that the right to recover for the personal injury was consequent upon the injury to the real property, and that the right to recover damages for the latter injury would clearly pass to the assignees. Judgment, however, was given for the plaintiff, and it was observed by Parke, B. that this case was precisely the same as Clark v. Calvert, the only difference being, that there the assignment was pleaded instead of the appointment of the assignee, which has now the same effect; and in affirming this judgment of the Court of Exchequer, Lord Denman remarked as follows:—"The Act of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, which does not in this respect substantially vary from those formerly in force, gives to the assignee, by sections 63, 64, and 68, all the personal and real estate of the bankrupt, and all debts due or to be due to him; and as the object of the law is manifestly to benefit creditors by making all the pecuniary means and property of the bankrupt available to their payment, it has, in furtherance of this object, been construed largely, so as to pass not only what in strictness may be called the property and debts of the bankrupt, but also those rights of action to which he was entitled, for the purpose of recovering in specie, real or personal property, or damages in respect of that which has been unlawfully diminished in value, withheld, or taken from him; but causes of action not falling within this description, but arising out of a wrong personal to the bankrupt, for which he would be entitled to remedy, whether his property were diminished or impaired or not, clearly not within the letter, and have never been held to be within the spirit, of the enactments, even in cases where injuries of this kind may have been accompanied or followed by loss of property; and to this class we think the action of trespass qu. cl. fr. and that of trespass to the goods of the bankrupt, must be considered to belong. These rights of action are given in respect of the immediate and present violation of the possession of the bankrupt, independently of his rights of property. They are an extension of that protection which the law throws around the person, and substantial damages may be recovered in respect of such rights, though no loss or diminution in value of property may have occurred; and even where such an incident has accompanied or followed a wrong of this description, the primary personal injury to the bankrupt being the principal and essential cause of action, still remains in him, and does not vest in the assignee either as his property or his debts."

In the above case, it will be borne in mind that the trespass complained of was committed prior to the bankruptcy, and this circumstance seems to afford an additional reason for upholding the decision at which the Court arrived. In Smith v. Milles (1 T. R. 480) it is said that, to entitle a man to bring trespass, he must, at the time when the act was done which constitutes the trespass, either have the actual possession in him of the thing which is the object of the trespass, or else he must have a constructive possession in respect of the right being actually vested in him; and this rule is illustrated by observing that trespass will lie at suit of the lord of the manor for an estray or wreck taken by a stranger before seizure by the lord; for the right is in the lord, and a constructive possession in respect of the thing being within the manor of which he is lord. Possession, then, either actual or constructive, seems essential to the maintenance of the action of trespass qu. cl. fr. and Smith v. Milles is a direct authority to shew that the assignees of a bankrupt cannot maintain this action for a trespass not committed in their own time. (See per Parke, B., 11 M. & W. 191; Com. Dig. Trespass, B. 2, 3; Hey v. Moorhouse, 6 B. N. C. 52, and cases there cited; and Lutwich v. Milton, Cro. Jac. 604.) Supposing, however, the trespass to be committed after the bankruptcy, and whilst the bankrupt retains possession of his dwelling-house and premises with the assent of the assignees, it is clear that trespass would be maintainable by the bankrupt, for there are many decisions which establish this position, viz. that as against persons who have no title at all, and who are mere wrongdoers, a bare possession, without allegation of title, is sufficient to sustain trespass qu. cl. fr. at suit of the party so in possession. (Harper v. Charlesworth, 4 B. & C. 591; Holmes v. Newlands, 11 A. & E. 44; Malson v. Cook, 4 B. N. C. 392.) In such a case it will, however, be necessary to consider whether there are any facts shewing that the assignees did in any way assent to the seizure, or that they subsequently ratified it, because if so, the party committing the alleged trespass cannot be considered in law a wrongdoer; for instance, the house of the plaintiff, an uncertificated bankrupt, was broken open, and effects acquired by him subsequently to the bankruptcy were taken by the defendants, who had become his creditors since the bankruptcy, and did not know who were the assignees appointed under the bankruptcy. The bankrupt having sued the defendants in trespass qu. cl. fr. they obtained a surrender of the assignees' interest in the effects seized, and this was held to be a ratification of the seizure by the assignees, so as to bar the plaintiff from recovering. (Hull v. Pickersgill, 1 Brod. & B. 282.)

Before dismissing the subject now under consideration, it seems desirable to observe that the action of trover is clearly maintainable by a bankrupt for chattels which have been acquired subsequently to the bankruptcy, and before the bankrupt has obtained his certificate, for he has in these "a defeasible property, which none but the assignees can defeat." (Per Heath, J. 1 B. & P. 48.) Where, therefore, the assignees have permitted the bankrupt to remain for a considerable time in possession of property acquired after his bankruptcy, although they may interfere and take it away, yet it is not competent to third parties to set up a claim which the assignees themselves do not think fit to insist upon, the principle applicable to this class of cases being that a possession by the consent of the true owner is a lawful possession as against a third party. (Fyson v. Chambers, 9 M. & W. 460; Fowler v. Down, 1 B. & P. 44; Webb v. Fox, 7 T. R. 391.) In Nias v. Adamson (3 B. & Ald. 225) it was held that an uncertificated bankrupt was not entitled to retain property against his assignees, although such property had been left in his possession under an agreement with a third person, and for a valuable consideration paid by him to the assignees. "It seems to me," observed Bayley, J. (3 B. & Ald. 230), "that the bankrupt can only obtain a defeasible property from the assignees, and that any creditor may put the assignees in motion for the purpose of reclaiming the property left in the bankrupt's possession. And there is no hardship in this, for it is clear that the goods cannot be purchased with money belonging to the bankrupt himself; and if purchased by money belonging to a friend, it is as easy for the friend to buy it, and to have the legal property transferred to him."

The above remarks, suggested by the case of Rogers v. Spence, will, of course, be considered as directing the reader's attention to some only of the more important points relating to the effect of the bankrupt laws in divesting the bankrupt of his property and right of action. For more detailed information on this important and very comprehensive subject, reference must be made to the standard treatises relative thereto, and the very numerous decisions there cited and abstracted.

REVIEW OF THE CASES DECIDED IN ALL THE COURTS OF COMMON LAW.

During Easter Term and Vacation, and Trinity Term and Vacation, 1845.

We left off last week with the consideration of what duress of goods would make a payment involuntary; but it is not every demand of more than is right which will justify the payment as under duress, and give a right of recovery in this form of action. For money had and received will not lie to recover a sum of money paid in order to obtain the release of cattle distrained damage feasant, though the sum paid exceed in demand the damage done, where the owner has not made a proper tender of the amount of damage actually done. (Gulliver v. Cosens, 5 Law T. 199.) This is different from the case of a payment to a carrier, because here, in consequence of the wrong done by the negligence of the owner, the duty of a tender is imposed upon him, and the injured party ought not to be called upon to incur the risk of a mistake in the demand if they receive compensation. (See Ashmole v. Wainwright, 2 Q. B. 837.)

CONTRACTS.

Principal and agent.—One of the most important judgments delivered during the two Terms is that of the Exchequer Chamber, in Dowman v. Jones (5 Law T. 77), involving the consideration of the liability of a person apparently contracting as agent. The plaintiffs below sought to charge the defendant below as having incurred a personal liability; and the following extract from a letter, and the special case, will shew upon what grounds. He had been sent, at the request of Messrs. Esdaile, to wind up the affairs of a bank; and to the plaintiff, who had large claims, he wrote, "Your bill of charges in this matter, amounting to 527*l.* 5s. I also undertake (on behalf of Messrs. Esdaile) to have paid to you." The case found that he acted during all that time, as the plaintiff well knew, as the agent of Messrs. E. in the collection and settlement of several extensive claims which they had upon many other parties, arising out of their connection with the said bank. The Court of Queen's Bench considered that this did not shew authority to undertake as agent, and that his own declarations could not be taken as proof that he had authority, and that therefore the Esdailes were not liable, and he was. The Court of Exchequer had previously held that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it would be taken that he had such authority, and that the action would not lie against him personally. The special case was turned into a special verdict, and the Court of Error upheld the original position of the Court of Exchequer, and decided that primâ facie a letter purporting to be an "undertaking on behalf of Messrs. E." is an undertaking by an agent, and that, upon any undertaking so purporting, the party seeking to charge the agent is bound to shew clearly that there was no such agency or authority, or that it was exceeded, and that in the absence of such clear proof, in the principal case, the defendant was not personally liable, and the judgment of the Queen's Bench was accordingly reversed.

Liability of shareholder for contracts of branch banks.—Crellin v. Brooke (5 Law T. 75) illustrates the principle that persons may by their conduct become liable as partners, although the partnership deed has not been observed inter se. The defendant in that case was a shareholder in a joint-stock bank. By the deed of settlement, the directors were empowered, with the consent of the shareholders, to establish branch banks. A branch bank was established, and the defendant continued a shareholder. It was contended that the plaintiff, who sued the defendant in respect of a money deposit with the branch bank, was bound to shew that it was duly established. But the Court of Exchequer held that, from his continuing a shareholder, the jury might either presume that the deed had been complied with, or that he had assented to the establishment of the bank irrespective of the deed.

COPYRIGHT.

After long consideration, a most important judgment has been given by the Court of Exchequer on the subject of the right of copyright possessed by foreigners in England. The circumstances and arguments are stated at length in the judgment in Chapple v. Purday (5 Law T. 266). After shewing that at common law a foreigner residing abroad has no copyright in England, Pollock, C. B. proceeded to examine the statutes and cases, and continued:—

The result seems to be, that if a foreign author not having published abroad, first publishes in England, he may have the benefit of the statute; but that no case has decided that if the author first pu[illegible] abroad he can afterwards have the benefit of it by first publishing here. The 7th section of the 4 Geo. 3. c. 107 favours this construction, for it protect against piracy by importation from abroad those works only which are first composed, written, printed, or published in "this kingdom,"—probably it would include the whole of the United Kingdom; and this protection would seem to be co extensive with the rights to be thereby secured.

After referring to the International Copyright Act, the Lord Chief Baron proceeded:—

Upon the whole, then, we think it doubtful whether a foreigner, no resident here, can have English copyright at all, and we think he cannot if he has published his work abroad before any publication in England. It remains to be considered whether the plaintiff is in the situation of a foreign[illegible] who has first published. At the time of the assignment to him, no publication took place, but before he published in England, a publication had taken place by the assignor in France, therefore the work had been published before the plaintiff published it in England, and such publication was not by a wrongdoer, but by a person who was lawfully entitled to publish. It seems to us, therefore, that for this purpose the plaintiff and Auber and Frapenas must be considered the same person; and we think, as the publication in Paris by the composer or his assignee there prior to any publication in England, prevents a copyright from being acquired under the statutes, and there being no right at common law or under the statutes, the rule for a nonsuit must be made absolute.

COSTS.

There have been several new decisions as to costs during the period under review.

Affidavit of increase.—The expenses of witnesses in a cause must be actually paid before the affidavit of increase is made, or they will be ordered to be refunded. (Trent v. Harrison, 5 Law T. 98; 14 L. J. 210, Q. B.)

Demurrer.—Where a defendant pleads a payment into court and another plea, and the plaintiff takes the money out of court and demurs to the latter plea, when demurrer is decided in his favour and he then enters a nolle prosequi to the residue of the action, except the costs of the demurrer, he is entitled to those costs on taxation. (Williams v. Vines, 5 Law T. 221.)

In error—Of opposed rule in court below when judgment thereon is afterwards reversed.—Where upon argument in the court below on an opposed rule, the Court gives judgment which is reversed by a court of error, the plaintiff in error is entitled to his costs of the motion in the court below. (Evans v. Collins, 5 Law T. 79.)

Habeas corpus.—The care with which our laws protect the liberty of the subject is shewn by the decision in Ex parte Cobbett (5 Law T. 176), that the Court will not grant costs against the party suing out a writ of habeas corpus to a person whose interests compel him to appear in support of the commitment, and who had notice to do so. This is further important, as the opinion of each Court may be taken on behalf of any person imprisoned.

Issue under Tithe Act.—As a general rule, the Court will always give costs to the successful party in an issue under the Tithe Act, whether the ultimate decision be in support or opposed to the decision of the commission. The only exception to this will be where parties have disentitled themselves by some misconduct of their own. (Stamford v. Warrington, 5 Law T. 130; Stokes v. Savage, ibid. 176.)

Judgment under 20l.—In the exercise of the discretionary power which the Courts possess over costs in actions upon judgments, costs will be refused where an action is brought upon a judgment for less than 20*l.* in order to arrest the defendant where the conduct of the defendant has not been vexatious, although the original judgment was obtained before the passing of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, and the defendant had no goods whereon to levy. (Bell v. Waldron, 5 Law T. 220; 9 Jur. 510.)

Quo warranto.—We have often had occasion to observe that the right to recover costs springs from the statute law, and cannot exist independently of it. Of this, Reg. v. Rowley (5 Law T. 132) is another instance. It was there decided, although the practice of the taxing-masters had been different, that on a judgment for the relator in a writ of error on an information quo warranto, he is not entitled to costs.

Time to object to judge's order as to costs.—It is too late, a year after a judge's order respecting costs, to move to rescind it without explaining the cause of the delay satisfactorily. (Keir v. Leman, 5 Law T. 171.)

Witnesses.—From R. v. Newton (5 Law T. 98), it appears that where the commission-day is on Saturday, the cost of witnesses staying at the assize town on Sunday will be allowed, although in fact Monday is the first business day.

EJECTMENT.

Construction of 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 4.—The case most worthy of notice under this head is that of Doe dem. Wyatt v. Byron (5 Law T. 128), in which the Court of Common Pleas were called upon to decide [illegible] a sub lessee of premises was within [illegible] words of the 4th section of 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, and entitled to stay proceedings in ejectment for nonpayment of rent, upon payment of all arrears and costs. They held, that although not specifically mentioned, yet, taking the 2nd section and the 4th together, they could not narrow the 4th section, which is a remedial one, in such a way as to exclude a person deriving title to the property from the benefit intended.

Proceedings under 1 Geo. 4, c. 87.—Although the case just mentioned shows that the words are not the only thing looked at in the construction of an Act of Parliament, yet it cannot be too often impressed upon the legal student that, as a general rule, the literal meaning of the words used will be adhered to. Doe dem. Anson v. Roe (5 Law T. 8, 9 Jur. 610) is an instance of this, which confirms what was said in Doe dem. Holder v. Rushworth (6 D. P. C. 712), that a landlord who seeks to take proceedings against his tenant under 1 Geo. 4, 287, s. 1, must give him notice to appear upon the "first day of the Term next following, as the statute directs," and that a notice to appear in the Term following will not suffice.

Notice to tenants.—It is said in Chitty's Archbold, p. 735, that although it is usual and advisable to fix the names of all the tenants to the notice to appear, yet that it is not absolutely requisite, and that it may be directed only to the tenant who is served. But it appears from Doe dem. Musket v. Roe (5 Law T. 173), that if the names of all the tenants are not affixed to each of the notices served, judgment can only be moved for against the tenant to whom the notice was directed.

EVIDENCE.

Account stated.—The cases have gone far in admitting evidence of an account stated; but it would have been carrying them still farther had Frude v. Towell (5 Law T. 214) been decided differently. That decision was that a letter, offering to pay a certain sum of money in discharge of a disputed account, followed by a tender of the sum, which is refused, is not evidence of an account stated.

Admissions under judge's order—Description of bills of exchange.—Wilkes v. Hopkins (5 Law T. 200) is a warning to the practitioner to examine even what appears to be done in the ordinary course of proceeding. There the bill sued upon was not accurately described in the notice to admit, and the defendants were held to be barred from disputing their liability, through the extent of their admission. It was described as "a bill drawn upon and directed to the above-named defendants, as the New Bridge Coal Company," and to be accepted by "one Henry Bishop for the defendants, as the New Bridge Coal Company, payable at Messrs. Jones, Lloyd, and Co. bankers, London," and being so admitted, it was held to be evidence that the defendants constituted such company, and that the bill was accepted by Bishop for the company, and that it was payable at a London banker's. The Court, however, upon affidavits of merits, and surprise, allowed new trial upon payment of costs.

Arbitration.—The production of a rule [illegible] court, making the agreement of reference a rule of court, is not proper evidence of the agreement; it must be proved like every other agreement. Still v. Halford (4 Camph. 17) is not contrary to this, for there it was a judge's order of reference made a rule of court, and was considered a judicial document.

Bill of exchange, proof of payment of.—In Scoley v. Walsey (Peake, 34), Lord Kenyon is reported to have said that, primâ facie, a receipt on the back of the bill imports that it was paid by the acceptor. However this may be—but that it is so is very doubtful—the receipt must be clear and express, for a bill produced with an R marked at the back, and not shewn to have been in the acceptor's possession, was held not to afford any primâ facie evidence of payment by the acceptor in an action against him by the indorsee. (Phillips v. Warren, 5 Law T. 267.)

Goods sold and delivered.—We have before remarked the eagerness to stretch a decision, however peculiar the circumstances upon which it was founded. Littlechild v. Banks (5 Law T. 263) is another instance. The Court of Exchequer, in Bussey v. Barnet (9 M. & W. 312), decided that where goods were immediately paid for upon delivery, the jury were right in saying that there was no contract, no sale on credit, and that the plea of payment was unnecessary. In the principal case, upon this authority, it was attempted to impose upon the plaintiff the duty of negativing such cotemporaneous payment as part of his case, but we need hardly say without success, and the verdict given by the jury in consequence of this topic being urged by the defendant's counsel was set aside.

Interrogatories.—Where a commission to examine witnesses authorizes the commissioners to put, or cause to be put, additional questions to the witnesses, when they shall think necessary or proper, it does not give a power of general examination at the will of the commissioners, but requires them to exercise their discretion and judgment in putting the questions. Therefore, where it appeared from the return to a commission that the defendant, having relinquished the greater part of direct interrogatories to a witness produced by him, proposed to proceed with examining him upon additional questions, and that the plaintiff objected to this; but that, subject to such objection, the commissioners proceeded with the examination of the witness on such additional questions, it was held that, as the commissioners had not exercised any discretion of their own in putting these additional questions, the examination was inadmissible in evidence, as taken without authority. (Williamson v. Page, 5 Law T. 55.)

Malice not proved by a plea of justification.—Warwick v. Foulkes (12 M. & W. 507) shews the danger of putting a plea of justification which cannot be supported upon the record, for the jury may be directed to take it into account in estimating the damages; but it must not be inferred from this, that such a plea, although unsupported, would of itself be evidence of express malice to supersede the necessity of producing other evidence to prove it. (Wilson v. Robertson, 5 Law T. 49.)

Proof of judgment in court baron.—Upon an issue of nul tiel record, raised upon a judgment of a court baron, the judgment is sufficiently proved by the vivâ voce testimony of the officer of the court present at the trial, and the production of levari facias issued by him in the regular course, where there are no records in that court, and no form of judgment properly belonging to it. (Dawson v. Gregory, 5 Law T. 241.)

Secondary evidence.—The position laid down in the works on Evidence, that a notice to quit may be proved by a copy without any notice having been given to produce the original, has been confirmed and upheld in Doe dem. Fleming v. Somerton (5 Law T. 50; 14 L. J. 210, Q. B.). Where the probate of a will is shewn to be in the possession of the execution party to an action, notice to produce the probate will suffice to admit secondary evidence of the will; and an official copy of the will, purporting to be signed by the registrar of the Ecclesiastical Court, and annexed to which was what purported to be a copy of the act of the Ecclesiastical Court, is sufficient secondary evidence thereof. (Waite v. Gale, 11 L. J. 212, Q.B.).

Certificate of copy of record.—Where an officer is appointed by Act of Parliament to certify copies of records or other documents, he must certify them by the same description as that used in the Act, or they will be inadmissible in evidence. Thus a document, certified to be a "true extract from the original," is not admissible under an Act authorizing a copy of an award, or of any part thereof, to be given in evidence. (Doe dem. Brise v. Brise, 5 Law T. 36.)

FALSE REPRESENTATION.

We some time since brought under the notice of our readers the decision of the Exchequer Chamber in the case of Collins v. Evans (2 Law T. 446), which affirmed the important principle previously laid down by various judges, and especially by Mr. Baron Parke, that a representation false in fact, but made without fraud, is not actionable, although another party may have suffered injury by acting upon the faith of that representation. This question has again been raised and elaborately discussed in Ormrod v. Huth (5 Law T. 268). That was an action on the case for fraud, in representing certain samples of cotton to be fair samples, whereby the plaintiff was induced to make a large purchase, and the bulk turned out to be very inferior to the samples. The judge, at the trial, directed the jury that unless they could see grounds for inferring that the defendants or their brokers were acquainted with the fraud, or had acted against good faith or with some fraudulent purpose, the defendants were not liable. The point raised by the bill of exceptions thereupon tendered was as follows:—

That when a vendor, during the course of negotiating a sale, makes a representation to the purchaser which is likely to act as an inducement to the latter, who subsequently completes the bargain, the vendor not having made any communication as to the extent or means of his knowledge or ignorance, nor given any caution or explanation, and the representation turns out to be false, and an action upon the case is brought upon it, the jury is not precluded from finding in favour of the plaintiff by reason of knowledge of the falsehood, or of acting against good faith, or with fraudulent intent, not being brought home to the defendant.

The rule which is to be observed from all the cases appears to us to be, that where, upon the sale of goods, the purchaser is satisfied without requiring a warranty, which is a matter for his own consideration, he cannot recover upon a mere representation of the quality by the seller, unless he can shew that the representation was bottomed in fraud. If, indeed, the representation was false to the knowledge of the party making it, this would in general be conclusive evidence of fraud; but if the representation was honestly made, and believed at the time to be true by the party making it, although not true in point of fact, we think this does not amount to fraud in law, but that the rule of caveat emptor applies, and the representation itself does not furnish a ground of action; and although the cases may in appearance raise some difficulty as to the effect of a false assertion or representation of title in the seller, yet it will be found on examination that in each of those cases there was either an assertion of title embodied in the contract, or a representation of title which was false to the knowledge of the seller. The rule we have drawn from the cases appears to us to be supported so clearly by the early as well as the more recent decisions, that we think it unnecessary to bring them forward in recital, satisfying ourselves with saying that the exception must be disallowed, and the judgment of the Court of Exchequer affirmed.

A spirited attack has been made in the last number of the Law Magazine upon the correctness of these decisions, and the learned writer seems to think that convenience as well as justice has been sacrificed to a "mindless allegiance to precedents." We shall not discuss the question of the degree of authority precedents ought to have; but the importance of the subject, and our belief that the principle would be upheld in the House of Lords, will excuse a few observations tending to strengthen the arguments which the learned author attacks, and weaken those he advances. It is admitted that the old authorities up to 1771 require that fraud should coexist with falsehood, to give a right of action, and that a mere statement of what afterwards turns out to be false is not actionable. Then what are the authorities of modern times? In Pawson v. Watson (Cowp. 785) Lord Mansfield no doubt said, that "it is equally false to undertake to say that which he knows nothing at all of, as to say that is true which he knows is not true." But this was a mere dictum, and the decision in the case was in favour of the assured, because no false statement was made. This doctrine was repeated in Tollis v. Brutton (Park, 250), and acted upon in Macdowall v. Fraser (Dougl. 260), where even Ashurst, J. concurred, and is become a part of the law of insurances. (a) But all these were cases of insurances, where the effect of the erroneous statement was distinctly to the advantage of the assured and the injury of the underwriter; and representations in insurance are almost equivalent to express warranties, because of the direct advantage of such representations to the party making them, and the protection which the law throws over all contracts of that class; e. g. the holding that a false representation made to the first underwriter will also discharge the others, although they were not aware of the statement. And Lord Mansfield's words are not an authority to shew that an action for false representation would lie against an uninterested party. Then comes Pasley v. Freeman (3 T. R. 51). It is remarkable that even where the scienter and the deceitful intention was admitted, Mr. Justice Grove should have thought that the action, which was the first of the kind, could not be maintained. What Lord Kenyon said about moral and social duties was wholly beside the question. And the fair inference from Pasley v. Freeman was that fraud, i. e. intention to deceive, must exist. (See judgment in Haycraft v. Creasy, 2 E. 92.) No doubt in the last case Lord Kenyon did give his opinion in favour of holding a person liable for a misstatement; but Grove, Lawrence, and Leblanc, JJ. differed, and a new trial was ordered, the judges expressing a strong wish that the point should appear upon the record, and the opinion of the Court above taken, which does not appear to have been done. The case was a strong one, as the defendant had repeatedly, and after suspicions had been roused as to the credit of Miss Robertson, most positively asserted, of his own knowledge, that she might be trusted with perfect safety. But "knowledge" was held to be taken secundum subjectam materiam, and on a matter of credit could only mean a strong belief upon what appeared to be probable points. Now, even in insurance, a false representation as to a material future fact made by a person having no control over the event, has been held not to vitiate the contract. (Bowden v. Vaughan, 10 East, 450.) In Haycraft v. Creasy, although no less men than Erskine, Garrow, Gibbs, and Lawes were counsel for the plaintiff, the dicta of Lord Mansfield, given as above cited, were never referred to. Williamson v. Alison (2 East, 446, cited by Lord Abinger, in Cornfoot v. Fowke (6 M. & W. 358) as an authority that a mere misstatement is fraudulent, was a case of express warranty, and that has been always considered to render proof of scienter unnecessary.

Both Lawrence and Leblanc, JJ. concurred, and no allusion was made to Pasley v. Freeman, or Haycraft v. Creasy, which last case had occurred only six months before. In Early v. Garbett (9 B. & C. 928), Littledale, J.—no mean authority—expressly says, "the scienter, or fraud, being the gist of the action where there is no warranty." In that case, Bayley and Parke, JJ. fully concurred in holding that, in the absence of fraud, an untrue statement by a vendor, that no rent had been paid by his predecessors, did not entitle the vendee to recover the purchase-money. Dobell v. Stevens (3 B. & C. 623) is said, sometimes, to be a direct authority for holding a person liable for a misstatement, though not laid as being known to be false in the declaration, and not embodied in a contract. But we apprehend this is not so. The jury found expressly there was fraud; and the question alone decided by the Court was, that evidence of a fraudulent and deceitful representation can be received, although not noticed in a written agreement, or in a conveyance of the property sold. (See the judgment.) And what is Adamson v. Jarvis (4 Bing. 66)? The plaintiff, an auctioneer, had been employed by the defendant to sell goods in his possession, and apparently belonging to him, and had paid the proceeds to the defendant, but afterwards had been compelled to pay the value of the goods to the rightful owner, and he then brought an action to recover the amount and expenses from the defendant. Best, C. J. in delivering judgment, shewed that the old cases established the principle that affirmation of ownership, by a person in possession as owner, is liable to an action at the suit of a buyer, if the buyer is damnified by the goods being proved not to be the vendor's. He then delivered the dictum, "that he who affirms either what he does not know to be true, or knows to be false, to another's prejudice and his own gain, is, both in morality and law, guilty of falsehood, and must answer in damages." But he immediately continued—"The above cited cases shew that a scienter is not necessary in this case, although it is necessary in the case of Haycraft v. Creasy, and the cases of that class. In these cases a party who had no interest was applied to for his opinion; if he gave an honest though mistaken one, it was all that could be expected." Thus, no doubt is thrown by this dictum upon the former decisions. But to proceed. In Polhill v. Waller (3 B. & Ad. 114), Lord Tenterden expressly guarded against being supposed to hold that a mis-statement would entail liability; for, giving as an instance, an allegation of authority under a power of attorney, afterwards proved to be a forgery, he says, he would have incurred no liability, for he would have made no statement which he knew to be false, a case very different from the present. Freeman v. Baker (5 B. & Ad. 797) is, however, a still stronger case, for it is a judgment by the same Court, whose later opinion in Collins v. Evans has given rise to so much discussion, and in each case with the concurrence of Lord Denman. There, an action of deceit was brought in consequence of a ship turning out of less value than was described. The questions were, first, whether there was not a fraudulent representation, because that made was false in fact, but not known to be so; and, secondly, whether a certain inventory, under circumstances which we need not detail, did not form part of the contract. Sir J. Campbell, then Solicitor-General, argued for the proposition that knowledge was immaterial; but Lord Denman said that the single point was, whether the inventory formed part of the contract, and why so, is explained by the judgment of Parke, J. "The question of deceit was disposed of by the jury when they found that the defect in the ship was unknown to the defendants." Patteson, J. expressly concurred in this view, and Taunton, J. impliedly, by his concurrence decided against the plaintiff. The same limitation is recognized by the Court of Exchequer, and by the Court of Error, when deciding, in Levy v. Langridge (2 M. & W. 519, 4 M. & W. 337), upon the liability in tort of persons selling goods with an affirmation of their fitness for a particular purp Up to this point, then, there seems to us to be no single decision against the correctness of the principle laid down in Collins v. Evans and Ormerod v. Huth by the Court of Exchequer Chamber. We shall not discuss Cornfoot v. Fowke and Taylor v. Ashton at length, for they do not militate against our view, except in respect of Lord Abinger's judgment; but Smout v. Ilbrey merits a few words. There, it was not necessary to decide the effect of a false statement made by an agent, for it was clear that both plaintiff and defendant had acted upon the assumption that the agency had not been put an end to by the principal, and no positive representation had been made upon the subject. Moreover, what was then said as to the personal liability of an agent who contracts with another person upon a mis-statement which prevents the principal being bound by the contract, is quite consistent with what the Court said in Taylor v. Ashton, that, "independently of any contract made between the parties, no one can be made responsible for a representation unless it be fraudulently made." We pass on to shew that the Scotch appeal case (Railton v. Matthews, 10 Cl. & Fin. 931) does not clash with the numerous dicta and decisions in support of the principle which we consider correct. The question was, whether a surety was not discharged from his liability, because the obligees had not communicated to him facts, which they knew, materially affecting the credit of the person for whom he was surety. At the trial, the judge had directed the jury that the concealment must have been of things known, or which the parties had grave reason to expect, and that it must have been wilful and intentional, with a view to their own advantage. A bill of exceptions to this ruling had been overruled by the words of the second decision, and the case came before the House of Lords. As it was clear from the evidence that the facts were known and concealed, it is not easy to see how the question we are now discussing could have been decided by it. But we say that in it there is not even a dictum to support the view contended for. Lord Cottenham said—

> There may be improper concealment by non-communication, although the non-communication is not wilful or intentional, and with a view to advantage.

Lord Campbell says:—

> If the defenders had facts within their knowledge which it was material that the surety should be acquainted with, and which the defenders did not disclose, in my opinion the concealment is undue concealment, and discharges the surety.

He subsequently says, the motive is wholly immaterial; and after stating the issue, and the mode in which it was put to the jury, he continues:—

> That is an entire misconception of it. According to his direction, although parties acquiring the bond had been aware of the most material facts, which it was their duty to disclose, and the withholding of which would avoid the bond, if they did not wilfully and intentionally withhold them; that is to say, if they had forgotten them, or if they thought, by mistake, that, in point of law or morality, they were not bound to disclose them, then, according to the direction of the learned judge, it would not be a concealment. But the learned judge does not stop here. He goes on, "with a view to the advantage they are to receive," introducing the "and" conjunctively, and in effect saying that it was not an undue concealment unless they had their own particular advantage in view.

It is therefore, we venture to think, manifest that here the sole question decided, and the sole principle intended to be established, was, that the motive for concealment of known facts was immaterial. In conclusion, the balance seems to be as follows:—All the old authorities; dicta by Buller, Ashurst, Grose, JJ. (Pasley v. Freeman); decisions by Grose, Laurence, and Le Blanc, JJ. (Haycraft v. Creasy); Bayley and Littledale, JJ. (Early v. Garrett); opinion of the Queen's Bench in Polhill v. Walter; decisions of Lord Denman, C. J. Parke, Patteson, and Taunton, JJ. (Freeman v. Baker); and the recent decision of the Court of Exchequer in Cornfoot v. Fowke, Langridge v. Levi, Taylor v. Ashton; and the Court of Error, in Collins v. Evans and Ormrod v. Huth, on the side and upon the other, dicta of Lord Mansfield and Sir James Mansfield, when insurance questions were under consideration; of Best, C.J. immediately followed by a recognition of Haycraft v. Creasy; and the judgment of Lord Abinger in Cornfoot v. Fowke; and that of the Queen's Bench in Collins v. Evans (contrary to Freeman v. Baker), and the opinion of Mr. Justice Story.

As to the comparative inconvenience of the two principles, we would remark, that in consequence of the extension of the law by Pasley v. Freeman, Lord Tenterden's Act expressly limited the liability of persons answering for the credit of another to cases in which they had done so in writing, a strong proof of what was the tendency of such action being allowable even when proof of knowledge of the falsehood was held necessary. But if any person is to be liable for a mis-statement of fact, upon which another acts and is injured, society could not go on, without the alteration of all our assertions to mere expressions of belief. It would not be safe to answer a question as to the time a train started, or any other matter of daily occurrence; for from such a principle being established, it would legitimately follow, as was put in the argument in Haycraft v. Creasy, that if, in consequence of your telling a witness that it was eight o'clock when it was nine, and he did not appear in time through this mis-statement, and had to pay the costs of the cause upon an attachment, you would be liable to an action for deceit. There would be misrepresentation and injury! We need hardly discuss further the convenience of such being the law. But in all cases of contract, such as Ormrod v. Huth, the remedy is clear and simple. "Take a warranty," and you are safe.

The law, as it is, seems both simple, just, and convenient. If with the intention to deceive, you state a fact, and injury ensues, you are liable, whether you profit or not by the statement. In plain language, a mistake is not a lie. E. W.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Removal of the Law Courts.—The Profession and the public will be pleased to hear that this very important subject is again under serious consideration. The public are, by the plan proposed, likely to obtain commodious courts for the administration of justice in the most convenient part of the metropolis. To carry out the design it will be necessary to clear away a large mass of property of the very worst description. Thus a grand metropolitan improvement will be effected, and a great public advantage will be secured. The proposed site will be contiguous to the Temples and Lincoln's-inn, and central to the city, west-end, and other parts of London; thus combining all the benefits of a fire-proof depository for many unprotected documents connected with proceedings in Chancery, relating to fifty millions sterling in value. The special and immediate attention of Government and the Profession is now highly necessary to render sufficient accommodation and well-ventilated offices for those who are unfortunately involved in litigation. Nothing can be worse than several of the present courts, which cause great injury to health by the limited space which they occupy, and are by no means equal to many of the local courts. By the adoption of the proposed plan a noble edifice can be formed to include all the law courts, surrounded by the law offices and inns of court, with the chambers of the Profession; also extensive accommodation to the larger portion of the members of the Bar, and a splendid ornament to the metropolis. The change would only interfere with a few leading barristers who are engaged before Parliamentary committees. We trust, therefore, that the convenience of a few leading members of the Profession will not prevail against the general benefit, but that these will withdraw their opposition and submit to a trifling inconvenience for the benefit of the public interests.—Globe.

The Dog Stealing Act.—This Act, which only came into operation on the 21st ult. has already been put in force by the commitment of an offender (as reported in the Times of Wednesday, under the head of "Worship-street") for six months with hard labour. There are eight clauses in the Act. On a conviction before two or more justices an offender may be committed for a period not exceeding six months, or forfeit a sum not exceeding 20*l*. For a second offence the offender is to be indicted, and may be committed for 18 months, and also fined. Limited penalties may be enforced against persons having possession of stolen dogs or their skins. In case a dog, advertised as stolen or lost, should be returned, the party may be sued for a penalty of 25*l*. for not seizing the person bringing back the dog or making inquiries after him. Offenders may now be apprehended without a warrant, and may be remanded or admitted to bail. In the event of penalties not being paid, the defaulters to be committed, with or without hard labour.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LONDON COMMERCIAL ASSOCIATION, AND CREDITORS' PROTECTION SOCIETY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—In consequence of the article which appeared in the Law Times of last week, headed the "Society for the Punishment of Fraudulent Debtors," I am directed by the committee of the London Commercial Association to state, that it has for its object not the punishment of fraudulent debtors (which is the province of those who administer the law, and not of those who merely seek its protection), but rather the power of being able, at a small cost, to protect the interests of commercial men by opposing, when necessary, all such debtors of whose conduct the members (being creditors) may have reason to complain.

In pursuance of this plan, a meeting was held at the Guildhall Coffee House, when resolutions were drawn up that such a society be formed.

Prospectuses were printed (of which you received one) and put into general circulation. Gentlemen most interested were waited upon, who signified their approval of the plan by giving their signatures to it.

A second meeting shortly afterwards took place, when the acting committee was formed, consisting of three gentlemen, who kindly volunteered their services for the present promotion of the objects contained in the prospectus; a treasurer was elected, solicitors chosen, and two secretaries appointed. A circular prospectus was then agreed upon, with the rules and regulations for the government of the society, and power given to the secretaries to promote the interest and increase of the association in any way that seemed to them best calculated for the purpose.

The result of the canvass of the public at large on behalf of the association was such as led to the belief that the prejudice in reference to all modern societies could be best removed by complying with the suggestions of several creditors, not members, who wished to test the utility of the association before they joined it, by its assistance in reference to some particular cases in which they were interested as creditors; hence the adoption of the letter alluded to by you (which was not printed, as you state), and which appears to have excited so strong a feeling in your mind against the association.

The consequence of this course of proceeding has proved beneficial to the interests of creditors, and I am happy to say it has met with the entire approval of the subscribers, and has, by a resolution of the meeting held yesterday, become one of the rules of the society.

I enclose a copy of the first report, submitted to a meeting of the subscribers yesterday, and which I presume you will publish, in accordance with the statement that you are "patiently waiting for an explanation."

Any further information you may require will be cheerfully afforded.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
James M. Constable, Secretary.

73, Basinghall-street, Aug. 7, 1845.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The decision of Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, in the matter of Rye, an insolvent, on Friday last, presents a fit opportunity for a few remarks on the subject of an association calling itself "The Society for opposing Fraudulent Bankrupts and Insolvents." This society, none of the members of which (if there are any), with the exception of Mr. Buchanan, the attorney, and Mr. Constable, the secretary, are known to the public; but these two gentlemen, as far as the public have any means of judging, form the entire corpus of the society. The practice of these gentlemen is, as soon as an insolvent has filed his petition for protection in this court, to which is annexed a schedule of the creditors of the insolvent, to inspect the schedule, or in some other way to get at a list of the creditors, and immediately send off a prospectus of the society to each of them, with a letter written at the end, signed by Mr. Constable, to the following effect:—

"SIR,—If you wish, as a non-subscriber, to oppose this insolvent, and will send me a post-office order for 1*l.* I will instruct the attorney of the society to oppose, and will guarantee you against any further costs, and that your interests shall have the best attention."

In the case before alluded to, Mr. Sturgeon, the counsel for the insolvent, stated that he was instructed that no less than nine of the creditors of this insolvent had received a similar application from this society. It is not at all an uncommon circumstance for the attorney of this society to be employed in one case on behalf of some ten or twelve creditors, from each of which, of course, he or the society have received a sovereign.

Mr. Commissioner Goulburn allowed this attorney, in a case a short time ago, to oppose an insolvent on behalf of the society; but Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, in the same case as that now referred to, refused to hear the society.

At the top of the prospectus of this society is an extract from the LAW TIMES, recommending this society to the public. I feel convinced that this recommendation must have been inserted in the LAW TIMES under a misapprehension of the objects of the society, as there surely cannot be any thing praiseworthy in touting for business in the way before mentioned.

The inconvenience to the court from opposition so got up is very great. There being generally in these cases no definite or reasonable ground of opposition, some merely formal objection is usually made in the first instance, and that failing, every item in the schedule is usually gone through for the purpose of fishing out some objection. It frequently happens that objections are made on the score of debts contracted with creditors who are perfectly satisfied with the conduct of the insolvent, in defiance of and against the express wishes of such creditors. Supposing the case of a creditor who has had transactions with an insolvent which he may not wish to be made public, is another creditor, perhaps an enemy or rival of his, to be allowed to examine an insolvent as to such debts, and expose in a court of justice, against the wish of the former creditor, all the transactions between him and the insolvent? Surely, if the creditor himself does not object to the conduct of the insolvent with regard to his debt, no other creditor has any right to complain: yet such is constantly the practice in oppositions got up by this society; and in one case I well remember, before Mr. Commissioner Shepherd, all the creditors of the insolvent, with the exception of a bill discounter, who opposed by the society's solicitor, were anxious to accept a proposal made by the insolvent for the payment of his debts out of some property of his wife, but this creditor refused to come into the arrangement, and insisted upon opposing the insolvent, which opposition the commissioner ultimately decided to be groundless. What good can such a society do, except to the members of it who pocket the money they then wheedle out of the deluded creditors? Should you think this subject worth your notice, I may, perhaps, have occasion to write to you again on the same subject.

A LOOKER-ON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In p. 375, col. 1 of vol. 5 LAW T. it is stated: "It has not yet been decided whether a general notice to the creditor, that a party has committed an act of bankruptcy, is a sufficient notice to exclude the protection of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29." Now in Udall and Others v. Walton, reported in 9 Jur. 515, it was decided that such a general notice is sufficient; and in Conway and Others v. Wall (14 Law J. 165, C.P.) it was held that the act of bankruptcy must be complete at the time of giving such notice; and in Rumsey and Others v. Euton (10 M. & W. 22, and 2 D. N. S. 219) such a notice given to the sheriff or officer in possession was held not to be notice to the execution creditor; but in Rothwell v. Turnbull (1 D. N. S. 778) a notice given to the attorney of the execution creditor was, under the circumstances, held sufficient. The safest mode, therefore, where creditors hear of the effects of their debtor being seized under an execution, will in all cases be to give a general notice that the debtor has committed an act of bankruptcy, without specifying any particular act, and to serve such notice both on the execution creditor and his attorney; and then, should any act of bankruptcy have been committed, it will be available for the benefit of the general body of creditors against the particular creditor by issuing a fiat within twelve months. Yours, &c.

THE TAXING-MASTERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—It seems, by the debate in the House of Lords, that much stress is laid on the necessity of a taxing-master being either a barrister, attorney, or solicitor; now, the name of the gentleman who is acting as taxing-master in the Court of Bankruptcy (Mr. Winslow, a newly appointed registrar) does not appear in this year's Law List in any of those capacities. How is this? and how does it happen that, though the office has been vacant for many months, no regular successor has been appointed? There was a curiously worded clause on this subject in the Small Debts Bill, as it went down from the Lords, but it has disappeared in the Commons. Can you also inform me why it is that the registrars (as in the cases of Mr. Millar, a relation of Lord Brougham, and Mr. Winslow, said to be a relation of Lord Lyndhurst) are not persons of legal education?

I am; yours, &c.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1845.

TO READERS.

OUR readers will probably have noticed that twelve important judgments in the Court of Exchequer, delivered at the Sittings after Term, have not yet appeared in our columns. The delay has been the result of misfortune. Our short-handwriter was, by an accident, prevented from attending; they were taken for him by another reporter, whose engagements would not permit him to transcribe them till now. The legal reporters of the cases were then on Circuit, and the judgments have been forwarded, that they may append the arguments, but they have not yet been returned. We hope that most, if not all, of them will appear next week. The rest of the Queen's Bench judgments will be then given.

THE BAR AND THE PRESS.

WE remarked last week that the daily newspapers had entirely mis-stated the terms and objects of the resolution recently passed by the Circuits, and upon that mis-statement had based anger and argument, which the fact did not call for, nor would have excited had it been rightly understood. We had hoped they would have exhibited their usual fairness, and published the explanation of the fact contained in the LAW TIMES of Saturday last.

This justice they have refused, although their attention was specially drawn to the remarks in our columns. We have no wish to enter into any controversy upon the question at issue, being unable, as we have already remarked, to come to a satisfactory conclusion upon it. But we love fairness and candour in all questions: we dislike one-sided statements; we object t misrepresentations for any purpose; errors, we are aware, are unavoidable in newspapers, but to continue them after they have been explained, or to refuse to publish a contradiction of a statement inserted under mistake as soon as the truth is intimated, is a violation of good faith which we are as surprised as we are sorry to see resorted to by our contemporaries, especially in relation to a matter affecting themselves.

In such circumstances we can but state verbatim the much misrepresented resolution, and leave it to the honour and honesty of the press to make known the truth as widely as they have promulgated the error.

This it is:—

That it is the opinion of this Circuit that the members of it ought not to furnish reports for the newspapers of cases that occur upon the circuit.

Not a word about "dignity" or "unworthiness," for such an objection was never contemplated. And it is limited to circuit reporting only, and for special reasons of circuit convenience which we set forth at length last week.

CREDITORS' PROTECTION SOCIETY.

IN reply to some observations which we deemed it our duty to make last week, we have received from the Secretary a letter, which appears among the correspondence, and a copy of the resolutions passed at a meeting of the Society held on Wednesday.

From this report it appears that twenty-three insolvents have been opposed during the last three months, the result being that seven petitions have been dismissed, seven adjourned sine die, three adjourned from time to time, for the whole debts to be paid in full, and six final orders granted. The total amount of moneys recovered for the benefit of the creditors was 2,468*l.* Nearly all of them were opposed for having contracted debts without having, at the time of contracting the same, any reasonable expectation of paying them.

One resolution recommends that no opposition should be made upon purely legal or technical grounds, but strictly upon the merits.

So far as it goes, this report is satisfactory; but it does not, nor does the letter of Mr. CONSTABLE, exactly meet the objection to which our attention has been drawn. What is the meaning of a circular invitation sent to creditors, not members of the Society, offering to oppose for them on payment of 1*l.* 1s.? How is this guinea applied? Is it carried into the funds of the Society, from which the general costs of the opposition are defrayed, or is it paid to the solicitors as a private speculation of their own? If the latter be the case, then we have this state of things. The solicitors are paid by the Society to oppose a certain insolvent. But they also apply to the other creditors offering to oppose for them for another guinea apiece. If a number, say ten, of these accept the proposition, the solicitors would first be paid by the Society, and then be paid by ten other creditors for the same opposition.

It is manifestly important that the precise application of these guineas, begged from creditors, should be known, because it is contrary to professional etiquette for an attorney to make application for business by circular, and it is equally wrong, if not rather more objectionable, to do so under cover of a society. And, if the guineas so obtained are pocketed by the Society, it is not a course which any society ought to sanction.

Again, it should be known whether insolvents are opposed by special vote of the committee in each case, or at the mero motu of those who have a palpable interest in promoting oppositions.

Until these queries are satisfactorily answered, it is impossible to say that the proceedings to which our attention has been directed by our correspondents do not call for very nice scrutiny, and if unexplained, for very severe censure.

Still we wait a more explicit reply to the questions propounded above.

LAW TIMES EDITION OF IMPORTANT STATUTES.

The Session just concluded has afforded very little fitting material for addition to this series of practical new Statutes. Two small volumes only will be required; viz.—

The Real Property Statutes of this Session, edited, with Notes, Forms, and Index, by G. S. Alluutt, esq. Barrister at-Law; and

The Small Debts Bill, edited, with Introducti Notes, and Index, by Edward W. Cox, esq. Barrister-at-law.

These, especially the latter, will be ready in a few days.

The new edition, being the fourth, of Cox's Registration of Electors Acts, containing notes of all the points decided on appeal to the Common Pleas, with Index, &c. is now ready.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Law Magazine; or Quarterly Review of Jurisprudence. No. LXVIII. for August. Benning and Co.

The Law Review and Quarterly Journal of British and Foreign Jurisprudence. No. IV. for August. O. Richards.

Both of these periodicals contain matter that must interest every member of the Profession, and both are conducted with an ability extremely creditable to the lawyers, whose literature may not fear comparison with that devoted to the public generally, or to any other class or calling.

Turning to the eldest first, we find in the Law Magazine an article on "Joint Stock Projects," which offers the best warning against the speculating mania by a simple exposition of the law, and the consequences in which persons are involving themselves in utter ignorance of their liabilities.

The learned essay on the origin and progress of Ecclesiastical Law in England is continued; and that is followed by a very interesting paper on Captain Maconochie's proposed system of convict management. Of practical value to the lawyer is a treatise on the Liabilities of Infants in respect of Contracts and Torts; and "the Circuit Commission" is sensibly commented upon. The sixth article discusses one of the vexed questions of our law—being an inquiry how far misrepresentation not fraudulent vitiates a contract, suggested by the important case (as yet reported only in the Law Times) of Ormerod v. Huth. "The Business Arrangements of the Courts" are next examined, and many improvements are suggested. The same powerful hand that has already treated so ably of Crime has renewed the difficult subject in this number. "The Privilege Question" is astutely handled; and a brief memoir, or rather notice, of Sir William Follett, and Notes on Leading Cases, complete the first division; the second being devoted to a copious digest of the cases in the standard reports during the quarter.

The Law Review is, as usual, more discursive in its choice of themes than its elder brother. It treats more of legislation than of the practice of the law, but its objects are not the less important; it is not less useful, and assuredly it is not, therefore, the less interesting. This number opens with an article advocating the appointment of a minister of justice, in which there is no mistaking the pen of Lord Brougham." A short essay on Heriots follows, and then a very just commentary on "Lord Eldon as a Law Reformer." The fourth paper is "On the Proof of Handwriting," and will well reward careful study; it exhausts the subject. A collection of letters of Lords Camden and Northington, &c. is, we presume, from original sources. Then there is an excellent practical treatise "On the Lien of Solicitors." A memoir of Lord President Blair follows. Railways are the next subject, concerning which we have two papers, one on the Railway Board, the other containing practical suggestions to promoters of railways. The tenth article discourses on the Trial by Jury, and then we have a paper on Conveyancing Reform, suggested by the Acts of the session just closed. A biography of Sir W. Follett, containing some original information and correspondence, and a selection of adjudged points, complete the number, which is certainly the best that has yet appeared.

In both of these valuable periodicals we have marked for extract various passages that will exhibit their worth; but we must, as before we have done, give to them a place from time, to time as opportunity offers in the absence of more urgent claims upon our columns.

AUCTIONEERS' LICENSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Under the new Act relating to auctioneers (8 Vict. c. 15), they are empowered to sell all exciseable articles whatever under their general license of ten pounds, but a question has arisen whether they can sell samples of wine and spirits by the single bottle.

You will much oblige many of your readers if you can enlighten them on this point.

MATSON v. SWIFT.

Conversion of real estate—Probate duty.

A B conveys estates subject to mortgages to trustees on trust, by sale, &c. to raise such sums as they should think fit, and pay off the mortgages and other debts, and then to pay the surplus, if any, to A B, his executors, &c., and that without any claim or equity thereon by or in favour of the heirs or real representatives of A B, whether the estates should at his death be sold or not; the estates were sold after his death, and a claim by the Crown to probate duty on the surplus, after payment of the debts and mortgages, was refused.

Probate has a twofold character or operation; viz. granting administration, and also authenticating the will, and evidencing the character of the executor.

This was a suit originally instituted by John Matson and Hannah his wife, for the administration of the estate of John Swift, who died in 1837, having devised and bequeathed his real and personal estates to Sarah his wife, and two other persons (whom with his wife he appointed executors), upon the trusts mentioned in his will. The bill was filed in July 1837, and in the November following the usual decree was made to carry out the trusts of the will; but in the proceedings in the Master's office, it was found that the real estates had, by indentures of lease and release of the 12th and 14th November, 1836, been conveyed, subject to the mortgages, to trustees, to raise by sale, &c. such sums as they should think fit, to pay the mortgages and certain debts, and then to pay over the surplus (if any) to Mr. Swift, his executors and administrators, and without any claim or equity thereon by or in favour of his heirs or real representatives, whether the estates should be sold at his death or not. A supplemental bill was therefore filed in December 1839, praying that the trusts of the said indentures might be carried into effect, and on the 27th of January, 1841, a decree was made accordingly. The estates were ultimately all sold under the direction of the Court, and the surplus proceeds thereof, after payment of the mortgages and debts charged thereon, amounted to 10,830*l.* 1s. 8d. On this the Commissioners of her Majesty's Board of Stamps and Taxes claimed probate duty, inasmuch as though the estates were not actually sold till after Mr. Swift's death, yet, on the principle of equitable conversion, they were to be treated as personalty, and therefore were liable to the duty. The plaintiffs in the cause, therefore, with the consent of the Crown, now presented their petition fully setting forth the facts of the case, and praying that if the Court should be of opinion that, under the circumstances thereinbefore stated, probate duty was payable in respect of the said sum of 10,830*l.* 1s. 3d., that it might be referred to the Master to inquire the amount thereof, and that the sum so found due might be paid to the solicitor of the petitioners to be applied in payment of the duty.

Purvis (with him Glasse), for the petitioners, contended, first, that the doctrine of conversion was not established by the Court of Chancery for any fiscal purposes, but to regulate the descent and devolution of property among the representatives of deceased parties; and, secondly, that in no possible way of looking at the proceeds of the sale of the land could it be considered bona notabilia; from which it followed that no probate-duty was payable. They cited Wright v. Rose (2 Sim. & St. 323); Clay v. Willis (1 Barn. & Cr. 364); Attorney-General v. Jackson (8 Bligh, 15); Attorney-General v. Hope (8 Bligh, 44); Platt v. Routh (3 Beav. 257); S. C. in Dom. Proc. Drake v. Attorney-General (10 Clark & Fin. 257); Barker v. May, 9 Bar. & Cr. 493.

Kindersley and Turner, for other persons in the same interest, cited Phillips v. Phillips (1 Myl. & K. 649); Du Hourmelin v. Sheldon (1 Beav. 79); and referred to Custance v. Bradshaw (before Wigram, V.C.) in which duty was claimed on real property purchased and used by partners for the purposes of their trade; and in which judgment has since been given against the Crown (April, 1845).

Twiss (with him Maule) contended that the property was converted out and out, and was, therefore, in all respects to be treated as personalty; and that the property so converted was such, that probate is required to be taken out in respect of it. They cited Van v. Barnett (19 Ves. 102); Stead v. Newdigate (2 Meriv. 521); Biggs v. Andrews (5 Sim. 424); Attorney-General v. Holford (1 Price, 424); Bac. Ab. tit. Executors and Administrators, E. 11; Smith v. Claxton (4 Mad. 484); Williams on Executors, 192.

Purvis, in reply, cited Attorney-General v. Mangles (5 Mees. & Wels. 120).

Monday, May 26.—The MASTER of the ROLLS stated the facts, and observed, that a conveyance by the owner of real estate on trusts, such as those in the present case, may have, and frequently has, the effect of inducing the Court to apply to it, in whatever state it may be found, the rules of distribution applicable to personal estate. In such cases the owner is, in figurative or metaphorical language, said to have impressed on his real estate the character of personalty, and to have converted it out and out. But this is only where there has been no conversion by the owner, and only where the Court enforces trusts expressed or implied by him against those who have any legal estate interfering with his intention. After the conveyance, though binding claims to a portion of the purchase-money may have been created, the equity to the land remains with the owner, and he may require the trustees to convey either the whole or the surplus, after satisfying the claims; or he may by declaration take from it, without a conveyance, that personal character supposed to have been impressed upon it. If, however, he should not interfere, the Court will consider the person having the legal estate a trustee for the purposes appearing to be intended, but not for any other purpose; and the heir will be entitled to the surplus, though the land may have been actually converted. There is a difference between actual conversion and a conversion out and out; the latter is that which the Court has the jurisdiction to make in the execution of trusts, in accordance with the apparent intention of the owner. In such a case the real estate is not in fact converted at the owner's death, and equity acts upon the trusts required for the actual conversion at the instance of those who prove themselves entitled to the benefits of the trusts. Could the Crown, then, in such a case, enforce for its own purposes the equities between the parties? Supposing the parties to release each other, could the Crown, for purposes merely fiscal, be entitled to the benefit of trusts which were only for the purpose of giving effect to the intention of the parties? I am of opinion that it is not so entitled, though conversion has been made since the owner's death, because, in fact, the interest of the deceased in the property existed as an equitable interest in land of inheritance, and not in the form of personal estate, in which form alone the administration of it could be granted by probate. Probate, so far as relates to the grant of administration, has regard only to personal estate within the jurisdiction which the deceased had whilst living and at the time of his death. Goods, chattels, and credits constitute personal estate, in respect of which probate is granted. Equities founded solely on the right to land of inheritance, and attached to the ownership of land, do not constitute personal estate, though the owner may have so dealt with the land that he can receive the benefit of it only in the shape of money by means of conversion by this court under the trusts. The ordinary has no jurisdiction over such property, nor has the person to whom administration is granted any right by the grant only to the administration of it. Ambiguity may have arisen from the metaphorical language in which conversion is expressed, and from the twofold character of probate, which, besides granting administration, authenticates the will, and is evidence of the character of the executor. In the latter sense, probate may be required to prove the executor's title to personal estate not comprised in the grant of administration contained in the same probate; and in this case the money to arise from the sale of the estate was not personalty in respect of which probate was granted, and so probate duty is not payable upon it. This petition, however, is so framed as to preclude any order being made upon it. If it is desired to have an order, it may be so amended as to obtain it. I am of opinion that probate duty is not payable. If it is desired to have an order made, it can only be done upon amending the petition. His lordship suggested that the petition should be amended by introducing a prayer for distribution; and if he should order distribution without regard to the claims of the Crown, the Crown would have a right to appeal from his decision, and have it corrected if it was erroneous; all he was desirous of was, that the Crown should have an opportunity of carrying the matter elsewhere.

July 8 and 14.

Trespass—Encroachment—Injunction—Jurisdiction—Remedy at law.

An injunction will not be granted unless for the purpose of preventing immediate injury, and there must be sufficient evidence of its necessity on the facts of the case. A possible future injury, which may or may not happen, will not form a sufficient ground for exercising the extraordinary jurisdiction of the Court, especially where there is relief at law.

A question of title will not be determined on affidavits.

This was a motion to restrain the defendants from using a sawing-frame, to the injury of the plaintiff, which, it was alleged, they had erected on his ground; also to restrain them from connecting their premises with his, so as to form a means of passing and repassing, and from permitting their workmen or any one else to trespass on the plaintiff's ground, either from the sawing-frame or by the bridge. The plaintiff is a grazier, and for the purposes of his trade became the lessee of 80 acres of land in Plaistow Level, in Essex. The defendants are ship-builders, and for the purposes of their trade had erected works at Bow Creek, on the river Lea, adjacent to, but divided from, the lands of the plaintiff by an inlet from the creek on one side, and by a ditch on another. The defendants, as it was alleged, being desirous of enlarging their works, in June last widened the inlet from the creek by cutting away a large portion of the plaintiff's land, and on their own side raised an embankment to facilitate the approach to their own premises. They then floated up logs of timber, and placed them so as to form a bridge from their own side to the plaintiff's; they then filled up the ditch which formed one of the boundaries, and erected thereon a sawing-frame on the plaintiff's land, as he alleged. There were thus two means of communication with the plaintiff's premises, one at the sawing-frame and the other at the bridge, and by both ways the defendants' workmen (to the number of 300) used to trespass on the plaintiff's grounds and commit sundry nuisances; so that the plaintiff had thereby lost about twenty-five acres of land, and was otherwise injured in his trade. There were affidavits on the one hand that the lands in question were in the undisputed possession of the plaintiff, or those under whom he claimed, for more than twenty years; and on the other hand, the defendants denied his title altogether, and also denied having permitted their workmen to trespass on his premises. There had also been some negotiations for a compromise, but without effect.

Roupell (with him Craig), for the motion.—There are three grievances complained of, of which the last, viz. the trespass, is the most important. As to the sawing-frame—[The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Why not bring ejectment?] We might proceed by ejectment, it is true; but we hoped to bring ourselves within the principle which has been acted on in restraining railway companies who have violently seized upon lands, till the question could be put in the way of being tried. Here there is no suggestion of title, whereas we shew that we, or those under whom we claim, have been in possession for twenty years, and the landmarks are known, and not disputed. Again, as to the bridge; they say it is no damage to us; but it is a grievance to have our lands taken forcible possession of by 300 workmen. As to bringing an action of trespass, in the first place we could not do so against the defendants themselves, but only against the men, and as they are unable to pay damages, and are so numerous, it would be quite useless to proceed in that way. If it were only a temporary trespass, an action might be brought, but it is permanent, and will be occurring constantly; the Court will therefore interfere. (Coulson v. White, 3 Atk. 21.) [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—They deny encouraging their men to trespass. Now suppose you got the injunction, and the men should disobey, would you put the defendants in contempt?] They would be at liberty to shew they had not given their permission.

Kindersley and Bacon, for the defendants, were not called on.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The plaintiff complains, whether with justice or not, of the circumstances in which he is placed. On the one side he complains of encroachment, on the other side he makes no complaint of encroachment, but only of the trespass, and he charges the defendants with being the cause. If so, there is a remedy at law. But it is said they have workmen who trespass; the defendants, however, deny they gave them any permission to do so. The extraordinary jurisdiction of this Court is clothed with very great powers, but I will not extend them beyond what it has been usual to do on such occasions, especially in a case where there is legal remedy. The injunction which is asked for goes to an alarming extent; if it were granted, these defendants are open to have it said in every case of trespass, that, if done at all, it was done with their permission, and so are liable to be committed to the Queen's Prison, with the poor satisfaction of having it in their power to be released when they shall have shewn that they did not give permission. The Court never grants an injunction unless to prevent immediate injury at the time, and there must then be proof of its necessity; but in no case of possible future injury does it interfere. Even if I had jurisdiction, I could not grant the injunction on the evidence. The plaintiff says the sawing-frame is erected on his lands whereas the defendants deny that, and say the lands are theirs. I cannot, therefore, merely on affidavits, determine the title; I have no jurisdiction. But it is said I have jurisdiction, because the title is admitted by the negotiations for a compromise, and therefore the defendants have no claim. But that is mere surmise; the defendants may have thought it more prudent to do so than to enter into litigation, and may have been willing to sacrifice something of their extreme rights to avoid a legal warfare, and for the sake of peace; but when they found the plaintiff's demands greater than they were disposed to yield to, they may have then given up all thoughts of a compromise, and stood upon their full rights. I am not satisfied that the defendants may not have done some things which may deserve compensation, but I have no jurisdiction to act, and I cannot grant the present motion. Costs must be costs in the cause.

July 14 and 18.

Practice — Opening biddings — Unconfirmed report — Notice.

A purchaser of property sold under the direction of the Court having died before the confirmation of the Master's report, and another person having applied to open the biddings upon an advance of price, the heir-at-law of the purchaser was not considered a necessary party to be served with notice.

George Templer having become the purchaser of three lots of property in the cause, sold under the direction of the Court, died before the confirmation of the Master's report. One of these lots was bought at the price of 480*l.* and the Duke of Somerset offering an advance of 50*l.* upon that sum, a motion was made to open the biddings. The executors of Mr. Templer were consenting parties, but his heir-at-law had not been served with notice.

Erskine, for the motion, contended that it was not necessary to serve the heir-at-law with notice, because the contract was imperfect, the Master's report not having been yet confirmed. The reason that the purchaser himself was served with notice in such cases was because he had a right to be reimbursed his costs; but even if he were present, he could not object to opening the biddings. The executors are consenting parties, and that was sufficient. He cited Vesey v. Elwood (3 Dru. & War. 74).

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—You wish me to make this order in the absence of the heir. Have you any direct authority? You do not know what the purchaser would do if he were present; and if notice was necessary to be served on him, it is a good reason why it should be served on the heir; if on the purchaser, why not on the person representing him? I will consider.

Friday, July 18.—The MASTER of the ROLLS intimated that the heir need not be served.

REG. v. The MAYOR and ASSESSORS of NEW WINDSOR.

A return to a mandamus to admit a burgess, stating that he was not duly qualified in the terms of the writ, is good: but that he was disqualified for non-payment of rate is bad.

A rule had been obtained to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue to compel the defendants to place Mr. Bedborough upon the burgess-roll of the borough of New Windsor. The mandamus issued, and to the return there was a demurrer.

Bramwell read the return. [PATTESON, J.—The people who draw demurrers seem to have lost all common sense.] The principal question is, whether the return is good for stating that the person was not duly qualified. The town council had appointed special overseers to levy a rate, within a parish which was partly within and partly without the borough. This was held to be illegal, and that the non payment of such rate did not disqualify a person from being on the burgess list. (Reg. v New Windsor, 1 Bit. & Sym. 72; 13 L. J. Q. B. 337.) The 3rd section of 1 Vict. c. 78, says, that where any person shall be partly within and partly without the parish some person shall be appointed to make new rate for watching and lighting. I assume the council have power to levy a fixed sum they have not done it. [Peacock.—On the question of the validity of the rate I shall not repeat the argument before taken; but the return states that the party was not qualified by property to appear on the roll; that point I rely on.] But they go on in the return and shew that he was duly qualified; for they say he was occupying a house, which shews he was a proper party to be put on the roll; and the first statement is an introductory allegation on the return.

Peacock cited R. v. Mayor of York (5 T. R. 66), and Rex v. Williams (8 B. & C. 681). The foundation of the right here is, that the party is duly elected. Here it is admitted that he is not qualified, and has never been on the burgess list. (11 sec. 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76.) When a party comes for a mandamus he must shew his title to be put on the roll. The mayor and assessors shall not strike any one off the list, unless some one duly qualified shall object to it. Where he has never been on the list at all, the return is said to be doubly multifarious and repugnant. What is it repugnant to? It may say too much, but it is consistent. (Rex v. Taunton (St. James's), Cowper, 413.) The 15th sec. requires overseers to make out lists of all persons who shall be qualified by occupation of shop or house for three years, and have been rated. He cited in addition Wright v. Fossett (4 Burr. 2041); Rex v. Cambridge (2 T. R. 456); R. v. Archbishop of York (6 T. R. 495); Charleton v. Alway (11 A. & E. 994, note,); and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 69).

Bramwell, in reply.—It might have been that Mr. Bedborough had property in New Windsor, and yet not in that part of it which gives a qualification; therefore this is not a good traverse; it amounts to this, that he is not entitled to be on the burgess-roll because he was not entitled to be upon it. Here it is uncertain what the return means, and where by a few apt words it might have been made so, it is for the parties to do this, and not to render it necessary for the Court to speculate as to what it means. The return is not clear, or it would not have taken my learned friend so long to make it appear clear.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—This case lies within the narrowest compass, and it admits of no doubt. It is a mandamus requiring that the prosecutor may be entered on the burgess-roll, being duly qualified. The return states that he is not duly qualified, which is unquestionably a good return to a writ framed, as this was, according to the case of the King v. Williams (8 B. & C. 681). The return states further, that he was disqualified by reason of his non-payment of the borough rate; but under the circumstances which we have already referred to, this amounts to no ground of disqualification. In this respect the return was not intended for as good, but the defendant's counsel asserted the right of the return by a general denial of the terms of the writ, and the prosecutor being duly qualified, and any other fact whatever which he chooses to set forth as an answer to the writ. (Wright v. Fawcett, 4 Bur. 2041.) The prosecutor demurred, on the ground, principally, that these two parts of the return must be blended into one, in the same manner as if the defendant had alleged the prosecutor was not duly qualified because he had not paid the rate, which is a question of construction. The two points of the return are entirely distinct, and we therefore hold, in conformity to the opinion formerly expressed, that the return is bad as far as relates to the non-payment of the rate, but that it is good as a return that the prosecutor was not duly qualified. The judgment will be accordingly.

Award.

This was entirely a question of fact. The following is the

JUDGMENT

COLERIDGE, J.—In this case an application was made by Mr. James, who moved to set aside an award on the ground of alleged misconduct of the arbitrator, which was to be made out by a careful comparison of the abuttals of a close mentioned in the declaration, which was found to be in the possession of the plaintiff, and not to be freehold of the defendant, with a declaration in the award that the plaintiff had no right whatever to the said close, but that the defendant was entitled to it. I have examined the award, which is very carefully drawn, relating to the several actions, and disposing of them all, with great precision. Supposing the declaration and direction in the award to refer to the same close, there would be no necessary inconsistency where it refers to the different times; the former to the time of the trespass, the latter to the date of the order of reference; but it is by no means certain that they do refer to the same close. My examination leads me to a different conclusion; there will be, therefore, no rule.

Wednesday, July 9.

BIRD v. JONES.

It is not an imprisonment to obstruct a man's passage along a public bridge, and thus compel him to go in the opposite direction.

This was an action for the false imprisonment of the plaintiff, who is an attorney at Hammersmith, against the representative of the Suspension Bridge there, for preventing him from proceeding along a portion of that bridge boarded off for the sight-seers of a Thames regatta. The plaintiff climbed over the hoarding and got into the part which had been appropriated to the sight-seers. The defendant then commanded some policemen to place themselves in the way of the plaintiff, and to prevent him from continuing his way across the bridge, in the direction in which he was originally going. He claimed to be allowed to go on; the policemen placed themselves in his way and stopped him, and, when he persevered in trying to go on, took him into custody, and conveyed him to the station-house. There was a verdict for the plaintiff.

The grounds on which the motion was now made for a new trial were, that the mere preventing of a person from passing in a given direction, leaving him free to go in another, would not sustain an action for imprisonment. Upon this narrow ground the case entirely turned, and as the facts, arguments, and authorities are fully comprised in the following elaborate judgments, it is unnecessary to give more.

JUDGMENT.

COLERIDGE, J.—In this case, in which we have been unable to agree in our judgment, I am now to express the opinion I have formed, and I shall be able to do so very briefly, because I have had an opportunity of reading over the judgment of Mr. Justice Williams. Upon those facts which bring the case up to that point upon which his decision turns, we are all agreed, and the point with regard to which our difference exists is, whether certain facts which may be taken to be clear upon the evidence amount to an imprisonment. These facts, stated shortly and as I understand them, are as follows:—a part of the public highway was enclosed and appropriated for spectators paying a price for their seats. The plaintiff was desirous of entering this part, and was opposed by the defendant, but after the struggle, during which no permanent detention of his person took place, he succeeded in climbing over the enclosure; two policemen were then stationed by the defendant to prevent, and they did prevent, him from passing onwards in the direction in which he declared his wish to go, but he was allowed to remain unmolested where he was, and was at liberty to go, and was told he might go, in a certain direction, by which he could pass: this he refused to do for some time, and during that time he remained where he had thus placed himself. These are the facts, and setting aside those which are not properly brought in question, there will remain this, that the plaintiff, being on a public highway, and desirous of passing along in a particular direction, is prevented from doing so by the officers of the defendant, and that the defendant placed there policemen, from whom no unnecessary violence was to be anticipated, or such as would be unlawfully done, yet who might be expected to execute such commands as they deemed lawful with all necessary force; but although thus obstructed, the plaintiff was at liberty to move his person, and go in any other direction of his own free will and pleasure, and no actual force or strength was used unless the obstruction before mentioned amounts to so much. I leave out of consideration the question of right or wrong between these parties, and consider what would be an imprisonment, neither more nor less capable of justification; and I am of opinion that in this case there was no imprisonment. To call it so appears to confound partial obstruction and discharge with total obstruction and detention. A prison may have its boundary large or narrow, invisible or tangible, actual and real, and still in the conception only; it may in itself be movable or fixed, but a boundary it must have; from that boundary the party imprisoned must be prevented from escaping—he must be prevented from leaving that place within the limit of which the party imprisoned would be confined. Some confusion seems to me to arise from confounding the imprisonment of the body with mere loss of freedom; and it is no part of detention and loss of freedom to be able to go wheresoever one pleases. But imprisonment is something more than mere loss of freedom; it includes the notion of restraint within limits defined by a wall or any exterior barrier. In Comyn's Digest, "Imprisonment, G." it is said, "every restraint of liberty of freedom would be an imprisonment." To this the authorities cited are 2nd stat. 482, and Cro. Ch. 210; but when these are referred to, it will be seen that nothing was intended to be inconsistent with what I have ventured to lay down. In both these books it is clear the rule seems to point out that a prison was not necessarily what is commonly so called, a place locally defined and provided for the reception of prisoners. Coke comments on the statute of Westminster 2nd in these words:—"A restraint of liberty of a freeman is an imprisonment, although he may not be within the walls of any common prison." The passage in Cro. Charles is a curious case, in which some person had escaped from the gate-house, to which he had been committed by the king, and the question was, whether, under the circumstances, he had been there imprisoned. Owing to the kindness of others, and through the favour of the keeper, he had not, except on one occasion, been ever within the walls of the gate-house. The decision, expressed somewhat singularly in the judgment of the Court, was, that his own voluntary return to the gate-house had made him prisoner. The resolution referred to is this—that the prison of the King's Bench is not any local prison confined to any one place; any place where any person is restrained of his liberty is a prison, and if one takes another and confines him, he is said to be in prison. In a case of this sort, where there may be some doubt, it is not necessary to enlarge, and I am unwilling to put any case hypothetically. I wish to meet one suggestion which was put for avoiding any difficulty that cases of this sort might seem to suggest. If it be good to hold the present case to amount to an imprisonment, it will turn any obstruction of the exercise of right of way into an imprisonment, and the answer would be, that there must be something like personal menace or force accompanying the act of obstruction, and with this it would amount to an imprisonment. I apprehend that is not so. If in the course of the night both ends of a street be walled up, and there is no egress from the houses but into the street, I should have no difficulty in saying the inhabitants were thereby imprisoned; but if only one end were walled up, and an armed force stationed outside to prevent any scaling of the wall, I should think it equally clear there would be no imprisonment; if there were, the street would obviously be a prison, yet it is obvious no one would be confined to it. Knowing that my Lord Denman entertained an opinion directly the contrary of this, I was under some serious apprehension, in a case of difficulty like this, in forming my own opinion, although, if a doubt exists, I have not been able to discover what it is; and I am bound to state that, according to my own view of the case, the rule should be absolute for a new trial. My brother Williams, being absent, has requested me to read his judgment. His judgment is this.

I also have had the benefit of seeing, and beg leave to refer to what my brother Patteson has written, explaining the manner in which the whole question is to be viewed, and shewing that it depends on whether the following facts constitute an imprisonment in point of law. A part of Hammersmith Bridge, that had been used as a public footpath, is appropriated to seats, and separated for that purpose; the plaintiff insisted on passing along the part so appropriated, and attempted to climb over the fence. The defendant, who is clerk of the Bridge Company, pulled him back, but he succeeded in climbing over the fence. The defendant then stationed two policemen, who prevented him going the way he wished to go, but the plaintiff was at the same time told he might go back into the carriage-way and proceed on the other side of the road if he pleased; the plaintiff refused to do so. If a partial restraint of the will be sufficient to constitute an imprisonment, such undoubtedly took place here; he wished to go in a particular direction, but was prevented, at the same time that another course was open to him. According to the meaning of the word imprisonment, and the usual definitions given, there can be little doubt, as far as I am aware, that none such exists upon the present occasion. The difficulty arises from the general rule applied to the facts of a particular case. Every confinement of the person is an imprisonment, whether he be confined to a prison, or part of a house, the stocks, or even by forcibly detaining one in the street, which may seem to imply the application of force more than is really necessary to constitute an imprisonment. Lord Coke speaks of imprisonment in law, as well as imprisonment in deed—that there may be a constructive, as well as an actual imprisonment, and that personal violence may not be needed. If a bailiff, as in the case in Buller's Nisi Prius, 62, says to a man, 'You are my prisoner; I have a writ against you;' on which he submits and goes with him, that is an arrest, although the bailiff never seized him, because he submitted to the other. So if a person should direct a constable to take another into custody, and that person should be taken into custody, and they walk together in the direction pointed by the constable, that is constructively an imprisonment of such stranger, although no actual force may have been committed. Such an act is perfectly understood, and the party arrested in the manner above supposed feels he has no option, no power but the power of going in any direction prescribed to him; and if the constable or bailiff have actually given him no return or deviation from the course prescribed as open to him, it is an undoubted restraint on the will, and I apprehend, constitutes an imprisonment. In the passage cited from Buller's Nisi Prius, it is remarked it would be no arrest unless the defendant actually laid hold of him, for obvious reasons: suppose (and the supposition is perhaps objectionable) any person created an obstruction across a public passage in any town, and another, who had a right of passage, to be opposed in his exercise of that right, and after some delay to be compelled to take a circuitous route to his place of destination, I do not think that during such detention such person was under imprisonment, or could maintain an action for false imprisonment, whatever other remedy might be open to him. I am desirous to illustrate my meaning, and to explain the reason why I consider the imprisonment in this case is not complete. The reason shortly is this; I am aware of no case of any definition that warrants the supposition of a man being in prison and having some escape open to him if he choses to avail himself of it.

PATTESON, J.—This is an action of trespass for an assault and false imprisonment. The pleas were, as to the assault, son assault demesne; as to the imprisonment, that the plaintiff, before the imprisonment, assaulted the defendant, and that the defendant gave him into custody; the replication is de injuria to each plea. This puts in issue, as to the first plea, who committed the first assault; as to the second, whether the imprisonment was before or after the assault, if any, committed by the plaintiff. Supposing the defendant to have made the first assault, and the plaintiff to have followed, and much continuous assaulting to have taken place, the plaintiff must succeed on the issue as to the first plea; and supposing a continuous imprisonment to have been established, or an assault by the plaintiff, and the assault was after and not before imprisonment, the plaintiff must succeed as to the issue on the second plea; if, on the other hand, the plaintiff did assault the defendant before the imprisonment, then he was entitled to the issue as to the second plea, even if the assault be justifiable, because in that case he should have pleaded justification; as, for instance, that he was in the exercise of the right of way, or other matter of justification. Now the facts of the case appear to be as follows:—A part of Hammersmith Bridge, ordinarily used as a public highway, was appropriated for seats to view a regatta on the river, and separated for the purpose by a temporary fence; the plaintiff insisted on passing along the part so appropriated, and attempted to climb over the fence; the defendant, being clerk of the Bridge Company, seized his coat and attempted to pull him back; the plaintiff, however, succeeded in climbing over the fence; the defendant then placed two policemen to prevent him, and he was told he might go back into the carriage-way and proceed on the other side of the bridge if he pleased; the plaintiff would not do so, but remained where he was about half an hour, one of them still requesting him to go forward; he endeavoured to force his way, and in so doing assaulted the defendant, and thereupon he was taken into custody. It is plain from the facts that the first assault was committed by the defendant when he tried to pull the plaintiff back as he was climbing over the fence; and as the jury have found the whole transaction to be continuous, the plaintiff will be entitled to retain the verdict as to the issue on the first plea. Again, if what passed when the plaintiff assaulted the defendant was in law an imprisonment of the plaintiff, that imprisonment was undoubtedly continuous, and the assault by the plaintiff would not be before the imprisonment, but during it, and the attempting to escape from it; and the plaintiff would in that case be entitled to maintain the verdict which has passed on the second issue; but if what passed is not in law an imprisonment, then the plaintiff ought to have replied, a right of footway and obstruction by the defendant; and not having so replied, he is not entitled to a verdict; so that the case is reduced to the question, whether what passed before the assault by the plaintiff was not or was an imprisonment of the plaintiff in point of law. I have no doubt that in general if a man compels another to stay in any house or place, against his will, he imprisons that other just as much as if he locked him up in a room; and I agree that it is necessary, in order to constitute an imprisonment, that a man's person should be touched: I also agree that compelling a man to go in a certain direction, against his will, may amount to an imprisonment; but I cannot bring my mind to the conclusion, if one man wilfully obstruct the passage of another in a particular direction, whether by threat of personal violence or otherwise, leaving him at liberty to stay where he is or go in any other direction, he can be said to imprison him; he does him wrong, undoubtedly; and if there was a right to pass in that direction, he would be liable to an action on the case for obstructing the passage, or for an assault if the party persisted in going in that direction, and he touched his person, or so treated him as to amount to an assault. Imprisonment is a total restraint of liberty of person, and partial obstruction of the will, whatever inconvenience may arise, falls very far short of this. The quality of the act cannot depend on the right of the opposite party. If it be an imprisonment to prevent a man passing along a public highway, it must be equally so to prevent his passing along the footway of a bridge, unless he be committing an act of trespass. A case is stated to have been tried before Chief Justice Tindal involving this question; but it appears the plaintiff in that case was compelled to stay and hear a letter read against his will, which was a total restraint of his liberty whilst the letter was read. The definition in Selwyn's Nisi Prius, title "Imprisonment," is, that false imprisonment is a restraint on the liberty of the person without lawful cause, or by confinement of the person to some house, or even by forcibly detaining the party in the street against his will. He cites 21st Assize, folio 104, p. 84. The word he there uses is arêt, which appears to me to include a confining, and Selwyn uses it not to mean merely preventing a person passing along. Upon the whole, I am of opinion the only imprisonment proved is that which occurred when the plaintiff was taken into custody after he assaulted the defendant, and that the second plea was made out. I think the rule for a new trial, therefore, should be made absolute.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I am extremely sorry to find I differ from my learned brothers. We have had a great deal of communication together, both by talking and by writing, and I really cannot find it possible for me to give up the opinion which I entertained in the first instance. I find it rather difficult to separate the notion of falsehood and illegality from the question of imprisonment, and I think it possible my mind may have been impressed in the first instance in some way, so as not to have been led to a proper view of the case. I really cannot doubt that I am wrong, and that my learned brothers are right; but on such a question as this, I feel bound to express the opinion I entertain. It appears to me, and I have listened really with a great hope of being converted by what I should hear—I have kept my mind open—I have not written an opinion in form—I have written a good deal of notes about it—it really seems to me, I confess, from the very language used by my learned brothers, and from the facts which are found in the case, that the imprisonment was made out in this case by the evidence, which was perfectly clear and satisfactory. I take it that the impression of my mind has been led wrong by a circumstance which I always look at with great disapprobation. The Hammersmith Bridge Company thought proper to raise money by obstructing the public footway, and the plaintiff chose to exercise his right over that footway; they thought proper to employ policemen to effect their object, so giving an appearance of lawful authority to an act which I think doubly unlawful—restraining the liberty of the subject and extorting money. That, I presume, may account in some degree for the delusion under which I labour. The party in question endeavoured to get into this inclosure, which he had a right to do, on either side of the road, and they endeavoured to pull him back by an assault, and the moment he got into it they stationed two policemen, with distinct information to tell him that he should move only in one direction. It appears to me that if he had moved in that direction, it would have been precisely the same thing as if those two policemen had taken the man by the collar, and driven him on in that direction, telling the individual he should go there and nowhere else, with a force capable of carrying into effect that which they were ready to act upon under their orders. This would, in truth, have been an act of restraint of his person, and I can find no legal definition of false imprisonment, except unlawful restraint, by force, on the part of one subject against another. Selwyn's definition has been stated; it is copied from Buller's Nisi Prius, and it particularly shews it is not by any technical description of the word imprisonment; and I certainly was unaware that any boundary was necessary to constitute an imprisonment, that the definition is made out. But it is said, in general terms, and I see no reason on earth for disputing it, that every restraint of a man's liberty, under the custody of another, in the stocks, or in the street, is, in law, an imprisonment, and wherever it is done without authority, it is false imprisonment, for which the law gives an action; and thus is the company guilty of assault and battery; for every imprisonment would be a battery, and every battery an assault. Therefore, the language is of very large construction, because an imprisonment is complete without touching the person, without locking him up in a room: where he neither touches the individual, nor the individual touches him, it was not only held, by law, imprisonment, but imprisonment including assault and battery. The language of Thorpe, J. in the Year Book, which is quoted, is, "Imprisonment is said to be in every case where a man is assaulted, or is arrested by force, or against his will, or by it, in a high street or elsewhere, though he be not imprisoned in a house, &c." It seems that, even in those early times, there was some doubt whether an imprisonment itself be technically within particular walls; but in those early times it was discovered that the restraint of a man's liberty by force is the only reasonable definition that can be given to an imprisonment at all. It is said that he was at liberty to go in some other direction. I do not know that he was so at liberty. If a man deprives me of my freedom, restraining me and compelling me to do something else, and does not give me a free passage through my own house, how can I tell he would not prevent me when I offer to exercise the right which he for a moment promises to permit me to exercise. It appears to me a matter of perfect indifference, provided the restraint on my person is in the first instance made out. What does it signify to me if I am told to go, but not to exercise my right to go, in a particular direction? What is it to me to be told I may go another way? He may allow me to do every thing else in the world, yet if he, by direct means of force to be immediately exercised, prevent me doing that which I have a right to do, it seems to me that is in itself the application of direct force, and I can view it in no other light. I may be locked up in a room and told, "although I prevent you going out of the door, you are quite free to go out of the window, and you may subject yourself to the inclemency of the weather." I must admit this is doing a wrong, and it is a wrong without obstruction, yet it is a wrong by preventing my exercise of personal liberty. I am told I may have an action on the case for it. I cannot conceive it should be necessary to make a new writ for such an action on the case. Suppose this man prevents me going where I have a right to go, am I to sue per quod for an obstruction of my right of way only, and for that reason am I to have a special damage on the ground of action. I think the answer would be "You shall not have an action on the case. You shall not ground your right upon the special damage, because you may shew by the detention of your person an injury has arisen, and therefore, for that detention you shall have an action of trespass, assault, and false imprisonment, and not an action on the case, which implies some lawful proceeding producing unlawfully an injury to me. I think that all is unlawful —I think that all is continuous. I think that the object of detaining and preventing the person from exercising his right was clearly proved from the first, and it was proved that the attempt to get him into the enclosure was continued from the moment when he actually left the place, by the actual force of the policemen, who were there for that purpose. The imprisonment, such as it was, which he endeavoured to relieve himself from, was being taken to the station-house and confined there the whole of the night, and this circumstance appears to me a most outrageous violation of the liberty of the subject, for which I think the proper remedy was the present, and on which I consider the right of resistance to the policemen began, and that the defendant had no right to treat him as a criminal for exercising his personal freedom. On the other hand, I cannot but feel very sorry we have not been able to come to the same view of this case. I am sure we are all extremely desirous to agree where it is possible, and we are all sensible of the great value of unanimity in judicial decisions, because it is impossible for differences to take place without undermining in some degree the authority of judicial decisions. I have certainly in many instances not only been perfectly convinced by reasoning, but have been ready to admit myself wrong in my first impression. I have often sacrificed my own opinion to those opinions which I think better, and which I consider authorities on points which I have no right to judge upon, and upon which I have less right to judge than others. But in this case, it seems to me, we are quite upon first principles, or rather, I should almost say, upon the understanding of simple and distinct legal language; and I think that every unlawful restraint of the person of a man by direct force is an imprisonment. I therefore think the rule should be discharged; but as the rest of the Court are of a different opinion, it must be made absolute. Rule absolute.

DOE dem. EDNEY v. BILLETT.

Statute of Limitations—What is rent—Parish houses.

The office of sweeping a church and ringing a church bell being the conditions on which a tenement is held, they constitute such services as on failure of performance would support a distress, and, therefore, ejectment lies where they have been performed within the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 8.

A lease between the mayor of W. and the churchwardens of the parish, of the one part, and B. a previous occupier, on the other part, by which the parties of the first part demise a messuage to B. for 21 years, in consideration of which B. covenanted and granted to and with the parties of the first part that he should toll the church bell, vests the legal estate in the parish officers, no former trust appearing to be created.

EJECTMENT.—It appeared that these actions had been brought by the parish officers of Whitchurch, to regain possession of two cottages, which they claimed as parish property. The defendant in the first action and the previous occupier of that cottage had been in the habit of sweeping the church within twenty years from the commencement of the action, and the defendant in the second action had tolled the church bell within the same period. It was contended for the defendants respectively that the lessors of the plaintiffs were barred by stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, because the parish had not had any occupation of the house within twenty years, and that neither the sweeping of the church nor the tolling of the church bell were to be regarded as rent within sec. 8 of stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27. In the second action a lease of 1782 was put in, which appeared to be between the mayor and burgesses of the borough of Whitchurch and the churchwardens of the said parish, of the one part, and John Batchelor, of the other part, by which the parties of the first part, "in consideration of the covenants and services thereinafter mentioned, devised all that messuage, &c. situate, &c. to John Batchelor and his assigns for twenty-one years, and in consideration thereof the said John Batchelor did covenant and grant to and with the mayor and burgesses of the said borough, and to and with the churchwardens of the said parish, that he should and would at the hours of four in the morning and eight in the night perform the services of beadman in the ringing of the four and eight of the clock bell; with covenant by John Batchelor to yield up and surrender the messuage to the said mayor and burgesses and their successors, at the end or other sooner determination of the said term." Batchelor died in 1798, and was succeeded by the defendant. It was argued for the defendant in the second action that the property was corporation property, and it was admitted to be such by the churchwardens of Whitchurch from the fact that they were parties to the lease. This objection was overruled, on the ground that if the mayor and corporation were jointly interested with the parish officers, the property vested in the churchwardens and overseers for the time being, under stat. 59 Geo. 3, c. 12. The jury found that the mayor and corporation of Whitchurch had, in the year 1752, an interest jointly with the churchwardens, but as trustees for the parish; and that the defendant never had any thing to do with the mayor and corporation. The verdict in each action was accordingly entered for the lessor of the plaintiff, with leave to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit if the sweeping of the church and ringing of the church bell were not rents within sect. 8 of stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27; and to the defendant in the second action, to move to reduce the verdict one-half, if a moiety only passed under stat. 59 Geo. 3, c. 12.

Bull, Q.C. shewed cause.—The sweeping and ringing are both rent-services, and the word rent comprises all heriots and all services and suits for which a distress may be made, according to sect. 1 of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27. The defendant is, therefore, clearly within the meaning of the Act. (Turner v. Doe v. Bennett, 9 M. & W. 643; Rog. Ecc. Law, 229.) The services were consistent with the parish property in the houses. They were ancillary to parochial rates, and thus the interest in the property vested in the parish officers under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17. (See also Doe dem. Hoggs v. Terry, 4 Adol. & Ell. 274 and 478; and Alderman v. Neate, 4 M. & W. 704.) The property is not held for purposes foreign to the parish, as in Allason v. Stark (9 Ad. & Ell. 255).

Barstow, contrà.—These actions cannot be maintained. The services do not amount to or mean rent. "Rent service is where the tenant holdeth his land of his lord by fealty and certain rent, or by homage, fealty, and certain rent, or by other services and certain rent" (Litt. s. 213). This service is not to be done on the premises out of which the rent accrues, but elsewhere. No distress could be made at common law for such rent. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The process of distraining for rent service is certainly singular, because, at common law, the distress is a pledge for payment of the rent. Is the distrainor in this case to keep the distress till the time comes for the next performance of the act. If the church-bell is rung, or the church is cleaned the following morning, is there an end of the distress?] Secondly, in all the cases which have been cited in favour of the plaintiff, the parish officers were cestui que trusts. The statute was intended to apply to cases in which the legal estate was out of the parish, and was vested in trustees for them, where the surviving trustees could not be found. In Allison v. Stark (9 Ad. & El. 255) it was held that where there are feoffees, the legal estate does not vest under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, in the parish, even though it benefitted by the trust. (Gouldsworth v. Knights, 11 M. & W. 337, 342.) In Re Paddington Charities (8 Sim. 629), it was held that the statute did not apply to lands held on special parish trusts. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The sole question in the case of Doe dem. Edney v. Benham, is whether a tenant holding a house of the parish officers, upon condition of sweeping the church, is a tenant from year to year, within the 8th section 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27. That section speaks of rent, and the first section or interpretation clause enacts that "the word 'rent' shall extend to all heriots and to all services and suits for which a distress can be made." Can a distress be made for omitting to sweep a church? It is laid down in Co. Litt. 142, a, "And the rent may as well be in the delivery of hens, capons, roses, spurres, bowes, shafts, horses, hawkes, pepper, comine, wheat, or other profit that lyeth in render, office, attendance, and such like, as in the payment of money, or for these things there may be a distress." So, in Co. Litt. 96, a, it is said, "A man may hold of the lord to show all the sheep depasturing in his lord's manor." So, in 96 B.S. 137, it is laid down, "If an abbot or prior holds of his lord by a certain divine service in certain to be done, as singing mass every Sunday, or to distribute in alms to an 100 poor men 100 pence on such a day; in this case, if such divine service be not done, the lord may distrain for not doing it." Lord Coke observes, "For this divine service certain the lord hath his remedy, and may distrain." We think these authorities sufficient to show a distress might be made for non-performance of the service of sweeping the church, and therefore this comes within the 8th sect. of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27. No question was made at the trial as to the sweeping being not at fixed times, and the rule must be discharged.

In the case of Doe dem. Edney v. Billett, a house was held by the service of ringing the church bells; this point is the same as in the last case. There was a further point, that the reversion was shewn to have been in the mayor and corporation of Whitchurch, and the mayor and churchwardens jointly; and it was contended that the property did not pass to the parish officers. The cases of Allason v. Slark (9 A. & E. 255); Attorney-General v. Lewin (8 Symons, 366); and the Paddington Charity case, in the same book, 629; and Gouldsworth v. Knight (11 M. & W. 337), were relied on for this purpose. We think that the finding of the jury was conclusive on the point; that was, that the mayor and corporation were trustees only for the parish, and as no special trust was found, they might have been trustees for general parochial purposes. If so, none of the above cited cases will apply, and the rule will therefore be discharged in this case. Rule discharged in both cases.

STAMP v. SWEETLAND and ANOTHER.

Trespass and false imprisonment—Commitment—Tolls —Conviction under 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 30; 3 Geo. 4, 126.

Words in a commitment under 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 30, need not set out the exact words, "demand and take" a less toll, but words such as "suffer and permit to pass" will suffice; and the resolution of the commissioners of tolls need not be set out.

Trespass and false imprisonment.

The plaintiff collects tolls at a turnpike-gate in the county of Devon; on the 18th of July, 1842, his son, in charge of the gate, allowed a person driving a cart to pass through the gate on payment of the sum of 4d., the sum which he ought to have charged being 6d. Proceedings were thereupon taken against the plaintiff under the 30th section of 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, which imposes a penalty, not exceeding 5*l*., on a collector who "shall demand and take a greater or less toll from any person than he shall be authorized to demand and take, by virtue of the powers of any Act, or of the orders and resolutions of the trustees or commissioners made in pursuance thereof." He was convicted, and the commitment to prison was as follows:—

"County of Devon, to wit: To the constable of Chudleigh, in the said county, and to the keeper of the common gaol at Exeter in the said county.

"Whereas Joseph Stamp, of the parish of Chudleigh aforesaid, was, on the 10th day of October, 1842, convicted before us, John Sweetland and George Savage Curtis, esquires, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, upon the oath of John Lee and James Palmer, two credible witnesses, for that he, the said Joseph Stamp, being collector of the tolls at the turnpike-gate, called Beggars Bush Gate, in the said parish of Chudleigh, did, on the 18th day of July, 1842, suffer and permit Owen Couley, John Lee, and James Palmer, to pass through the said turnpike-gate with a cart drawn by one horse, on payment of the sum of 4d. as toll for the said cart drawn by one horse, the legal toll due and payable in respect of the said cart drawn by one horse being the sum of 6d., contrary to the statute in that case made and provided, by reason whereof the said Joseph Stamp hath forfeited the sum of 5*l*. And whereas, on the 2nd day of January, 1843, we did issue our warrant to the constable of Chudleigh to levy the said sum of 5*l*. by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the said Joseph Stamp, and to distribute the same according to the directions of the said statute; and whereas it duly appears to us, upon the oath of John Trueman, the constable aforesaid, that he hath used his best endeavours to levy the said sum on the goods and chattels of the said Joseph Stamp as aforesaid, but that no sufficient distress can be had whereon to levy the same; these are therefore to command you, the said John Trueman, constable of Chudleigh as aforesaid, to apprehend the said Joseph Stamp, and him safely to convey to the common gaol at Exeter, in the said county, and there deliver him to the keeper thereof, together with this precept. And we do also command you, the said keeper, to receive and keep in your custody the said Joseph Stamp for the space of six weeks, unless the said sum shall be sooner paid, pursuant to the said conviction and warrant, and for so doing this shall be your sufficient warrant. Given under our hands and seals the 11th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1843.

"Signed "JOHN SWEETLAND,
"G. S. CURTIS."

And the following is a copy of the conviction:—

"County of Devon, to wit: Be it remembered, that on the 10th day of October, in the sixth year of the reign of our sovereign lady Queen Victoria, and in the year of our Lord 1842, Joseph Stamp, of the parish of Chudleigh, in the county of Devon, collector of the tolls at a certain turnpike-gate called the "Beggars Bush Gate," situate in the parish of Chudleigh aforesaid, is convicted before us, John Sweetland and John Savage Curtis, esquires, two of her Majesty justices of the peace for the said county of Devon; for that he the said Joseph Stamp, on the 18th day of July, in the year of our Lord, 1842, at the parish of Chudleigh, in the said county of Devon, being then and there collector of tolls at a certain toll-gate there, called the "Beggars Bush Gate," upon a certain turnpike-road there situate, leading from Beggars Bush on Haldan, in the county of Devon, to Chudleigh, in the parish of Chudleigh, in the said county, did demand and take from one John Lee, at the said gate, a certain toll, to wit, the toll or sum of 4d. as and for a toll then and there payable by the said John Lee at such gate, for a certain horse then and there drawing a certain cart upon two wheels only, and which said cart was then and there drawn by such one horse only, and driven by him the said John Lee, in, along, and over the said turnpike-road, and for which said horse drawing such cart, a certain toll, to wit, the sum of 6d. was then and there payable by the said John Lee, the said toll or sum of 4d. so demanded and taken by the said Joseph Stamp as aforesaid then and there being a less toll than he, the said Joseph Stamp as aforesaid, then and there being, was then and there authorized to take for the cause aforesaid, by virtue of the powers of any Act, or of the orders and resolutions of the trustees or commissioners of the said turnpike-road, made in pursuance thereof, contrary to the form of the statute in the fourth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act to explain and amend an Act passed in the Third Year of the reign of his present Majesty, to amend the General Laws now in being for regulating Turnpike Roads in that part of Great Britain called England.' And we do hereby declare and adjudge that the said Joseph Stamp hath forfeited for the said offence the sum of 5*l*. Given under our hands and seals the day and year first above written.

"JOHN SWEETLAND.
"G. S. CURTIS."

The trial took place at the Devon Assizes in 1843, when there was a verdict for the defendants.

On the 10th of May, 1844,

Cockburn, Q.C. (with whom were Butt and Montague Smith), shewed cause why a new trial should not be had on the grounds that the warrant of commitment did not disclose an offence; and that to "suffer and permit" a person to pass on payment of a sum less than that which ought to have been paid was not the same thing as to "demand and take a less toll" than ought to be demanded and taken, and that this defect is not cured by the conviction, because both the warrant and the conviction are open to the objection that the resolutions fixing the minimum toll are not sufficiently referred to. The jury were directed to consider, on the other hand, whether the magistrates acted bonâ fide; and if so, to find they were protected. They clearly were so, the subject-matter being within their jurisdiction. They cited Meller v. Tooke (7 East); Beechy v. Simons (9 B. & C. 609); Davis v. Capper (10 B. & C. 28); Weekes v. Clutterbuck (2 Bro. 483.) The commitment, if bad, moreover, is cured by the conviction. R. v. Taylor (7 D. & R. 722); Paley on Convictions, 255; R. v. Rogers (1 Dowl. P. C.), and the cases there cited; Daniel v. Philipps (1 C. M. & R. 128); Carr v. Clapperton (10 A. & E. 582). The variance between the commitment and the Act of Parliament is cured by the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 147; and the words used in the commitment are equivalent to those used in the conviction. Lastly, the resolutions of the commissioners are mere matters of evidence.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was an action tried before Coleridge, J. at the Summer Assizes for 1843. The defendants were magistrates of the county, and they pleaded the general issue. The cause of action was a commitment on an alleged offence against the Turnpike Act, 4 Geo. 2, c. 95, s. 30. The defendants relied, 1st, on the conviction, to which, as well as the commitment, objections were made; and, 2nd, on the 147th section of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, which Act incorporates 4 Geo. 3, c. 95. The judge overruled the objections to the commitment and conviction, but he thought the defendants would be entitled at all events to a verdict, by virtue of the section above mentioned, if the jury thought they acted bonâ fide in putting in execution the first-mentioned Act. The jury found very properly they were so acting, and the verdict passed for them. A new trial was moved for on objections to both clauses, and we were willing to decide the case on the former point, as one of very general importance; but, after much consideration and long delay, we have found a difficulty in agreeing in a proper one; we therefore proceed to an examination of the other point. The conviction passed on the 30th section. The offence is thus described:—"Who shall demand or take a greater or less toll from any person than he shall be authorized to do by virtue of the powers of any Act, or the orders and resolutions of trustees or commissioners made in pursuance thereof." By the 37th section, it is provided no proceedings shall be quashed for want of form. The witness stated the offence thus:—"He did suffer and permit three persons to pass through the said turnpike-gate, with a cart drawn by one horse, on paying 4d.; the legal toll due and payable in respect of the said cart, drawn by one horse, being the sum of 6d. contrary to the statute." It was objected that this disclosed no offence against the statute, for that to suffer and permit one to pass on payment of a small toll was not to "demand and take" it. It may be doubted whether the words "demand and take" are to be referred to the greater or less toll, or whether they do not express the complete act of asking for and receiving; in either way, the word "take" implied no more than "receive." There is nothing to bind the magistrates to use the very words of the statute, although it is far better to use the very words of the statute, where they are sufficient to describe the offence, than it is to give a different word. We think the language of the commitment quite equivalent. A toll-keeper who suffers another to pass on payment of a smaller toll than a legal one does in effect ask for and receive that toll. But perhaps it is not necessary to decide this point, because the defect in question is cured by the conviction, if it be justifiable, for in that the words are followed; and the statement is, that he did "demand and take," &c. But then it is urged that both the warrant and conviction are open to another objection. The statute prohibits taking a greater or less toll than the collector shall be authorized to do by virtue of the powers of any Act, or orders and resolutions of the trustees and commissioners made in pursuance thereof;" and the warrant stated the toll taken was 4d. the legal toll due and payable being the sum of 6d. And assuming it is not enough in the warrant to state that the legal toll is 6d. here again it is clear the conviction, if sufficient, will cure the defect. The objection to the conviction was not very clearly put. We understood it to be that some reference should be made on the face of the instrument to the local Act, or to the resolution of the trustees who fixed the minimum toll due, so that it might be found 6d. was the minimum below which the plaintiff ought not legally to have taken. It is to be observed, if the resolution had been stated at length fixing the toll at 6d. still the nature of the offence described by the Act would have required something more. It would have been, in extreme strictness, necessary to negative the existence of any sum; because, however strong the words of the resolution, there might be some other resolution or some other statute allowing the taking of a less sum, of whatever class the travellers in question might be. This construction seems to shew the objection is not well founded. Where the offence, by the statute, is the taking a more or less toll than any statute authorizes, it is sufficient to state the sum taken and the sum legally payable, and to negative generally that any less sum than that had been sanctioned by the statute or resolution. It is matter of defence to produce such statute or resolution; but it cannot be produced. The question really is, whether the statute uses words that sufficiently describe the offence; for the conviction has used them and something more. We think it does; and on this ground we are of opinion the learned judge was right in overruling the objections taken to the conviction; and, consequently, the rule for a new trial must on that ground be discharged.

Ex parte HEMING.

A person is not entitled to inspect the books kept under the 11th section of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, more than once a day.

Copies or notes of the contents cannot be taken without payment of a fee, and one shilling is a reasonable sum to be demanded.

On the last day of Trinity Term, Watson, Q. C. applied for a rule calling upon one of the Masters to permit the applicant, at one or more convenient times of the day, to examine the book which, under sec. 11 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, is directed to be kept, and to make copies thereof, without payment of any fee; and to return to him the sum of one shilling, which had been improperly demanded and obtained from him. It appeared from the affidavit, that after having referred to the book, the applicant wrote down notes of what was contained in the book, whereupon the Master demanded the sum of one shilling, which the applicant paid under protest. Subsequently, upon the same day, he applied to inspect the books a second time, which was refused, although no inconvenience to the course of business would have resulted from the application being granted. The sections 11, 20, and 23 of the Act expressly state that the books kept by the Master and by the registrar "shall be open to the inspection and examination of all persons, without fee or reward;" and "all persons shall and may have free access, without fee or reward." [COLERIDGE, J.—Do you maintain that you have a right to stay there any length of time?] Yes, if there is no obstruction of public business caused. The Masters say that a person is entitled to come only once a day, but there is no such restriction in the statute, and there is no fee given in any way by this Act, and they have no right to demand any. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We will consult the other judges, but I am disposed to think that the Master is right in both points.]

Cur. adv. vult.

At the sittings after Trinity Term judgment was delivered as follows:—

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Mr. Watson applied for a rule for the Master to permit him to make certain copies without paying any fee. We have conferred with some of the other judges, and we think the Master was right. The question also was, whether the same party might come any number of times in the same day that he thought proper. We think there must be some limit; people must make up their minds, and come one day for one purpose and another day for another purpose. Also, we think the copies that are taken at each time are transcripts so as to fall within the rule, and require payment of the small sum set against the service to be done in the Master's office; therefore there will be no rule.

Rule refused.

Case—Inundation.

Where a local Act required a certain number of commissioners of sewers to be present in passing any resolution for work to be done, and a contract was accepted by an insufficient number of their body, under which contract the contractor, by negligence, caused damage to the plaintiff's land:—Held, that the work having been done under the sanction of the commissioners, they were liable. But where the work thus improperly and unskilfully done was not the immediate cause of the injury, but some act of the contractor, there the commissioners are not liable.

Case.—This was an action to recover for damage done by the improper diversion made by the commissioners of the Dartford and Crayford sewers, whereby the plaintiff's orchard was inundated. There was a verdict for the plaintiff, with leave to move, on the ground that this action was improperly brought against the secretary, he not being a party to the resolution whereby the diversion was made within the terms of a local Act as set forth in detail in the judgment; and whether the body of the commissioners were bound by the act of those who informally executed it, and who were sub-contractors, who undertook the work.

Channell, Serjt. (with whom was Shee, Serjt.) now shewed cause.—The cause of action is, making a diversion in so careless a manner that inundation ensued. The point is, that we do not shew that the diversion was made by the order of the commissioners under the Act for improving sewers, &c., and that we must shew that all was done according to this Act; that although they made the diversion, that if the order was not made at a board properly constituted, and that the proper number were not present, they shall not be liable for their own acts because of this irregularity. This cannot be maintained without making them profit by their own wrong. If the words of the statute are held strictly, requiring the five commissioners to be always present, no spade could be used, and no act done, without a meeting to authorise it regularly summoned and held. In this case three persons were acting as a sub-committee to carry out the work; they gave the order, and that binds the body in common sense as well as in law. Whenever a man is in possession of fixed property, he must take care that he so uses it that his neighbour is not injured, whether such property be managed by himself, his servants, or those who contract with him to do work. (Laugher v. Pointer, 5 B. & C. 457; Quarman v. Burnett, 6 M. & Wel. 499; Milligan v. Wedge, 12 Ad. & Ell. 737.)

Wordsworth.—At the meeting of the commissioners, when the tender of the contractor was accepted, seven commissioners were present, but three only were named as present, and none signed it. The damage was done by Button under this contract, thus informally executed, and none others. Under these circumstances they are not liable. (Rapson v. Cubitt, 9 M. & W. 710.) The commissioners could not have sued under this contract, neither can they be sued. The badness of the work was less the cause of the injury than the improper admission of the water by the contractor, for which he alone is liable.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now delivered judgment.—This case was tried before me at the last Assizes for the county of Kent, and presented some questions of difficulty. A rule was obtained for a nonsuit, because the action was not properly brought against the clerk to the Commissioners of Sewers, the act not being committed and done in the exercise of the powers of the 12th section, requiring their clerk to be made a party in respect of the acts of the commissioners, it merely enacting that they shall and might sue in the name of their clerk, and a description given of the number of the acts for which he is to be sued. But it was found that they must be such as are performed by them in the execution of their powers, and therefore that construction must have reference to the 5th section, which enacts that no act shall be valid except not less than three be present. Now the things one of which the plaintiff complains grew out of the execution of a contract thus proved. A witness, the secretary of the company, stated some proceedings of the company in September, October, and November; a resolution that their engineer should make a specification with a view to a contract; that Button should be written to on the subject, and that Button's tender should be accepted. The contract was proved by the witness. There was no doubt about the authority, though he did not recollect how it was given: he was a subscribing witness to the subsequent execution by Button. At the meeting, when the resolution for accepting the tender passed, seven commissioners were present; three only were named in the contract as parties to it, and by none of those was it executed. The work was done by Button under this contract and no other. For want of signing the contract, it was urged that the commissioners were not liable on it to the contractor for any thing done under it, and could not be sued by their clerk. But we are of opinion, under the circumstances, that the work that was done under the contract was done under the sanction of the officer of the commissioners, and the plaintiff properly sued the representative, assuming in other respects they are liable. The grievance was for overflowing the plaintiff's orchard by drains improperly made, and a bank placed there too close to an extensive excavation; the bank was moved backwards, but was erected of insufficient materials, and the water therefore being prematurely admitted, it sunk the bank and went over and into the plaintiff's land. If a proper cesspool had been made, the evidence was that the water might have passed away without injury to the plaintiff at all. All this was then done by Button, and on the contract, and the defendants contended that it was not in the execution of the works contracted for. I directed the jury that the defendants could not be liable unless the damage was done in the execution of the contract, stating my opinion that there may have been want of skill and care in being taken by surprise by a bad vein of soil, and not making the banks sufficiently strong to resist the water; but if the improper introduction of the water by Button had caused the injury, that it was not done by their authority, and that they were not liable in an action. The jury found for the plaintiff, and we think properly upon that point, and that my observations were too favourable for the defendants. It now appears to us that if the bank itself was insufficiently and unskilfully constructed, the maker of it would be liable for the damage which may have been committed or caused by something wrong; hence the commissioners, who constructed the works insufficiently, we think, must be liable for the damage done by the water being improperly let in, whether by their own servant or by the contract from which the injury was occasioned. Supposing, then, that be true, we are then brought to the question whether the commissioners are responsible for this ill construction, where the contractor is to be regarded as their servant. On a careful reference to the case of Laugher v. Poynter, in which the opinion was delivered by Lord Tenterden and Littledale, J. who must be taken to have laid [illegible], and to Randleson v. Murray (8 [illegible] nan v. Burnell (6 M. & W. 499); [illegible] 2 A. & E.); and to Roper v. Cubitt (9 M. & W. 710), it seems perfectly clear that in the ordinary case, a contractor to do works of this description is not to be considered as a servant, but as a person carrying on an independent business. They are, as commissioners, fully justified in employing him to perform the work, which could not exist unknown to all the world as being performed for them. We find here none of the reasons which prevailed in the cases where one person has been held liable for the acts of another as his servant. The learned judges, who thought the defendants liable in Laugher v. Poynter might, without inconsistency, have held these defendants to be not to be liable. The doubt is raised by the contract, which expressly requires all such parts of the said work shall be done by Button, but not in the particular manner specified and described in the contract, "such plans and specifications shall be executed in such manner as the surveyor of the sewers for the time being (that is, the servant of the company) shall direct, in a good and workmanlike manner, as secured by the contract." This passage of the agreement, whatever may be its proper construction, has no application in the present case, as taking the control of the works from him, and placing it in the hands of the commissioners, or the surveyor, and their superintendents; for the work that failed is a part of the work so specified and described, and for which, if ill done, the contractor is liable, and the commissioners are not. We are of opinion, therefore, that the rule must be absolute for a nonsuit—that is, if leave was reserved, but we are not sure of that.

REG v. HAINES.

There is no appeal to the Quarter Sessions against a rate made under the local Act 11 Geo. 3, c. 14.

This was an indictment against the overseers and churchwardens of the parish of St. Mary's, Oxford, for disobedience to an order of the Quarter Sessions of the city of Oxford, upon an appeal against a poor rate on account of the omission of Exeter College. The order directed the rule to be amended in that respect, and that the appellant should receive his reasonable costs about the appeal, and fixed them at a certain sum. A copy of the order was duly served, and upon refusal to pay, a bill was presented and found against the defendants. The indictment was removed by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench, and went down for trial at the Summer Assizes in 1843. A verdict was found for two of the defendants and against the rest, but subject to the opinion of the Court upon several objections. The principal one was, that the Court of Quarter Sessions had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal in consequence of the local Act 11 Geo. 3, c. 14. As the Court decided solely upon this objection, the arguments upon the others are omitted.

Pigott (with whom was Kelly, Q.C.), in support of the indictment.—The Recorder holding quarter sessions clearly had jurisdiction to try this appeal unless the local Act has taken it away. (Reg. v. St. Lawrence Ludlow, 11 A. & E. 170.) He then argued upon the local Act that it did not destroy the right of appeal. (Rex v Vent, 9 B. & C. 283; Rex v. St. James, 2 A. & E. 241, were cited as analogous cases.) This Act is to incorporate eleven parishes of Oxford. Appeal is given to a person who is taxed wrongfully. It does not take away the power of appeal under the statute of Elizabeth.

Whateley, contra.—The question is, whether the local Act, being very detailed, and giving an appeal in express terms to the commissioners, supersedes the power of appeal as given to the Recorder by the Municipal Corporation Act? The parties have appealed under the old Act. It is clear they could not do so, the local Act having superseded that power. [PATTESON, J.—Mr. Pigott, do you mean that though the local Act, s. 30, gives appeal, that as this rate was under the old law, there is an appeal under the general law?]

Pigott.—Certainly, because subsequent statutes do not take away the common law remedy. [COLERIDGE, J.—The present Act gave express power of appeal.] Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. now delivered judgment.—This case was reserved from the Oxford Assizes on several points, on one of which only it has been argued, and the opinion we have formed on that makes it unnecessary for us to hear the argument concluded upon the other points. The question is, whether the Court of Quarter Sessions for the city of Oxford have any jurisdiction to make the order upon the inhabitants, against whom this indictment was preferred, and that will depend on whether the appeal made to the Court is an appeal against the rate mentioned in the indictment. This rate is certainly in some sense a poor-rate, which was made under the special powers of a local Act, passed in 1771, for the better relieving the poor in the city of Oxford. That Act gave a certain specific mode of appeal, but does not give one to the Quarter Sessions. If, therefore, the rate is founded expressly on this statute, then as all appeals to Quarter Sessions must be of express statutory creation, this appeal cannot be justified: but if the rate can be considered as made under the statute of Elizabeth, modified only in its circumstances or application by the provisions of the local Act, then, as the appeal given by the former statute is not taken away it may, by implication, exist cotemporaneously, with the rate in this case. To clear this point, many sections of the local Act must be examined; the general scope of the statute is to consolidate a number of parishes into one, for the purpose of the maintenance and government of the poor, for which the overseers and churchwardens of the respective parishes are virtually subdivided. By the 25th section it is enacted, that the parish officers should not, by virtue of any law then in being, make (saving as hereafter to be noticed), and they were by the Act disabled to make, any rate within their parishes for the relief, maintenance, and employment of the poor, other than such rate for the maintaining, clothing, and employing, and otherwise providing for the poor of those parishes as shall and may be from time to time ordered and directed to be made by the said corporation, pursuant to the powers therein given, and for the purposes therein specified. This general prohibition excepted rates or sums of money which by any special law the parish officers are obliged to pay for the clothing and maintaining of the families, or for any other particular purposes arising within and forming part of any of the several parishes, and particularly directed by other Acts of Parliament. The special framing of this exception seems to shew that the ordinary rating of the poor under the statute of Elizabeth for the special purposes of such rating is within the general prohibition; we use the words general purposes advisedly, for the "saving" seems to keep it alive for the special purposes therein named. For example, the effect of this saving power is to authorise and compel the overseers to make a poor-rate in the ordinary way, requiring the ordinary allowance to be given, and the ordinary appeal for the purpose of discharge. Both these rates, the one under the statute of Elizabeth, and that under the local Act, may be in existence at the same time, which shews clearly they are separate and distinct; the former being made by the overseers on their own responsibility, they could determine the proportion of the individual assessments; with regard to the latter, they would exercise no discretion and incur no responsibity as to the necessity of the rate or the amount of the rate; they would only act under the orders of the guardians. It is observable that one of the earlier Acts, the 33 Geo. 3, passed apparently to meet the inconvenience of this double rate, makes a special provision for the payment of a rate to the treasurer of the guardians of the poor of Exeter, and that local Act, similar in many respects to the present, is now in force for the relief and maintenance of the poor generally. The case of Oxford seems to have escaped notice, at least at that time. The power of the guardians and the purposes of the rate are next to be considered. By the 30th section it is enacted, that a necessary sum shall be raised by a regular poundage, without distinction, through all the parishes. By the same section, the guardians are to ascertain the sum necessary to be raised for the employment of the poor and for other things for the corporation; and having so done, they are to issue a precept to the parish officers of each parish, commanding them to levy the rate, and the parish officers are, by the same section, empowered to proceed in obedience thereof. Thus it appears, without entirely abolishing the existence of the parishes or the functions of the parish officers, the rate is to be made equally on all, without regard to the aggregate property in each, or the charges that may be brought on the common fund; all, for this purpose, are rated as one parish. The same section requires certain things to be done with regard to the rate, yet they seem to be anologous to those required by that of Elizabeth and by that of Geo. 2. The ordinary poor-rate under this Act is not to be published, only the sum is intended to be raised and the allowance is to be made by two justices, which follows and does not precede its publication in the parish church. Particulars such as these are unimportant of themselves, but they concur with others in showing the rate under consideration to be the creature of a local Act, and not made under the powers of the general statute. But when thus made, what are the purposes to which it is to be applicable? To ascertain this, we must turn to the earlier sections of the Act. By the 13th section they may purchase and provide such goods, chattels, and provisions, &c. as they shall think proper for the purpose of setting to work the poor under their care and power. They have, besides, the care and power over, and are to provide for the maintenance and employment, according to the Act, of all the poor of Oxford wanting or seeking relief, and of such other poor as shall be taken into the house of industry, the same to be received and not compelled to come into the house; but idle and disorderly persons, who neglect and refuse to maintain their families, not being afterwards able to maintain them, and also all other idle persons who beg, ask, or court relief, or seek to be relieved and provided for by any of the parishes in Oxford, may be compelled to come in to work and dwell in the house, and to remain so long as the guardians are of opinion they are unable to maintain themselves, or else be otherwise specially provided for; they may be placed to work as idle and disorderly persons. By the 15th section, poor children, who at any time shall be maintained by the said guardians, are to be under their government until they are 14 years of age, and then may be bound apprentices to any creditable person, or to any two of the corporation and trustees for the benefit of the corporation, and employed in any trade or occupation. And the guardians have power to maintain or provide for every such apprentice by the Act; and they have power and authority over such apprentice who shall be so bound by two guardians.

Further, they may hire out any of the poor children from the age of 14, and also any other children in the said house, to work in time of hay and harvest, or at any other time, for the benefit of the corporation; and for such payments, and at such times, the poor persons are to labour to the best of their power and ability, and after the expiration of the work, to return to the house; if not, they may be apprehended, and are liable to such reasonable punishment, of such sort as the guardians shall direct; and in each and every case which occurred whatever, wherein any of the poor shall not work and labour in fulfilment of the powers given by the Act and the rules and ordinances of the said corporation from time to time, the guardians, or any five or more, of them, shall have authority at any time to order such poor person or persons so misbehaving to be whipped, in case they refuse to do such task-work, and they may inflict such punishment on him or them so misbehaving as any such guardians shall think fit or reasonable. By the 18th section, in order to carry into execution the trusts reposed in them, the guardians are empowered to raise the sum of 10,000*l.* by sale of life annuities, which, by section 19th, are to be paid out of the rates. The rates made under the local Act are applicable to the payment of annuities insured thereby, among which may be mentioned the salaries of the officers to be appointed to any office or place, and further, as regards the poor themselves, the rate is made applicable to a variety of purposes, connected, indeed, with their relief and maintenance, yet going far beyond those to which the ordinary poor-rate is by law applicable. We have had occasion, in passing, to mention some extraordinary powers vested in the guardians; to these may be added the enactment of section 42, the main object of which is with regard to bastards, and which provides for the punishment of the parents, and enables any two of the guardians, if there be one of the poor under their care, to punish both father and mother by whipping, confining to hard labour, or by distinguishing by some brand or token of the offence, on some conspicuous part of the person. We notice powers such as these, not to pass any opinion on the wisdom or justice of such enactment, but because all these instances of unlimited confidence placed in the guardians makes it the more consistent interpretation of the general scope of the Act, that it was not intended there should be any appeal against the acts done under their authority beyond themselves. In the same, the 42nd section, the overseers and churchwardens are authorized to pursue the ordinary means against the father and mother for indemnity, and the means it authorizes are of the same sort as those noticed above in respect of the families that are deserted. The parochial law as to the poor prevails generally. The 41st section is very material to the present inquiry. By it the guardians and parish officers may contract for the maintenance and employment of the poor in the house of industry; in case this be done, the poor of such parish are compellable to go to this house, and cannot be otherwise relieved; and to indemnify themselves, the guardians and overseers of the parish may make a rate, in which case an appeal lies, not to the Quarter Sessions of the county, but to any two justices; and the decision of the two justices on an appeal is expressly declared to be final. We hardly know how a stronger indication to take the whole matter out of the general law could have been given. We now come to the appeal clause itself. Section 37 applies to any unequally taxed, charged, or rated persons. In this case the overseers are bound to show the precept or the rate itself, and permit copies or extracts to be made; any party aggrieved may, within a given time, complain to two justices of the city to issue their summons for the appearance of the parish officers before three justices, of whom the mayor or recorder must be one, and two other guardians joined with them, for the production of the precept. The three justices, and two guardians not being justices, form a court of appeal; they are to examine all parties, and have evidence taken on oath, and make a final order binding on the appellant, and all parties rated, or liable to be rated, in the same assessment, and also other persons. In case, therefore, of alleged inequality in rating, a court of appeal is expressly established, the decision of which is to be final. To this extent it seems clear there can be no appeal to the Court of Quarter Sessions. Unambiguous words would be required for the establishment of two concurrent and final courts of appeal on the same subject-matter, and whatever be the extent of the term "inequality" of rating, it is to be remarked that there is, by the local Act, a court of appeal established, such as shows that the subject of appeal was present in the minds of the framers of the Act, and considered to be within the scope of their intention. What the extent of the harm is was much discussed in the argument. We think a party appealing on this ground of inequality might object not only to the excess of one rating and the too limited rating of other individuals, but also to the total omission of rateable property; for this, as well as the above reason, occasions him to bear an unequal or too great a proportion of the county burthen, and it is part of the general objection that he was rated for property not properly in the rate. But that, it should be remarked, is not properly a subject of appeal, but of action. The unequal nature of the court of appeal was also made a subject of comment. It may be answered, first, that a court which must contain at least three justices of the peace, of whom one must be the mayor or recorder, was at the time at least as competent a tribunal as the Quarter Sessions, before one or other of which the appeal may have been brought against the rate; and it was not a less satisfactory mode of trial on a question of rating, because there was power to examine parties on oath. Secondly, it must be observed that the argument drawn either from the extent of the jurisdiction of the court or its competency, is but of a secondary nature, and must not be relied upon as really concluding the matter; we think the question would really have been the same if there were no court of appeal granted by the local Act; that is, if the makers of the rate alone acted under any authority given by the statute of Elizabeth. Therefore, the local Acts must be subject to an appeal given by that statute, and if they do not, this appeal clause does not apply, and cannot be made by implication to operate on what has been done under another statute. An examination of the local Act shows that the rate does not take its existence from the parish officers, who have no power to determine when it shall be made, or what is its amount, nor its employment; and when collected and paid over, it is appropriated not merely to parochial purposes, nor to such objects as an ordinary poor-rate is confined to by the statute of Elizabeth, nor subject to any collateral special purposes to which the rate must be made applicable by a subsequent statute, but it hath been the manifest object of the Act to take the city of Oxford out of the control of the general poor law itself, and to vest the management of the poor in the hands of certain officers specially created, in whom larger powers are vested, both original and continuous, than have been entrusted either to parish officers or to the Quarter Sessions generally. Lastly, we find on examination of the system there is at least no complaint that if the statute of Elizabeth had never existed, or were repealed, every thing would have gone on in the city of Oxford without the slightest difference, except that of the local Act, because the overseers and churchwardens and all other existing officers still perform the functions of their offices which were vested in them; but the statute of Elizabeth uses them for its own purposes, and deals with them as with justices of the peace, constables, and other officers, already known to the law; to this extent, no further, the statute of Elizabeth has been necessary for carrying on the system created by the local Act. The result of this examination leads directly to the conclusion that the Court of Quarter Sessions had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, and our judgment must be for the defendant.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

WRIGHT v. TALLIS and ANOTHER.

There is no copyright in a work falsely published as a translation from the work of a foreign author, and published with a fraudulent intention of deceiving the public in such respect.

This was an action on the case for the infringement of a copyright in a book of which the plaintiff was alleged in the declaration to be the proprietor, and entitled "Evening Devotions, or the Worship of God in Spirit and in Truth for every Day in the Year, from the German of C. C. Sturm, author of the Morning Devotions." The defendants, amongst other pleas, pleaded, that before the writing, composing, and publishing of the said book in the declaration mentioned, one Christopher Christian Sturm, a foreigner, to wit, a German, had written and published in the German language divers books on religious subjects, and had thereby obtained great celebrity as an author; and divers of the said books had been translated into the English language, and had been and were much valued and esteemed by the liege subjects of the Queen in this realm; and the defendants say that the plaintiff, well knowing the premises, employed a certain person, to wit, one Robert Huish, to compose and write the said book in the declaration mentioned, and the plaintiff also first published the said book; and the defendants say that the plaintiff wrongfully and injuriously intending to defraud and deceive the public, to wit, the liege subjects of the Queen, and to cause the said subjects to believe that the said book in the declaration mentioned was the translation of an original book written by the said Christopher Christian Sturm, and to cause the said liege subjects to purchase copies of the said book of and from the plaintiff, and to pay divers large sums of money to the plaintiff for such copies, under the belief that they were purchasing translations of an original work of the said Christopher Christian Sturm, and wrongfully and injuriously intending to obtain great profits by means of the false pretences and deceit hereinafter mentioned, before the committing of the said grievances by the defendants, to wit, on, &c. falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully caused the said Robert Huish to compose and write the said book in the declaration mentioned for the plaintiff, and then falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully published the said work to the public, to wit, to the liege subjects of the Queen, as and for a translation by the said Robert Huish of an original work written in the German language by the said Christopher Christian Sturm, and then falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully caused to be printed upon, and published with, all and every the copies of the said book the following false, fraudulent, and deceitful title-page of and to such book, that is to say, "Evening Devotions, or the Worship of God in Spirit and in Truth for every Day in the Year, from the German of C. C. Sturm (meaning the said Christopher Christian Sturm), author of the Morning Devotions, by Robert Huish, Esquire, F.L.A. and H. Soc.;" and also then falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully caused to be printed upon and published the following false, fraudulent, and deceitful preface of and to such book; that is to say,—"The unprecedented patronage which the Morning Devotions and the Contemplations on the Sufferings of Christ, by Sturm (meaning the said Christopher Christian Sturm), have deservedly received from every class of readers, and their consequent incorporation with the standard literature of this country, has operated as a flattering encouragement to the publisher of the above-mentioned works, to present to the public a translation of the Evening Devotions for every day in the Year (meaning the said book in the declaration mentioned), by the same inspired writer. To descant upon the merits of Sturm (meaning the said Christopher Christian Sturm), as a pious and moral author, would with the knowledge which we possess of his works be superfluous. It will therefore be merely necessary to state that in the Evening Devotions will be found the same tone of holy and pious feeling, the same purity and delicacy of thought, and the same unalterable love of the beauties and excellences of the Christian religion, by which all his other writings are so eminently distinguished. With the Evening Devotions, the entire works of Sturm (meaning the said Christopher Christian Sturm), with the exception of his sermons, may be said to be incorporated with our national literature, and it may be confidently affirmed that they will tend in a great degree to enhance the good opinion which the British public have already expressed of his works. It may however be necessary to state, in order to obviate any mistake which might very naturally arise regarding the different works of Sturm, that the Evening Devotions and the Evening Reflections are two distinct works, the former being a practical exposition of the duties of Christianity, embracing those subjects which could not be discussed within the Morning Devotions, whilst the latter is confined to the contemplation of the works of God as a guide to the knowledge of natural history." And then, and before, and at the time of publishing the said book, and before the committing, &c. falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully stated and represented to the public, to wit to the said liege subjects of the Queen, and to all and every of the said liege subjects who then purchased copies of the said book, to wit, to 5,000 of those subjects who then purchased the same, that the same was a translation by the said Robert Huish of an original work written in the German language by the said Christopher Christian Sturm; whereas in truth and in fact the said book was not a translation by the said Robert Huish of an original work written in the German language, by the said Christopher Christian Sturm, nor was the same a translation of any work of the said Christopher Christian Sturm, nor had nor did the said Christopher Christian Sturm compose or write any such book as in the declaration and in the said false, fraudulent, and deceitful representations and statements mentioned and referred to. And whereas in truth and in fact the said book in the declaration mentioned was wholly composed and written in the English language by the said Robert Huish as the composer and author thereof, and there never was any original work of the said Christopher Christian Sturm, or of any foreign author, of which it was or could be a translation, as he, the plaintiff, at the time of his causing the said Robert Huish to compose and write the said book, and of his said publishing the same book, and of his causing the said title-page and preface to be printed and published, and of his making the said false, fraudulent, and deceitful statements and representations, well knew. That by means of the said deceit, and the said false pretences and representations, the plaintiff has made divers large and unlawful profits, to wit, &c. by the sale of the said book to divers, to wit, &c. and will, hereafter, by those means, make other large and unlawful profits by other sales of the said book to others of the said lieges, if the supposed copyright in the declaration mentioned was and is a subsisting copyright, to the great injury and scandal of her Majesty's liege subjects, and to the detriment of true religion and of the public morals.—Verification.

To this fourth plea there was a general demurrer.

Sir Thomas Wilde (Barstow with him), in support of the demurrer, contended, that although it had been decided by the cases of Poplett v. Stockdale (R. & M. 337), and Stockdale v. Onwhyn (5 B. & C. 173), that works of an immoral or libellous character could not be the subject of a copyright, and that the Court of Chancery would not grant an injunction in respect of a publication for which no action would lie (Walcot v. Walker, 7 Ves. jun. 1), yet there was no reason, either as regarded the public or otherwise, why there should not be a copyright in a work which was in itself unobjectionable, merely because it was falsely stated to be a translation, when in fact it was an original work. The romance of the Castle of Otranto, and similar publications, were mentioned as instances in which works had been written as translations that were not so, or under assumed names, and which had become part of the standard literature of the country.

Channell, Serjt. (Montague Smith with him), contrà, submitted that the plea was good. The publication was stated in the plea, and admitted by the demurrer, to be of a fraudulent nature, and with the intention to deceive the public, and therefore it was a publication for any injury to which the plaintiff had no right to complain. It differed in that respect from such publications as those of the Castle of Otranto, and others of that nature, which professed to be works of fiction, and were not intended to defraud the public. It was also submitted that there had been here a piratical use of the name of another person, for which that person might, if alive, have maintained an action, and which, therefore, deprived the plaintiff of any legal interest in the property of the work. The following cases were also referred to:—Walcot v. Walker (7 Ves. 1); Lawrence v. Smith (Jacob, 471); and Hogg v. Kirby (8 Ves. 215).

Sir Thomas Wilde, in reply, contended that there had not been such a fraud as to prevent the plaintiff from maintaining this action. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judment of the Court.—The plaintiff declared in an action upon the case for an infringement of the copyright of a certain book, entitled, "Evening Devotions, or the Worship of God in Spirit and in Truth, for every Day in the Year, from the German of C. C. Sturm, author of the Morning Devotions," of which copyright the plaintiff alleged himself to be the proprietor; and the defendants, in one of their pleas to this declaration, allege that C. C. Sturm had written and published, in the German language, books on religious subjects, which had been translated into the English language, and had been and were much valued by the Queen's subjects; and that the plaintiff, well knowing the premises, employed one Robert Huish to compose and write the book mentioned in the declaration; and the plea then alleged that the plaintiff, wrongfully intending to defraud and deceive the public, and to make them believe that the book was a translation of an original book written by the said C. C. Sturm, and to purchase copies of it from the plaintiff, and to pay large sums of money to the plaintiff under the belief they were purchasing translations of the original work, falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully caused the said Robert Huish to compose and write the said book, and falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully published the same to the public as and for a translation of an original work written in German by the said C. C. Sturm. The plea then goes on to state that the plaintiff published the book with this fraudulent and deceitful pretence, and professes the object of it was to induce the public to believe thoroughly and entirely the book was really a translation of the work published by the said C. C. Sturm; and the plaintiff falsely and fraudulently represented such to be the case to all the subjects of the Queen who had purchased the same. The plea then goes on to allege that these statements and representations made by the plaintiff were false and fraudulent to his own knowledge. To this plea there was a general demurrer, and the question raised upon the record is, whether the plaintiff can have a right of action against the defendants for printing this work, or, in other words, whether the plaintiff has a true, valid, and subsisting copyright in this work. The question is one of first impression, and cannot be said to be free from considerable difficulty; but, upon the best considerations we can give it, and reasoning from principles which appear to us to have analogy to the present subject-matter of inquiry, we think the plaintiff has no ground of action. The plea alleges that the plaintiff made false representations to the public with respect to the work, for the object and purpose of imposing on the public, and inducing them to give large prices for the copies they purchased; and it further alleges that the plaintiff knew at the time, and it is obvious from the facts stated he must have known, such representations to be false. All these allegations are admitted by the demurrer to be true: the false assertions and representations on the plaintiff's part, and his knowledge that such assertions and representations were false, and that the act was done from base and unworthy motive, namely, that of obtaining money from the public by this false pretence; the first observation therefore that arises is, that the present case is perfectly distinguishable from those which have been referred to at the bar of books of amusement or instruction having been published as translations, whilst they have been, in fact, original works, or having been published in an assumed, instead of a true name; such was the instance given of the Castle of Otranto, professing to be translated from the Italian; and such was the case of innumerable works published under assumed names; such as books of fiction, voyages and travels, and copies of works of fiction or romance, or even works of science and instruction. For in all these instances the misrepresentation is innocent and harmless; there is not found in any one of those cases any serious design on the part of the author to deceive the purchaser, or to make gain and profit from it by a false representation. The purchasers, for any thing which appears to the contrary, would have purchased at the same price, if they had known the name of the author was an assumed, and not a genuine name, or had known the work was original, and not translated, and, indeed, in most of the cases which may be put, the statement is not calculated in its nature to deceive any one, but is on its very first glance apparent. In these cases, therefore, it was perfectly indifferent to the public whether the representation was true or not; and in all probability the book would have obtained an equal sale, whether it was a translation or an original work—whether the name of the author was assumed or genuine. But in the case before us no one of these observations will apply. The facts stated in the plea import a serious design on the part of the plaintiff to impose on the credulity of each purchaser by fixing on the name of an author who had a real existence, and who possessed a large share of weight and estimation in the opinion of the public. The object of the plaintiff is not merely to conceal the name of the genuine author, and to publish opinions to the world under an innocent disguise, but it is to practise on some of the best feelings of the public, namely, their religious feelings, and thus to induce them to believe the work is the original work of an author known and esteemed by the public, whom he names as the author, and at the same time knows it not to be so, and thereby obtains from the purchaser a greater price than he would otherwise have obtained. The transaction ranges itself under the head of crimen falsi, for it is a species of obtaining money under false pretences; and parties publishing works known by themselves to be under false names, in order that the work might become purchased, would be liable to the actions stated. We think the plaintiff cannot be considered as having a valid and subsisting copyright in a work the sale of which produces such consequences, or that he is capable of maintaining an action in respect of its infringement. Cases in which a copyright has been held not to exist were works that were subversive of good order, virtue, morality, or religion; they do not bear directly on the case before us, but they have so far an analogy with it that the rule which denies the existence of copyright in these cases is a rule established for the benefit and protection of the public. We think, for these reasons, the defendants are entitled to the judgment of the Court.

Judgment for defendants.

Friday, August 8.
Before Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE.
Re JACOB.

Where a person carried on the business of an auctioneer previous to the passing of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, and incurred debts in such business, but had not carried such business since the passing of that Act:
Held, that he was not a trader within the meaning of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, so as to preclude him from the benefit of petitioning for protection under such Act.

Insolvent applied to this Court on the 1st of August instant, for his discharge from custody, but was then remanded in consequence of his having omitted from his schedule several debts (see 4 Law T. 302). Having now amended his schedule in that respect, he again applied for his discharge. Previous to the passing of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, the insolvent had carried on the business of an auctioneer, but had discontinued such business some time before the passing of that Act.

Lucas, on behalf of a creditor, opposed the discharge of the insolvent. The debts due from the insolvent amount to more than 300*l.* and a great portion of those debts were contracted during the time the insolvent was carrying on business as an auctioneer. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, expressly provides that auctioneers shall be deemed traders, and subject as such to the bankrupt laws. This insolvent being, therefore, a trader and subject to the bankrupt laws, does not come within the terms of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, which only applies to persons not being traders, or being traders and owing less than 300*l.* This Court has, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain this petition, which must be dismissed.

His HONOUR.—At the time the insolvent carried on the business of an auctioneer, the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122 (which first constituted an auctioneer a trader subject to the bankrupt laws), had not passed. The insolvent is not a trader within the meaning of the Act of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. He is, therefore, entitled to petition this Court under that Act.

Wednesday, Aug. 13.
Re FISH, a Bankrupt.

Where a bankrupt swells his balance-sheet to an unnecessary length, the Court will order the unnecessary matter to be taken off the file, and reprimand the accountant who prepared it.

This was a meeting for the last examination of the bankrupt, and for passing his accounts. This bankrupt was only in a small way of business. The balance-sheet presented by him to the Court consisted of sixty-three pages, fifty of which were mere copies of his books.

His HONOUR inquired who was the accountant who prepared the bankrupt's balance-sheet, and having reprimanded him, ordered the unnecessary sheets to be taken off the file of the Court.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.
(Before Mr. Commissioner Serjt. STEPHEN.)
Monday, Aug. 11.
Re SARAH BROWNE.

Is the residence within the district required to be during the twelve months next before the petition?
Practice on ordering an insolvent's pension to be set aside to pay creditors gradually.

On this case coming on, Short, attorney for the insolvent, reminded the Court that on filing the petition a doubt had arisen whether the Bristol Courts had jurisdiction in this case. The insolvent had formerly lived in Aberayon, in Cardiganshire, within the Bristol district, for twelve months and upwards, but had removed to Bawdsey, in Suffolk, where she was residing at the time of her petition, and where she had not resided a sufficient length of time to give her a right to petition the London Courts.

His HONOUR referred to the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 1, reading the words "may present a petition for protection from process to the Court of Bankruptcy, if he has resided twelve calendar months in London, or within the London district, or to the Commissioner of Bankrupts in the county within whose district he may have resided twelve calendar months." The petition also requires a statement "that your petitioner has resided twelve calendar months within the district." Does not that mean that the last twelve months' residence has been within the district? It appears to me that when a person says, "I have resided twelve months at Bristol," that he means that he resided there during the last twelve months.

Homes referred to 1 Quarterly Law Review, 188, where a writer, referring to this point, says, "It is probable that the Legislature meant that the period of residence should be twelve months next before the filing of the petition; but as this intention, if it existed, is not expressed, it has been considered that any twelve months, though not consecutive, will be sufficient. There seems, therefore, to be no reason why a residence within the district during the first twelve months of the petitioner's existence should not be regarded as bringing him within the term of the enactment."

His HONOUR.—I cannot agree with that writer, and I certainly would not entertain a petition where the insolvent had not resided in my district for many years.

Short.—The petitioner would have no district, and would be unable to petition at all if not in Bristol, for she has not resided twelve months in any other district. Probably the Legislature intended that an insolvent might petition wherever he had a settlement.

Palmer, who appeared for some creditors, and Homes, for others, stated that the creditors were not hostile to the insolvent, and did not desire to dismiss her petition; they were anxious only to get a portion of her property (being pensions from the East India Company) set aside for her creditors. They would not, therefore, take any objection on the ground of jurisdiction.

His HONOUR.—Under these circumstances, the petition may go on; but if creditors objected, I should doubt whether I could proceed with this petition.

It then appeared that insolvent had two pensions, from the East India Company and Lord Clive's Military Fund, amounting to 273*l.* per annum.

Palmer asked that 200*l.* a year should be set aside for the creditors.

His HONOUR ordered that the insolvent might be allowed 100*l.* a year, and that the residue of her pensions should be set aside towards the gradual payment of her debts.

Thursday, August 14.
Re DAVID REES.

If the affidavit annexed to the petition be not sworn as affidavits are required to be sworn in bankruptcy, the petition will be dismissed.

The affidavit annexed to the petition in this case was sworn before a commissioner for taking affidavits in the Court of Queen's Bench, instead of being sworn as affidavits in bankruptcy are required to be sworn.

Homes, for a creditor, took the objection. The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 2, requires that "such affidavit shall be sworn in like manner as affidavits in matter of bankruptcy may be sworn by any law now in force relating to bankrupts." Affidavits in bankruptcy may be sworn before the Court of Review, or before either of the subdivision Courts in bankruptcy, or any commissioner, or the Master, or any registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy or Master ordinary or extraordinary in Chancery, 5 & 6 Vic. c. 122, s. 67. If the affidavit be not sworn as directed by the Act, the petitioner has failed to comply with one of the preliminary conditions requisite to give the Court jurisdiction over the petition. The same section which requires the affidavit states, that in its absence the petition must be dismissed.

Abbott, solicitor, who acted as agent for the insolvent's attorney, asked the Court to allow the insolvent to be re-sworn.

His HONOUR.—The words of the second section require such affidavit so sworn to be annexed to such petition at the time of filing the same: if it would be of any service, I would now allow a proper affidavit to be annexed, but it would not now avail the insolvent. The objection is, that at the time of filing the petition there was not annexed to it the adaffivit required by the statute; and in that case there is no other course open but to dismiss the petition. I shall allow the insolvent to petition the Court again.

Petition dismissed.

Summary.

THE importance of some of the new statutes will compel us to give them out of their order. The Small Debts Bill is presented to-day, and next week we will publish some more of the most immediate interest, with requisite comments. The legislation of the last session is large in bulk, but of no great interest to the Profession.

NEW STATUTES

Of the Sessions 8 Victoria.

In consequence of the immediate importance of this, the Small Debts Act, which is now in operation, we take it out of its place and present it now entire.

CAP. CXXVII.

An Act for the better securing the Payment of Small Debts. (August 9, 1845.)

1. Creditor obtaining judgment or order in respect of a debt not exceeding 20*l. may summon the debtor before a Commissioner of Bankrupts or Court of Requests, &c. On debtor appearing he may be examined by the commissioner or Court.—Creditor may also be examined.—If debtor fail to attend, or to make satisfactory answer, or shall appear to have been guilty of fraud, &c. he may be committed.*—Whereas it is expedient and just to give creditors a further remedy for the recovery of debts due to them: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That if any person is or shall be indebted to any other in a sum not exceeding twenty pounds besides costs of suit, by force of any judgment obtained, or of any order for the payment thereof, or of any costs in any court, which judgment or order shall have been obtained from any court of competent jurisdiction in England, it shall be lawful for the creditor so having obtained a judgment or order to obtain a summons from any commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy for the district in which such debtor shall reside or be, or from any court of requests or conscience, or inferior court of record for the recovery of debts, or other court for the recovery of small debts, within the jurisdiction of which such debtor shall reside or be, having a judge who shall be either a barrister-at-law, special pleader, or an attorney who shall have practised as an attorney for not less than ten years in one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, which summons such commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy or such court shall be authorized and required to grant, according to the form in schedule (A) hereunto annexed, upon the application of such creditor by any petition or note in writing, according to the form in schedule (B) hereunto annexed; and the debtor appearing before such commissioner or court at the time to be appointed in such summons, shall be examined by the said commissioner or court, and shall, if the creditor think fit, be interrogated before such commissioner or court by the creditor summoning him, touching the manner and time of his contracting his debt, the means or prospect of payment he then had, the property or means of payment he still hath or may have, the disposal he may have made of any property since contracting such debt; and such creditor shall also, if such commissioner or court shall think fit, be examined by the said commissioner or court touching his claim against the said debtor, and shall, if the debtor think fit, be interrogated before such commissioner or court by the said debtor touching the said claim against him; and it shall be lawful for such commissioner or court to make an order on the said debtor for the payment of his debt by instalments or otherwise; and in case such debtor shall not attend as required by the said summons, and shall not allege a sufficient excuse for not attending, or shall, if attending, refuse to disclose his property, or his transactions respecting the same or respecting the contracting of the debt, or shall not make answer thereof to the satisfaction of the commissioner or court, or shall appear to such commissioner or court to have been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt, or of having wilfully contracted it without reasonable prospect of being able to pay it, or of having concealed or made away with his property in order to defeat his creditors, or if he appears to have the means of paying the same by instalments or otherwise, and shall not pay the same at such times as the commissioner or court shall order, or as the court shall have ordered in which the original judgment shall have been obtained or order made, then in any of the said cases it shall be lawful for such commissioner or the judge of such court to order such debtor to be committed, for any time not exceeding forty days, to the common gaol wherein the debtors under judgment and in execution of the superior courts of justice may be confined within the county, city, borough, or place in which such debtor shall be resident, or to any other gaol or debtors prison within the same county, city, borough, or place which shall by any declaration of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State be allowed as a place of imprisonment under this Act, so long as such declaration shall remain in force and unrevoked.

2. How order shall be executed.—And be it enacted, That every bailiff and messenger to whom any such order shall be issued, or who shall be acting as an officer of the high bailiff of Westminster or Southwark in the execution of any such order issued to such high bailiff, shall be thereby empowered to take the body of the person against whom such order shall be made, and all constables and other peace officers within their several jurisdictions shall aid in the execution of every such order; and no protection, or interim or other order issuing out of any court of bankruptcy or for the relief of insolvent debtors, nor any certificate obtained after such order for imprisonment under this Act, shall be available to any debtor imprisoned under such order as aforesaid.

3. Imprisonment not to extinguish the debt, but on payment thereof, or of the instalment payable, and the costs, &c. the debtor to be discharged.—And be it declared and enacted, That no imprisonment under this Act shall in anywise operate as satisfaction or extinguishment of any debt or demand; but any person imprisoned under this Act, who shall have paid or satisfied the debt or demand, or the instalments thereof payable, and costs remaining due at the time of the order of imprisonment being made, and all subsequent costs, shall upon entry of such payment indorsed on the order of imprisonment, signed by the plaintiff or his attorney, be discharged out of custody by leave of a commissioner or judge of the court in which the order of imprisonment was made.

4. Certain Courts to have the like powers in original suits.—And be it enacted, That the judge of every court of requests or conscience, and of every inferior court of record for the recovery of debts, and of every other court for the recovery of small debts, of which the judge is a barrister-at-law or special pleader, or an attorney of ten years' standing of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, in which court proceedings shall be had for the recovery of any debt or demand within the jurisdiction of the said court, shall have the like powers, in the suit instituted for recovery of such debt or demand, of examining the parties to the suit, and, upon occasion of pronouncing judgment therein, if judgment be given for the plaintiff, shall have the like powers of further examining the parties, and, in the several cases hereinbefore specified, of committing the defendant to prison, which he might exercise under the provisions hereinbefore contained, if judgment for such debt or demand had been obtained in his court, and the judgment creditor had obtained a summons for such defendant from the same court under this Act; and all the provisions of this Act shall be deemed to apply to such case as if such summons had been obtained.

6. Where several courts exist in the same town, &c. business not to be transferred from one to the other.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That in any city, town, or district wherein there are several courts for the recovery of small debts, neither of the said courts shall have any power under this Act in respect of any debt which shall have been sued for in the other of the said courts in the same city, town, or district, unless such other of the said courts shall not have a judge qualified as hereinbefore specified.

6. Application to commissioners, &c. need not be made by counsel or attorney. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116.—And be it declared and enacted, That in making application to any commissioner or court as aforesaid, or taking any proceedings under this Act, or under the Act of the last session of Parliament, intituled an Act to amend the Law of Insolvency, Bankruptcy, and Execution, or under an Act made in the sixth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled An Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, it shall not be requisite for any party, whether creditor or debtor, to [...] either counsel or attorney or solicitor.

[...] vits in bankruptcy and insolvency may be [...] keepers of prisons.—And be it enacted, That any affidavit of any prisoner in any of her Majesty's prisons or gaols in England to be used in matters of bankruptcy or insolvency, or under or by virtue of any statute relating to bankrupts or insolvent debtors, or of this Act, may be sworn before the visiting or other justice, or if within twelve hours none such shall attend, then by the principal keeper or gaoler of such prisons or gaols respectively, and they and he shall be respectively authorized and required to administer the oath upon any such affidavit or affidavits.

8. Actual necessaries of judgment debtors not to be seized.—And whereas it is expedient to protect the actual necessaries of or belonging to judgment debtors from being seized in execution; be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act the wearing apparel and bedding of any judgment debtor or his family, and the tools and implements of his trade, the value of such apparel, bedding, tools, and implements not exceeding in the whole the value of five pounds, shall not be liable to seizure under any execution or order of any court against his goods and chattels.

9. Jurisdiction of courts may be altered.—And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, to enlarge the jurisdiction of any such court of requests or conscience, or inferior court of record for the recovery of debts, or other court for the recovery of small debts, to all debts and demands, whether on balance of account or otherwise, or damage arising out of any express or implied agreement, not exceeding twenty pounds, and in such cases as her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, may think fit, to enlarge the district of any such court, or, where any part of the district of such court is comprised within the jurisdiction of any other like court, to contract the same, and also to make any alteration or regulation for the holding or sitting of any such court, both as to time and place, any thing in any Act constituting any such court to the contrary notwithstanding; and all powers and authorities now vested in any such court, the jurisdiction or district whereof shall be so enlarged, or the district whereof shall be so contracted, shall apply and extend to the jurisdiction or district given or limited under the powers of this Act, and that as fully as if such jurisdiction or district had been given by the Act or Acts establishing or regulating such court and its proceedings; provided always, that no such order shall take effect in respect of any court which shall not have a judge who is either a barrister-at-law or special pleader, or an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster who shall have practised as an attorney for at least ten years; and in any court in which there shall be no judge qualified as aforesaid, the person or persons to whom the appointment of judge, or, if there be no judge, to whom the appointment of any clerk of the court, belongs, or the majority of such persons, who shall be present at a meeting called for the purpose, shall within three calendar months next after the making of any such order, and also within three calendar months next after any vacancy of the said office of judge, appoint a judge, qualified as aforesaid, subject to the approval of her Majesty, to be signified under the royal sign manual; and in default of any such appointment as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for her Majesty to appoint a judge, qualified as hereinbefore provided, for the court in which such default shall have been made; provided always, that no judge, clerk, or officer of any court whose emoluments shall be increased under this Act, nor any person or persons whose franchise or right of appointment to any office in any court shall become more valuable under this Act, shall be entitled to any compensation for any such increase of emoluments, or increased value of any such franchise or right of appointment, if the same, or the value of the same, shall be diminished or taken away by any alteration in the constitution of the said court, or otherwise, by Act of of Parliament: provided also, that notice of the intention of her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, to take into consideration the expediency of making any such order, and of the time when the same will be considered, shall be given in the London Gazette one calendar month at least before the same shall be so considered.

10. Removal of judges of inferior courts for misbehaviour or incapacity.—And be it enacted, That every judge of any such court of requests or conscience, or inferior court of record for the recovery of debts, or other court for the recovery of small debts, shall be removable by the Lord Chancellor for misbehaviour or incapacity.

11. Who shall be competent to hold the court.—And be it enacted, That in all cases of debts and demands which were not within the jurisdiction of the court before the passing of this Act, and also whenever the number of commissioners present at any court shall not be sufficient for the trial of causes according to the constitution of the court before the passing of this Act, the judge shall act alone, with all the powers of the court, and shall determine all questions, as well of fact as of law, in the causes which shall be brought before him.

12. Appointing of a deputy to act during the absence of the judge.—And be it enacted, That in all cases of illness or unavoidable absence, the cause whereof shall be entered in the minutes of the court, it shall be lawful for the judge, or, in case of the inability of the judge, for the commissioners, or the person or persons to whom the appointment of the judge belongs, to appoint a deputy, qualified as is hereinbefore provided in the case of the judge, to act for him during such illness or unavoidable absence; and it shall also be lawful for the judge, with the approval of the person or persons to whom the appointment of judge belongs, and of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, to appoint a deputy, qualified as aforesaid, to act for him for any time or times not exceeding in the whole one calendar month in any consecutive period of twelve calendar months; and any deputy so appointed, while acting under such appointment, shall have all the powers and perform all the duties of such judge: provided always, that, independently of the power herein contained, every judge shall have the same power of appointing a deputy or deputies to hold this court for all cases of debts and demands within the jurisdiction of the court, as it was constituted before the passing of this Act, which he has under the Act or Acts according to which the court is now constituted, and that such deputy or deputies, if qualified as is hereinbefore provided in the case of the judge or in the case of any deputy appointed before the passing of this Act, if approved by one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, shall have in all cases within the extended jurisdiction of the court the powers and privileges, and be subject to the same liabilities, and perform all the duties of such judge while acting under such appointment.

13. Execution of process in Westminster and Southwark.—And be it enacted, That, until Parliament shall otherwise direct, the execution of all process issuing out of any of the last-mentioned courts, the jurisdiction of which shall include the city and liberty of Westminster or any part thereof, shall belong to the high bailiff of Westminster, and out of any court the jurisdiction of which shall include the borough of Southwark, or any part thereof, shall belong to the high bailiff of Southwark.

14. Power for judge to frame a table of fees.—And be it enacted, That the judge of any such court, the jurisdiction or district whereof shall be extended under the powers of this Act, shall, subject to the approval of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, frame a table of fees to be payable by the suitors of such court or courts in respect of every proceeding therein; and a table of such fees shall be put up in some conspicuous place in the court-house and in the clerk's office; and the fees on every proceeding shall be paid, in the first instance, by the plaintiff or party on whose behalf such proceeding is to be had, on or before such proceeding; and all such fees shall be received by the clerk or clerks of such court, who shall account to the other officers of such court for the amount or proportion thereof which shall be payable to them respectively, and shall also in the month of March in every year render to one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state an account of all such fees which shall have been received in the year ending on the last day of December then next preceding: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Secretary of State to lessen the amount of the fees to be taken in any one or more of the courts the jurisdiction or district whereof shall be extended as aforesaid, in such manner as to him shall seem fit, and again to increase such fees, so that the scale of fees given in the schedule to this Act, marked (C), be not in any case surpassed: provided also, that in all cases where any judge, clerk, or other officer of any such court shall have been paid by salary instead of fees, such judge, clerk, or other officer shall continue to receive such salary in respect of the business now within the jurisdiction of such court, and, in respect of the business under the powers of this Act, such fees applicable thereto as are set out in the said schedule (C), or such additional salary instead of such fees as the Secretary of State shall direct; and all sums payable in the name of fees to any such judge, clerk, or other officer, over and above the amount of such salary, shall be applicable for such purposes and in the manner prescribed by the Act or Acts of Parliament under which such court is constituted; and that in awarding compensation to any judge, clerk, or officer of any such court under the provisions of the said Act of the last session of Parliament, account shall be taken of the fees and emoluments to which he shall become entitled under this Act, and any increase of his fees and emoluments under this Act shall go in diminution of the amount to be awarded to him for such compensation.

15. Fees in courts of bankruptcy.—And be it enacted, That the registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy shall be entitled to take the fees on every proceeding had under this Act before or under the authority of any commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy in his district which are specified in the schedule marked (D) hereunto annexed, and the messengers and ushers of the Court of Bankruptcy shall be severally entitled to have the same fees which are provided as the bailiffs and serjeants' fees in the schedule (C) hereunto annexed, subject to such alterations as may be made in the said several fees by the Court of Bankruptcy, so as not to exceed the scales of fees herein provided.

16. Fees, &c. payable under any existing Acts not to be affected.—Provided always, and be it enacted, That nothing hereinbefore contained shall extend to or affect any fees or salary payable by virtue of any existing Act or Acts for business or proceedings in any court for the recovery of small debts, except such business or proceedings as shall be had under or by virtue of this Act; but it shall be lawful for the judge of any court, with the approval of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, to alter the fees receivable under the Act or Acts under which his court is now constituted, but not so as to exceed the scale of fees given by such Act or Acts respectively.

17. Poundage to be demanded from suitors upon sums claimed.—And be it enacted, That for raising a fund for providing a court-house and offices for any court of requests, or other court for the recovery of small debts, and for other purposes hereinafter mentioned, the clerk or clerks of any such court in which and while it shall be necessary to raise such fund shall demand and receive from the plaintiff in every suit brought in that court, before he shall issue any summons in that suit, the sum of sixpence, when the debt or damage claimed shall not exceed twenty shillings, and for every claim exceeding twenty shillings, one fortieth part thereof (neglecting any sum less than threepence in estimating such fortieth part), or other such sum, in either case not exceeding the rates hereinbefore mentioned, as the Secretary of State from time to time shall order, which sum shall be paid in all cases in the first instance by the plaintiff upon suit brought in such court, and shall be considered as costs in the cause; and the clerk or clerks of the court shall keep an account of all moneys so paid to him or them, and shall account for the same to the judge of such court for the time being, and the amount thereof shall accumulate, to form a general fund for such court, and shall be applied in providing a court-house and offices, or in defraying the rent and taxes, stationery, and other necessary expenses of holding and carrying on the business of such court, in such manner as the Court for the time being, with the approval of the Secretary of State, shall direct.

18. Summonses to witnesses.—And be it enacted, That either of the parties to the suit, or any other proceeding before any such commissioner or in any such court, may obtain summonses to witnesses, to be served by a messenger or bailiff, with or without a clause requiring the production of books and writings in their possession or control, and in any such summons any number of names may be inserted; and every person on whom any such summons shall be personally served within the jurisdiction of the court, and to whom at the same time payment or tender of his expenses shall have been made, on such scale of allowance as shall be from time to time settled by the Court of Bankruptcy or judge of any such court as aforesaid, as the case may be, with the approval of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and who shall refuse or neglect, without sufficient cause, to appear, or to produce any books or writings required by such summons to be produced, and also every person present in court who shall be required to give evidence, and who shall refuse to be sworn and give evidence, shall forfeit and pay such fine not exceeding five pounds as the commissioner or judge shall set on him, and payment of such fine shall be enforced in like manner as payment of any debt recovered by judgment of any court of competent jurisdiction; and the whole or any part of such fine, in the discretion of the judge, after deducting the costs, shall be applicable toward indemnifying the party injured by such refusal or neglect, and the remainder thereof shall be applicable to the expenses of the court in which the fine was imposed.

19. Lists of unclaimed suitors' money to be made out and put up in the court.—And be it enacted, That the clerk or clerks of every such court shall in the month of March in each year make out a correct list of all sums of money belonging to suitors in the court which shall have been paid into court, and which shall have remained unclaimed for the space of twelve calendar months before the first day of the month of January, specifying the names of the parties for whom or on whose account the same were so paid into court; and a copy of such list shall be put up and remain during court hours in some conspicuous part of the court-house, and at all times in the clerk's office.

20. All suitors' money paid into court and unclaimed for six years to go into the court fund.—And be it enacted, That all sums of money which shall have been paid into any such court to the use of any suitor or suitors thereof, and which shall have remained unclaimed for the period of six years before the passing of this Act, and which are now in the hands of any commissioner, trustee, judge, or officer of such court, or otherwise held in trust for such suitors, and all further sums of money which shall hereafter be paid into any such court to the use of any suitor or suitors thereof, shall, if unclaimed for the period of six years after the same shall have been so paid into court, vest in and belong to the judge or judge and commissioners of such court for the time being, in trust for the general purposes of such court, and shall form a general fund, for the payment of all debts due on behalf of the court, and the necessary expenses of holding or carrying on the business of such court.

21. Power to remove suits exceeding 10l. into superior courts.—And be it enacted, That any suit to be instituted in any such court, wherein the claim or demand shall exceed the sum of ten pounds, shall be removable by certiorari or otherwise into any of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, or into the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, by leave of a judge of any one of the said courts, and upon such terms as he shall order.

22. Power to execute warrants and levy executions out of jurisdiction.—And be it enacted, That in all cases where final judgment shall have been obtained in any such court, and a warrant or execution shall have issued against the goods and chattels of the defendant, or an order for his commitment shall have been made, under this Act, and the defendant, or his goods and chattels, shall be out of the jurisdiction of such court, it shall be lawful for the officer charged with such warrant, execution, or order of commitment, to apply to any justice of the peace acting for any county, division, or place in which the defendant, or his goods and chattels, shall then be, upon proof being made upon oath (which oath such justice shall be empowered to administer) that the person or goods and chattels of such defendant is or are believed to be within the county, division, or place where such justice of the peace shall act, such justice of the peace shall sign or indorse his name upon the said warrant, execution, or order of commitment, and thereupon the said officer charged therewith shall take and seize the person or the goods and chattels of the defendant, wheresoever the same shall be found within the county, division, or place for which such justice of the peace shall act, and all constables and other peace officers shall be aiding and assisting within their respective districts in the execution of the said warrants, executions, or orders.

23. Powers of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, applicable to this Act.—And be it declared and enacted, That all the enactments of the said Act of the last session of Parliament, and of the several Acts under which the said several courts are now held or constituted, shall within their several districts be deemed to apply to every proceeding under this Act, so far as the same are applicable, and not repugnant to the provisions of this Act.

24. Interpretation of terms in the Act.—And be it enacted, That in the construction of this Act the word "judge" shall be construed to include every person, being either a barrister at law or a special pleader, or an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, who shall have practised as an attorney for at least ten years in one of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster, who, according to the constitution of the court, presides in any such court as aforesaid, or acts as judge or assessor therein, whether by the title of judge, or barrister, or county clerk, assessor, or steward or deputy steward, or by any other style or title whatsoever; and the word "person" shall include a body corporate; and every word importing the singular number or masculine gender, shall include also several persons or things, and females as well as males, unless the context shall require another construction.

The late Session.—From the official records issued by order of both Houses of Parliament, it appears that no fewer than 666 different documents, either in the form of reports and blue books (some extending to upwards of 1,000 folio pages each), or returns, statistical or otherwise, have been directed to be printed by the House of Commons alone. By far the greater number of these have been already issued; but a long list of documents, including many of the utmost public importance and interest, still remain to be printed and distributed; and the like is the case with respect to the papers of the other branch of the Legislature. No fewer than twenty-two reports, returns, &c. were moved for or presented in the House of Commons only on the last day of the session, all of which will be some time before they are ready for publication. Indeed, these proofs of the labours of a session generally continue being afforded during a large portion of the recess: the more especially will it be so now, after a session of such unexampled labour and extensive investigation. The House of Lords sat during the late session 95 days, and the House of Commons 125. The official records of the proceedings of the former occupy 1,048 pages; those of the lower house of Parliament 2,078 pages, the last two of which contain 16 notices of motions which now stand in the order-book of that house "for the next session." There were altogether 170 divisions during the past session in the House of Commons.—Globe.

Summary.

Summary.

We bring up to-day a large arrear of judgments, delayed through absence of the reporters and the railway occupations of short-hand writers. Still there will remain some eight or ten to be published in our next, when we shall have completed an undertaking pronounced to be impracticable when first we broached it, and of the success of which we certainly felt considerable doubt. The Law Times will then have given to the Profession every written judgment pronounced by the judges of the Common Law Courts during the preceding twelve months; a record to be obtained nowhere beside, and the value of which will be at once recognised. The delay that has occurred in the publication of the judgments delivered at the close of the sittings after Term has been the only imperfection in the practical working of the scheme we announced last November. This was, however, unavoidable under peculiar circumstances, which we hope next year, by other arrangements, to prevent altogether, or at least materially to hasten their appearance, the Circuits necessarily occasioning some delay.

REVIEW OF THE CASES DECIDED IN ALL THE COURTS OF COMMON LAW,

During Easter Term and Vacation, and Trinity Term and Vacation, 1845.

Before proceeding with this review, we have to thank a correspondent for drawing attention to Udal v. Walter, in which the Court of Exchequer decided that a general notice of an act of bankruptcy was sufficient. When the argument ab inconvenienti was used, Alderson, B. observed, that it was a communication from the bankrupt himself. We discovered the case after our first article was in type, and should have mentioned it in a note at the conclusion of the Summary; but our readers are already made aware of it from another quarter. The impression to be derived from Conway v. Nall was decidedly the other way

We also wish to supply another omission which we cannot account for, in the concluding part of the comments upon the question of False Representation. In summing up the balance of authorities, we did not mention Lord Kenyon amongst the authorities against our view and the recent decisions. We were of course fully aware of it, as may be seen in the early part of the article, and indeed had inserted his name in our first manuscript, but the mistake was inadvertently made, we suppose, in a subsequent copy.

GAMBLING AND LOTTERIES.

The curious question whether the 18 Geo. 2, c. 34, s. 8 (see Law T. 47), which has apparently been overlooked in most of the cases that have arisen, does not render any bet, however small the amount, illegal, has again been mooted in Thorpe v. Coleman (5 Law T. 308). It became, however, unnecessary to decide it, as in that case the bet was for the sum of 10*l.* and came therefore within the express words of 9 Anne, c. 14. The confusion which ensues from the system of expediency Acts for a particular object, which infests our legislative senators, is shewn by the difficulties attending the construction of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 3, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 58, as hinted in the judgment. It is indeed a most enormous evil to the country, that no systematic mode has been adopted to secure something approaching to good sense, knowledge, and judgment, in those who draw and pass the countless Acts of Parliament which load our statute-book, encumber justice, and bring the law into disrepute.

Lotteries.—Allport v. Nutt (5 Law T. 308) decides that the "Derby sweeps" are altogether illegal, and that any treasurer to such schemes may quietly pocket the money without any of the subscribers having any remedy against him, or they may decide just as they please which horse is the "winning horse." The legal meaning of this term is decided to be not the horse that comes in first, but the horse that is declared the winner, and to the owner of which the stakes are awarded; e. g. that Running Rein was not the winning horse, but Orlando was. (Williams v. Wentworth, 5 Law T. 52.)

INTERPLEADER.

A writ of error does not lie upon a feigned issue under the Interpleader Act.—This important point has been decided, after full consideration, by the Exchequer Chamber, composed of the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer, in the case of King v. Simmons (5 Law T. 131). The course to adopt when a writ of error is sued out improperly is, to move the Court of Error that the writ be quashed. In the course of the argument it was stated, that in Whitmore v. Robertson an action was directed, to enable the parties to bring error; but it may not, perhaps, be hypercritical to observe, that some doubt may be suggested as to the power to bring error, even in an action directed under the Interpleader Statute. Sec. 1 gives the judge power to order the third party to make himself defendant in the same or some other action, or to proceed to trial, &c. Sec. 2 enacts that the judgment in any such action or issue as may be directed by the Court or Judge, and the decision of the Court or Judge in a summary manner, shall be final and conclusive against all parties, &c. So far, it seems that the same finality is to be result of an action or of an issue. And sec. 7 may be said to contemplate an action being ordered; for it provides that all rules in pursuance of this Act "may, together with the declaration in the cause (if any), be entered of record, and then the force and effect of a judgment, with certain qualifications, is given to such order," &c. We have thought it right to make this observation, although the whole of Mr. Pashley's argument in favour of a writ of error upon an issue, would apply with still more force to an action ordered to be brought. But it may be ultimately held that the sic volo sic jubeo of the legislature has overridden all the arguments and old authorities. However this may be, as it is quite certain that a writ of error does not lie upon the usual feigned issue, that course must never be adopted or submitted to, if there is already a decision of one of the Courts against the view of the client.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Notice to quit.—As a case constantly referred to upon the validity of notices to quit has been expressly overruled last Term, a note should be made to that effect, that the practitioner may not be misled by it. In Doe dem. Huntingtower v. Culleford (4 D. & R. 249) a notice dated Sept. 27, and served Sept. 28, requiring the tenant to quit "at Lady-day next, or at the end of your current year," was held to be a good six months' notice, although the current year, in fact, expired Sept. 29. But, in Mills v. Goff (5 Law T. 96), and Doe v. Morphett (5 Law T. 196), similar notices were held to be of no avail for the following year of the tenancy. The safer form would be that used in Doe v. Smith (5 A. & E. 350), and referred to by Patteson, J. in Doe v. Morphett,—"at such other time or times as the current year shall expire after the expiration of half a year from the delivery of this notice."

LEGACY DUTY.

An important decision has been given by the Court of Exchequer upon the construction of the 45 Geo. 3, c. 28, s. 4. (Attorney-General v. Marquis of Hertford, 5 Law T. 266.) After time taken to consider, it was held, that where the donee of a power had an option to charge certain real estate with annuities, the amounts of which were not specifically defined by the power, such annuities were within the provision of the 4th sec. 45 Geo. 3, c. 78, which exempts from the duties imposed by the Act "any specific sum or sums of money appointed by any will, &c. under any power."

PRACTICE.

As usual, there are a great many technical points of practice to be noted during the last two Terms, which we proceed to mention as before in an alphabetical arrangement.

Acknowledgment under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74.—A commission may be issued to take the acknowledgment of a married woman abroad, although her Christian name is not known, care being taken that her identity is duly proved by affidavits at the place where the acknowledgment is taken. (Re Atherton, 5 Law T. 51.)

Amendment of record.—Proof of a judgment in debt does not support an issue of nul tiel record, where the judgment is described to be in an action on promises; but when, after judgment by default, the error had been discovered, the Court allowed an amendment of the record in the second action to meet the real facts. (Field v. Williams, 5 Law T. 59.)

Amendment of judgment.—The Court has power to correct any judgment during the same term that it was delivered; and this power they will exercise when a judgment has been given through absence of counsel, which is subsequently accounted for to their satisfaction. They did this in Vyse v. Bird (5 Law T. 239). The curious result was, that, on the case coming on to be argued a second time, judgment was then given for the plaintiff, the defendant's counsel in his turn being absent. In Hall v. Lack, however (5 Law T. 238), an error of a previous term was amended. (See suprà, 371.)

Certiorari.—Applications to remove indictments by certiorari are not grantable as a matter of course, and it is therefore useful to observe the grounds upon which they are refused or granted in particular cases. Thus, it is insufficient that the defendant is a reputable tradesman, and believes the prosecution to have been instituted from malicious motives (Reg. v. Jeffs, 5 Law T. 79); but it is sufficient if the prosecution is an unusual one, and instituted at the immediate instance of the Crown, and to be prosecuted by the high crown officers. (Ibid.) If the usual suggestion is made, that difficult points of law are likely to arise, the specific points should be stated. (Reg. v. Hodges, 5 Law T. 78.) The rule is not necessarily absolute in the first instance in misdemeanors, as is said in R. v. Spencer (8 D. P. C. 127); R. v. Bird (5 Law T. 39).

Demurrer books.—When Monday is fixed for the argument of a demurrer, neither party is entitled to deliver demurrer books for the other, under Reg. G. Hil. T. 4 Wm. 4, reg. 7, until Thursday morning. (Hodgins v. Cook, 5 Law T. 176.)

Points of demurrer in paper books.—In Harris v. Reynolds (5 Law T. 53), Peake v. Schreech and (5 Law T. 173), the Court of Queen's Bench strongly condemned the practice of omitting to state in the paper books what the points of demurrer are, and struck out both cases from the paper, although in one counsel wished to waive the objection. They further intimated that in future they would not allow the cases to be replaced, but would give judgment against the party in fault. It will not suffice to refer to the special demurrer, but the points must be distinctly set out.

Distringas.—The Courts are not very favourable to the writ of distringas, and as in Russell v. Knowles (2 D. & L. 595, suprà, 4, 222) a service at a defendant's office was held insufficient, although it seemed that the fact had been communicated to the defendant; so in Watson v. Orme (5 Law T. 58), an omission to leave a copy of the writ was held fatal to a motion for a distringas, although the defendant had put his house into a state of siege, and the only means that could be suggested to effect the purpose was to attach the writ to a stone, and throw it over the wall. Coleridge, J. said, when this was done the distringas might be granted. In the Queen's Bench, as well as the other courts, the affidavit in support of a motion for a distringas to compel an appearance, must state where the residence of the defendant at which the service was made is situated. A subsequent statement by the defendant, that he would upset the distringas, on the ground that the writ was served on his brother, and not upon himself, does not amount to an admission of personal service. (Crofts v. Brown, 5 Law T. 125; 9 Jur. 169.)

Judgments.—The scope of a judgment was much extended by 1 & 2 Vict. s. 110, but there are still some sources of income which it does not touch, for it was held in Morris v. Manasty (5 Law T. 240), that a pension granted for services rendered to the East-India Company by resolution of the directors, is not liable to be charged with the payment of a judgment debt by a judge's order under that statute.

Judgment as in case of nonsuit.—It was not long since that the Courts found it necessary to lay down a general rule as to the period for moving for judgment as in case of nonsuit (see 2 D. N. S. 118; 10 M. & W. 76); and the diversity of the late decisions as to what is a fulfilment of a peremptory undertaking seems to require that a uniform rule should also be established on that point. According to the decisions of Ward v. Turner (5 D. P. C. 22), recognized in Petrie v. Cullen (2 D. & L. 601), the nature of the undertaking is that the plaintiff will try, at all events, and that although the cause is made a remanet, from press of business or other unavoidable cause, as the illness of the judge, yet the defendant is entitled to judgment. But in Lumley v. Dubourg (5 Law T. 211; 9 Jur. 510), the Court of Exchequer dissented from this, and held the meaning to be, that he will try according to the practice of the Court; and as the practice of the Court defines no particular day for entering the cause for trial, it is sufficient if it is entered, although it should be subsequently made a remanet. And Alderson, B. expressly said that the period of delay was to be measured in the same way as it have been prior to the peremptory undertaking, and that the cases had clearly decided that the plaintiff, having brought down to trial once, was sufficient. This, no doubt, is borne out by Gilbert v. Kirkland (2 D.P.C. 153); Brown v. Rudd (1 D.P.C. 371); but it must, we think, be taken with this qualification, that a subsequent default would give the defendant a right to move for judgment as in case of nonsuit. This was the decision in M'Intyre v. Severy (5 Law T. 76; 14 L. J. 228, Ex.), which calls for some notice, as the reports above cited appear to contradict each other. We have been favoured by one of the counsel engaged with an explanation of this contradiction, which will shew that the above qualification is correct. At first, Alderson, B. decided, as he is reported to have done in the LAW TIMES, that the plaintiff, having once taken the cause down to trial, the defendant was not entitled to move for judgment, although the plaintiff withdrew the record at the next sittings; but Mr. Barstow, feeling dissatisfied with this decision, his lordship kindly allowed the opinion of the Court to be taken, although his decision was in form that of the Court, as he was sitting in Banc to hear motions. The result was, that the decision finally given was as reported in the Law Journal, that the defendant was entitled to move for judgment, and the usual peremptory undertaking was given. (See Gadd v. Bennett, 2 B. & A. 709; and also Ham v. Grey, 6 B. & C. 125; Garven v. Birch, 11 M. & W. 544.)

Jurymen, affidavits of.—The general rule is, that statements of jurymen as to what passed prior to the delivery of the verdict cannot be received (Shaker v. Graham, 4 M. & W. 721), however great the misconduct which such statement might disclose; but the recent cases have established an exception to this rule in favour of affidavits to deny charges of misconduct brought against the jury, for it would be against all justice to deprive a man of the opportunity of defending himself. (Cornish v. Daykin, 5 Law T. 130; see suprà, vol. 4, 160; and 14 L. J. 16, Q.B.)

Judgment after notice of declaration.—If the defendant admits, after a service of notice of declaration, that he received it, he cannot set aside judgment signed eight days after the day of the service, unless he shews positively that he did not receive it in fact upon the day of the service. (Wassall v. Scarisbrook, 5 Law T. 96.)

New trial.—A new trial cannot be granted as to one of the defendants alone, but if moved for on behalf of one or more, it should be drawn up to set aside the verdict as to all, and should either shew the consent of those for whom a verdict has been given, or it should call upon them, as well as upon the plaintiff, to shew cause why such new trial should not be had. (Belcher v. Magnay, 5 Law T. 177; 9 Jur. 175; see Doe dem. Dudgeon v. Martin, 14 L. J. 128, Ex., and 4 Law T. 480.)

New trial on account of mistake by the associate.—Where the judge, at trial, delegated his authority to the associate, to take the finding of the jury, and directed him to do so upon several specific issues, and, in the absence of the judge, the associate asked the jury to give a general verdict for the plaintiff or defendant, and omitted to put to them the issues specifically, the Court granted a new trial. (Bentley v. Fleming, 5 Law T. 73.)

Production of agreement for the purpose of being stamped.—It sometimes happens that a party wishes to give evidence of an agreement to which he is not a party, and which, being unstamped, and in the hands of the opposite party, they are unable to do. Hall v. Bainbridge (5 Law T. 152; 9 Jur. 450) is an important decision, as shewing that, under such circumstances, the party may be compelled to produce the document at the Stamp Office, to be stamped at the expense of the other party, although no inspection will be allowed or copy granted. This extends the case of Veale v. Swind (1 D. P. C. 311), and should be noted in Chitty's Archbold, p. 1024.

Quo warranto.—Where proceedings on a mandamus were pending in consequence of the alleged improper erasure of voters from the burgess-list, and the twelve months allowed by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 89, s. 1, would otherwise have expired, the Court allowed a quo warranto information to be filed against the persons whose election was said to have been gained by the alleged improper erasure of the voters. (Reg. v. Clarke, 5 Law T. 215.)

Right to begin.—The numerous and contradictory decisions that are to be found in the Nisi Prius reports upon this important question will now cease to have much interest, as we may consider the principle to be thoroughly well established by the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in Mercer v. Wall (5 Law T. 304; 9 Jur. 576), after time taken to consider, for the express purpose of making the practice uniform. The rule, then, clearly is, that wherever the plaintiff has any thing to prove, either to obtain a verdict, or to fix the amount of damages, he is entitled to begin, although the affirmative of the issues may in form be upon the defendant. The instance there was, a plea of justification to an action for wrongful dismissal, and it was held at Nisi Prius, and also by the full Court, that the plaintiff was to begin. E. W.

The following is from a return to the House of Commons of the decisions of the Court of Common Pleas, on the appeals from the revising barristers in the last year:—

7	Same . .	Peterborough .	J. D. Simpson, Appellant; Nelson Wilkinson, Respondent	For Respondent.

General statement as to counties.

No. 1.—The question in this case arose upon the sufficiency of the description of the place of abode of the objector, in a notice of objection given under 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 7; and the Court held it to be sufficient, where it was the same as the description of his name in the register; and that at all events it is sufficient if he has not changed his abode since the publication of such register.

No. 2.—In this case the question arose upon the proper construction of the 20th section of the statute 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, the clause which confers the right of voting, for the first time, "on any person who shall occupy as tenant any lands or tenements for which he shall be bonâ fide liable to a yearly rent of not less than 50*l.*;" and the Court held, that, in order to satisfy those words, the tenant must occupy land to that amount of rent, under a single taking, and that premises held under different landlords cannot be joined together to make up the qualification.

No. 3.—In this case the question was upon the sufficiency of the description of the qualification of a voter for a county, in the list of county voters published by the overseers, pursuant to the 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 5; and the Court held, that if such qualification is a house, situate in a street, lane, or other like place, it is sufficient to give the name of the street or lane, and the number of the house (if any), and that it is unnecessary to add the name of the property, or the name of the occupying tenant.

No. 4.—This was a case in which land had been bought, and a fulling-mill erected thereon, and fitted up with the requisite machinery, out of moneys contributed by a large number of persons, of whom thirty-seven on the present occasion claimed the right of voting for the county, in respect of their freehold interest in the land and mill. The land had been conveyed to trustees and their heirs, and was vested in them for the purpose of the conduct and management of the trade, in which all the shareholders were jointly concerned as copartners; and the trusts of the deed were such, that in certain events the trustees might have the power of dealing with this real property as if it had been personal property only. But nevertheless, as there was no trust which was absolutely incompatible with the existence of the present equitable freehold interest in the premises in the several shareholders, the Court of Common Pleas held, that such equitable interest might be considered as vested in them, and the amount in value of each claimant's interest in the real property being sufficient, that the several claimants had the right to vote.

No. 5.—This was a consolidated case of four persons, whose right to vote was objected to under sec. 1 of 22 Geo. 3, c. 41, on the ground "that they were persons employed in collecting, managing, or receiving the duties on windows." Joseph Marshall and William Workman, at that time filling the office of collectors of the taxes in different parishes, John Nicholson and William Gill, that of assessors of those taxes in two different parishes. But the Court was of opinion, that notwithstanding the Act of 43 Geo. 3, c. 99, the collector of window duties is still to be considered as appointed by the Land Tax Commissioners, and not by the Commissioners of Assessed Taxes, and that the case therefore fell under sec. 2 of 22 Geo. 3, and the claimants were qualified thereby.

No. 6.—In this case, the governors of Jesus Hospital, Rothwell, incorporated by charter of Queen Elizabeth, were empowered "to appoint and remove 24 poor men, as often as and when it should seem fit;" and upon the objection being taken that the claimant took no freehold interest under these letters-patent, the Court of Appeal held the objection to be valid, and that there could be no right of voting in the persons so appointed.

This objection applied to twenty-four other persons appointed in the same manner, whose cases were consolidated with this.

No. 7.—This was a case in which an hospital was founded by Lord Burleigh, before the statute 39 Eliz. c. 5; at a time, therefore, when it was necessary that there must be either a royal license, or letters patent, in order to make the incorporation valid in law; and the only question was, whether the revising barrister was justified in presuming, as he had done, from the evidence before him, that such hospital was founded either by license or letters-patent. And the Court thought he was justified, and that, consequently, the bedsmen of the hospital took equitable estates for life, being appointed during good behaviour, and had the right to vote.

The claims of twelve other persons were consolidated with this.

General statement as to Cities and Boroughs.

No. 1.—In the case No. 1, it was held by the Court that a lodger in a house does not occupy premises either "as owner or tenant," within the meaning of the 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, s. 27; and that a man is a lodger only where the owner of the house resides therein and has the control over the outer door.

No. 2.—In No. 2 it was decided, that a man who had the separate and exclusive occupation of apartments in a house, of which apartments he had the key, and had also a separate key for his own use of the outer door, the landlord of the house not residing therein, nor occupying any part of the house, was an occupier as tenant of a house within the meaning of the 2 Wm. 4, c. 45.

No. 3.—In this case the question also was one of occupation as tenant. One Hill, the claimant, exclusively occupied the whole of the second floor of the house; but the landlord also resided in the house, the outer door of which was kept closed, both the landlord and Hill having a key of such door. The Court held, under these circumstances, he was a lodger only, and did not occupy as tenant of the house within the meaning of the 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, s. 27.

No. 4.—In the case No. 4, the Court held, that the residence of a burgess or freeman for six calendar months in the borough, or within seven statute miles thereof (as required by the 32nd section of the statute), must either be an actual occupation of a place of residence within the borough for some part of the time by the party himself, or an occupation by his family or servants, there being an animus revertendi on his part; and therefore, in the particular case where the claimant, a freeman of the borough of Tewkesbury, resided with his wife and family, and carried on his business of wine merchant at Gloucester, more than seven miles distant, but paid 9d. a week for the use of a furnished bed-room and dark closet in a friend's house at Tewkesbury, of which closet he kept the key, and put some wine samples in it, sleeping in the bed-room between January and July twelve times only; the Court held this not to be such a residence as was intended by the statute.

No. 5.—The case No. 5 related to the proof of the notice of objections against the vote of one of the persons whose name was on the list. The objector himself brought to the revising barrister a paper writing, purporting to be a duplicate of the notice of objections, regularly stamped with the post-office stamp; but it appeared that the objector himself had not taken the duplicate notices to the post-office and procured the stamp to be put thereon, but that he had employed his clerk for that purpose, who had brought the stamped duplicate back to him; and the objection taken was, that the service of the notice was not duly proved, inasmuch as the clerk who had actually posted the notices was not called before the revising barrister. But the Court held the proof of service sufficient; on the principle that the posting of the duplicate by the objector's clerk was virtually and substantially a posting by the objector himself; and that the whole faith and credit attached to the post-office stamp, and not to the person by whose hand it was obtained.

The cases of eleven other parties were consolidated with this case.

No. 6.—No. 6 was a case also arising out of an objection made to the validity of the notice of objection given under the 100th section of the statute 6 Vict. c. 18. The objection was, that the statute required the notice and the duplicate to be signed by the objector himself; and such we held to be the necessary construction of the section above referred to, and consequently decided the notice to be bad.

Twelve other cases were consolidated with this case.

No. 7.—In this case also, which related to the claim of one Quigley to vote in the election of members for the city of London, the question arose upon the notice of objection to his vote, which had been served upon the overseers of the parish in which he resided, and also upon himself; and it was contended, that the notice of objection was not sufficient, because, as there were several lists made out for the city of London, in respect of the several qualifications of a freeman of the city, or in respect of property, the notice of objection ought to specify in respect of which list the objection arose. But we thought the objection sufficient within the 6 Vict. c. 18, taking into consideration the forms of notices given in the schedule thereto.

The cases of 372 other parties were consolidated with this case.

No. 8.—This case also turned on the sufficiency of the notice of objection. The notice was, that the objection related to the right of the party "to vote as householder in the election." In the borough of Taunton the overseers make out two lists, one of parties entitled to vote under the 27th section of the statute 2 Wm. 4. c. 45, the other of potwallers. The objection taken was, that the form of notice given in the schedule to the statute 6 Vict. c. 18, did not use the words "as householders." But the Court, nevertheless, thought the notice of objection sufficient, it not appearing that the claimant was misled by the introduction of those words.

No. 9.—The question in this case was, whether the premises in respect of which the right of voting for the borough of St. Edmund's was claimed, were "a house or building," within the meaning of the 27th section of the 2 Wm. 4, c. 45. It was substantially built of brick and stone, with a tiled roof; part of the ground-floor being a cow-house and stable, the other part a room with a fire-place, and the upper story having a fire-place and window in which a person slept who was employed by the lessee of the adjoining land to look after the cattle upon the land; and it was held, that it was "a house" within the meaning of the 27th section of the statute.

No. 10.—The question was, whether a building constructed and calculated for a dwelling-house, and which had been used as a dwelling-house, but which was then occupied by the tenant partly for warehousing goods, partly for a sale room, and some of the up-stairs apartments as workshops, was properly described in the shareholders' list of voters, as "a house," within the 27th section of the statute 2 Wm. 4; and the Court held the description proper.

No. 11.—The point raised in this case was, whether the two joint occupiers of a building and land had been duly rated to the parish for the time of their joint occupation; and the Court held, that as the name of the claimant had been omitted in the rate, he had not been duly rated within the 27th section of the 4 Wm. 4, c. 45; and that as his name was altogether omitted, the case was not within the 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 75, which only cured a misnomer, or an inaccurate or insufficient description, not a total omission. The Court therefore held the appellant not to be entitled to vote.

No. 12.—The question in this case was, whether it was necessary where the claimant occupied a house and shop, which formed his qualification to vote, jointly with another person, that upon the 10*l.* householders' list it should appear that he claimed in respect of a joint occupation; and the Court of Appeal held, that upon the proper construction of the 6 Vict. c. 18, no such description was necessary, and consequently that the objection in this case against the right to vote must be overruled.

This case determined a similar objection in the case of 121 other claimants, whose cases were consolidated with the present.

No. 13.—This case determined the point, that a claimant cannot join together two separate buildings, in order to make up the requisite value, so as to confer a borough franchise under the 27th section of 2 Wm. 4, c. 45.

No. 14.—This was a case which turned upon the construction of the statute 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 25, declaring all conveyances, in order to multiply voices, or to split and divide the interest in any houses or lands among several persons, to enable them to vote at elections of members should be void. In the case before the Court of Appeal, it appeared that the owner of a house had contracted to sell it for a valuable consideration to another. The person who had contracted to buy the house, sold it boná fide to six other persons, and caused the conveyance to be made from the original owner to the six other vendees. The object of the intermediate contractor was to increase the number of voters for the city of Lichfield; but the object of the six purchasers was a boná fide investment of their monies. The court held this conveyance was not void under the statute, and that the vendees were entitled to vote.

No. 15.—This was a case as to the right of a person claiming to have the right, as a six months' inhabitant householder within the borough of Northampton, to vote for that borough. It appeared that the claimant possessed such qualification at the time of the passing of the statute 2 Wm. 4, c. 45; but that in October 1832, he ceased to reside at Northampton, and went to reside at Bedford, where he remained for fourteen weeks. The Court held the 23rd section of that statute, which allowed the voter to retain his vote so long as he should be qualified according to the customs of the borough, meant that the qualification should be a continuous one; and that as the claimant had once ceased to reside, and thereby lost the right to vote, he could not acquire a new qualification by returning to Northampton, and becoming again an inhabitant householder.

The cases of five other persons under the same circumstances, were consolidated with this.

No. 16.—This was the case of another person claiming to vote for the borough of Northampton under the same qualification, as a six months' inhabitant householder, which right the claimant possessed at the time of the passing the statute 2 Wm. 4, c. 45. The claimant had ceased to reside at Northampton for nine months from Christmas, 1842, and had resided elsewhere, so that on the 31st July, 1843, he had no right to have his name on the list. The Court held, upon the same principle as in the last case, that the qualification must be continuous, and that having been once lost, it could not be gained again de novo, by a subsequent return to, and residence in Northampton.

The cases of thirteen other claimants were governed by this decision.

No. 17.—The decision in this case was, that a letter-carrier in the post-office, who had resigned his situation within twelve months before the 31st July, was entitled to have his name on the list of voters, under the statute 22 Geo. 3. c. 41.

No. 18.—The decision here was, that a person employed in the capacity of clerk to a receiving inspector of taxes was entitled to have his name on the list of voters, upon the proper construction of the same statute of 22 Geo. 3.

No. 19.—In this case the question was whether the assessors and collectors of the window-tax were entitled to vote; and the Court held that they had such right, for that they were in fact appointed by land-tax commissioners, and therefore exempted by the 2nd section of the 22 Geo. 3 from the qualification created by section 1.

No. 20.—This was a case in which one Lockey claimed to be entitled to vote at the election of members for the city of London. The objection to his name being retained was, that he was not rated to the poor-rate, and that he had not made any proper claim to be rated under 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, s. 30; and the Court held, that although he had claimed to be put upon the rate in July 1837, yet that such claim was only good for the rate then in existence; and that, as there were subsequent rates in respect of which he made no claim, he was not to be deemed to be rated during the continuance of those rates, and had no right to vote.

The principle so laid down governed the cases of twelve other persons.

No. 21.—In this case the Court decided a point of practice only; namely, that they had no authority, under 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 65, to send back a case to the revising barrister, to procure the insertion of a fact which the appellant thought to be material; but only in those cases where it appeared to the Court the statement was not sufficient to enable them to give judgment in law.
